Thus did I keep my person fresh and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom but sumptuous, showed like a feast,
And won by rareness such solemnity.

The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled and soon burn'd: carded his state;
Mingled his royalty with carping fools;

Had his great name profaned with their scorn;
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative;

Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoff'd himself to popularity;

That, being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey, and began
To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.

So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, nor regarded,—seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,

Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes:

But rather drowz'd, and hung their eyelids
down,

Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries, Being with his presence, glutted, gorg'd, and full.

And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou;
For thou hast lost thou princely privilege
With vile participation: not an eye
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,—
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. I shall hereafter, my thrice-gracious
lord,

Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world,
As thou art to this hour, was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspurg;
And even as I was then is Percy now.

Now, by my sceptre, and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state
Than thou, the shadow of succession:

For, of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm;
Turns heads against the lion's armed jaws;
And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on
To bloody battles and to brusing arms.

What never-dying honour hath he got Against renowned Douglas! whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms,
Holds from all soldiers chief majority

And military title capital [Christ:
Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Thrice hath this Hotspur Mars in swathing-clothes,

This infant warrior, in his enterprises
Discomfited great Douglas; ta'en him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defiance up,

And shake the peace and safety of our throne:
 And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,

The Archbishop's grace of York, Douglas,
 Mortimer,

Capitulate against us, and are up.

But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?

Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,

Which art my near'st and dearest enemy?

Thou that art like enough,—through vassal fear,

Base inclination, and the start of spleen,—

To fight against me under Percy's pay,

To dog his heels, and court'sy at his frowns,

To show how much thou art degenerate.

P. Hen. Do not think so, you shall not find it so:

And God forgive them that have so much sway'd

Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!

I will redeem all this on Percy's head,

And, in the closing of some glorious day,

Be bold to tell you that I am your son;

When I will wear a garment all of blood,

And stain my favours in a bloody mask, [it

Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with

And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights,

That this same child of honour and renown,

This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,

And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet.

For every honour sitting on his helm,

Would they were multitudes, and on my head

My shames redoubled! for the time will come

That I shall make this northern youth exchange

His glorious deeds for my indignities.

Percy is but my factor, good my lord,

To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;

And I will call him to so strict account,

That he shall render every glory up,

Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,

Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.

This, in the name of God, I promise here:

The which if he be pleas'd I shall perform,

I do beseech your majesty, may save

The long-grown wounds of my intemperance:

If not, the end of life cancels all bands;

And I will die a hundred thousand deaths

Ere I break the smallest parcel of this vow.

K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:— [herein.]

Thou shalt have charge and sovereign trust

Enter SIR WALTER BLUNT.

How now, good Blunt! thy looks are full of speed. [speak of.]

Blunt. So hath the business that I come to

Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word

That Douglas and the English rebels met

The eleventh of this month at Shrewsbury:

A mighty and fearful head they are,

If promises be kept on every hand,

As ever offer'd foul play in a state.

K. Hen. The Earl of Westmoreland set forth
 to-day;

With him my son, Lord John of Lancaster;

For this advertisement is five days old:—

On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set forward;

On Thursday we ourselves will march:

Our meeting is Bridgenorth: and, Harry, you Shall march through Glostershire; by which account,

Our business valued, some twelve days hence

Our general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet.

Our hands are full of business: let's away;

Advantage feeds him fat while men delay.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—EASTCHEAP. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am withered like an old apple-john. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a peppercorn, a brewer's horse: the inside of a church!
 Company, villanous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it: come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; dined not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed—three or four times: lived well, and in good compass: and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass,—out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lantern in the poop,—but 'tis in the nose of thee;
 thou art the Knight of the Burning Lamp.

Bard. Why, Sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a Death's head or a memento mori: I never see thy face but I think upon hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple;
 for there he is in his robes, burning, burning.
 If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be, By this fire, that's God's angel, but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou rankest up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two-and-thirty years; God reward me for it! [belly!]

Bard. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your heart-burn'd.

Enter Hostess.

How now, Dame Partlet the hen! have you inquired yet who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, Sir John, what do you think, Sir John? do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess: Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman, go.

Host. Who, I? no; I defy thee: God's light, I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to, I know you well enough.

Host. No, Sir John; you do not know me, Sir John. I know you, Sir John: you owe me money, Sir John; and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four-and-twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Host. He? alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

Fal. How, poor? look upon his face; what call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks: I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu, I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was copper!

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup: 'sblood, an he were here I would cudgel him like a dog if he would say so.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and POINS, marching.
FALSTAFF meets the PRINCE, playing on his truncheon like a fife.

Fal. How now, lad! is the wind in that door, i' faith? must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate-fashion.

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, Mistress Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well; he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Pr'ythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, Jack?

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras, and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house; they pick pockets.

P. Hen. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

P. Hen. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said I heard your grace say so: and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is, and said he would cudgel you.

P. Hen. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox; and for womanhood, Maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou shouldst know it; I am an honest man's wife; and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave, thou?

Fal. What beast! why, an otter.

P. Hen. An otter, Sir John! why an otter?

Fal. Why, she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so: thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave; thou!

P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day you ought him a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he call'd you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea,—if he said my ring was copper.

P. Hen. I say 'tis copper: darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare: but as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Hen. And why not as the lion?

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion: dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God my girldie break.

P. Hen. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine,—it is all filled up with guts and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were anything in thy pocket but tavern- reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded,—if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain: and yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket-up wrong: art thou not ashamed?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest in the state of innocence Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of villainy? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty. You confess, then, you picked my pocket?

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee: go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest I am pacified.—Still?—Nay, prythee, be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad,—how is that answered?

P. Hen. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee:—the money is paid back again.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying back; 'tis a double labour.

P. Hen. I am good friends with my father, and may do anything.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou doest, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord. [of foot.]

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge

Fal. I would it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two-and-twenty or thereabouts! I am hemiously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels,—they offend none but the virtuous: I laud them, I praise them.

P. Hen. Bardolph,

Bard. My lord.

P. Hen. Go bear this letter to Lord John of To my brother John; this to my Lord of Westmoreland. [Exit BARDOLPH.]

Go, Poins, to horse, to horse; for thou and I Have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner-time.—

[Exit POINS.]
Jack, meet me to-morrow in the Temple-hall At two o'clock in the afternoon: [receive]

There shalt thou know thy charge, and there Money and order for their furniture.

The land is burning; Percy stands on high; And either they or we must lower lie. [Exit.]

Fal. Rare words! brave world!—Hostess, my breakfast; come:—

O, I could wish this tavern were my drum! [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, and DOUGLAS.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: if speaking truth

In this fine age were not thought flattery, Such attribution should the Douglas have, As not a soldier of this season's stamp Should go so general current through the world. By heaven, I cannot flatter; I defy The tongues of soothers; but a braver place In my heart's love hath no man than yourself: Nay, task me to my word; approve me, lord.

Doug. Thou art the king of honour:

No man so potent breathes upon the ground But I will beard him.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well.—

Enter a Messenger with letters.

What letters hast thou there?—I can but thank you.

Mess. These letters come from your father,—

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

Mess. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.

Hot. Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick

In such a justling time? Who leads his power? Under whose government come they along?

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord. [bed?]

Wor. I prythee, tell me, doth he keep his Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth;

And at the time of my departure thence

He was much fear'd by his physicians.

Wor. I would the state of time had first been whole

Ere he by sickness had been visited:

His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect

The very life-blood of our enterprise;

'Tis catching hither, even to our camp.—

He writes me here that inward sickness,—

And that his friends by deputation could not

So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet

To lay so dangerous and dear a trust

On any soul remov'd, but on his own.

Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,

That with our small conjunction we should on,

To see how fortune is dispos'd to us;

For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,

Because the king is certainly possess'd

Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your father's sickness is a main to us.

Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp'd off:—

And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want

Seems more than we shall find it:—were it good

To set the exact wealth of all our states

All at one cast? to set so rich a main

On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?

It were not good; for therein should we read

The very bottom and the soul of hope,

The very list, the very utmost bound

Of all our fortunes.

Doug. Faith, and so we should;

Where now remains a sweet reversion:

We may boldly spend upon the hope of what

Is to come in:

A comfort of retirement lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,

If that the devil and mischance look big

Upon the maidenhead of our affairs. [here.]

Wor. But yet I would your father had been

The quality and hair of our attempt

Brooks no division: it will be thought

By some, that know not why he is away,

That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike

Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence:

And think how such an apprehension

May turn the tide of fearful faction,

And breed a kind of question in our cause;

For well you know we of the offering side

Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement,

And stop all sight-holes, every loop from whence

The eye of reason may pry in upon us:

This absence of your father's draws a curtain

That shows the ignorant a kind of fear

Before not dreamt of.

Hot. You strain too far.

I, rather, of his absence make this use:—

It lends a lustre and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
Than if the earl were here: for men must think,
If we, without his help, can make a head
To push against the kingdom, with his help
We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.—
Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke in Scotland as this term of fear.

Enter SIR RICHARD VERNON.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.

Ver. Pray God my news be worth a welcome,
The Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards; with him Prince
John.

Hot. No harm:—what more?

Ver. And further, I have learn'd
The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his
The nimble-footed madcap Prince of Wales
And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside,
And bid it pass?

Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms;
All plum'd like estridges, that wing the wind;
Bated like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats, like images;
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry,—with his beaver on,
His cusses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,—
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

Hot. No more, no more; worse than the sun in March,
This praise doth nourish agues. Let them
come.

They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-ey'd maid of smoky war,
All hot and bleeding, will we offer them:
The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit,
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire
To hear this rich reprisal is so nigh.
And yet not ours.—Come, let me taste my horse,

Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt,
Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales:
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet, and ne'er part till one drop down a corse.—

O that Glendower were come!

Ver. There is more news:
I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.

Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty
Hot. What may the king's whole battle reach unto?

Ver. To thirty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be:
My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us take a muster speedily:
Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.
Doug. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
Of death or death's hand for this one half-year.
Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Public Road near Coventry.

Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack; our soldiers shall march through; we'll to Sutton-Cop-hill to-night.

Bard. Will you give me money, captain?

Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. Thus bottle makes an angel.

Fal. An if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all; I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.

Bard. I will, captain: farewell.

Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet. I have misused the king's press damnable. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons; inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the bans; such a commodity of warm slaves as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver worse than a struck fowl or a hurt wild-duck. I pressed me none but such toasts-and-butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out our services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores; and such as, indeed, were never soldiers, but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters, and ostlers trade-fallen; the cankers of a calm world and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old-faced ancient; and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draff and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me I had unloaded all the gibbets, and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat:—nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on; for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company; and the half-shirt is two napkins tacked together and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Alban's, or the red-nose inkeeper of Daventry. But that's all one;
they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and WESTMORELAND.

P. Hen. How now, blown Jack! how now, quilt!

Fal. What, Hal! how now, mad wag! what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—My good Lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy: I thought your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already. The king, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away all night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think, to steal cream, indeed; for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack, whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Hen. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, Sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare,—too beggarly.

Fal. Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their bareness, I am sure they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs bare. But, sirrah, make haste: Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamped?

West. He is, Sir John: I fear we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well, [a feast
To the latter end of a fray and the beginning of Fits a dull fighter and a keen guest. [Exeunt]

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter HOTSPUR, WORCESTER, DOUGLAS, and VERNON.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.

Doug. You give him, then, advantage.

Ver. Not a whit.

Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Ver. So do we.

Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

Wor. Good cousin, be advis'd; stir not to-night.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Doug. You do not counsel well: You speak it out of fear and cold heart.

Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life,—

And I dare well maintain it with my life,—
If well-respected honour bid me on,
I hold as little counsel with weak fear
As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives:—
Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle
Which of us fears.

Doug. Yea, or to-night.

Ver. Content.

Hot. To-night, say I. [much,

Ver. Come, come, it may not be. I wonder
Being men of such great leading as you are,
That you foresee not what impediments
Drag back our expedition: certain horse
Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up:
Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day;

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,
That not a horse is half the half of himself.

Hot. So are the horses of the enemy
In general, journey-bated and brought low:
The better part of ours is full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours.
For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The trumpet sounds a parley.]

Enter SIR WALTER BLUNT.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king,

If you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.

Hot. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; and would to God

You were of our determination!

Some of us love you well; and even those some Envy your great deservings and good name,
Because you are not of our quality,
But stand against us like an enemy. [stand so,

Blunt. And God defend but still I should
So long as out of limit and true rule
You stand against anointed majesty!

But, to my charge.—The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs; and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility; teaching his duteous land
Audacious cruelty. If that the king

Have any way your good deserts forgot,—

Which he confesseth to be manifold,—

He bids you name your griefs; and with all speed
You shall have your desires with interest,
And pardon absolute for yourself, and these Herein misled by your suggestion. [king

Hot. The king is kind; and well we know the Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.
My father and my uncle and myself

Did give him that same royalty he wears;

And when he was not six-and-twenty strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,

A poor unmind'd outlaw sneaking home,
My father gave him welcome to the shore;

And when he heard him swear, and vow to God,
He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,

To sue his livery and beg his peace,
With tears of innocence and terms of zeal,—

My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,
Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too.

Now, when the lords and barons of the realm
Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,

The more and less came in with cap and knee;
Met him in boroughs, cities, villages;

Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,
Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,

Gave him their heirs as pages, follow'd him
Even at the heels in golden multitudes.

He presently,—as greatness knows itself,—
Steps me a little higher than his vow

Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspur;

And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees,

That lie too heavy on the commonwealth;
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep

Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win

The hearts of all that he did angle for:

Proceeded further; cut me off the heads
Of all the favourites that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.

Hot. Then to the point.

In short time after, he depos'd the king,
Soon after that, depriv'd him of his life;
And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state
To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman
March,—

Who is, if every owner were well plac'd,
Indeed his king,—to be incag'd in Wales
There without ransom to lie forfeited;
Disgrac'd me in my happy victories;
Sought to entrap me by intelligence;
Rated my uncle from the council-board;
In rage dismiss'd my father from the court,
Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong;

And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out
This head of safety; and withal to pry
Into his title, the which we find Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?

Hot. Not so, Sir Walter: we'll withdraw awhile.

Go to the king; and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again,
And in the morning early shall my uncle
Bring him our purposes: and so, farewell.

Blunt. I would you would accept of grace and love.

Hot. And may be so we shall.

Blunt. Pray God you do!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—YORK. A Room in the ARCH-
BISHOP'S House.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, and SIR MICHAEL.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michael; bear this sealed brief

With winged haste to the lord marshal;
This to my cousin Scroop; and all the rest
To whom they are directed. If you knew How much they do import, you would make haste.

Sir M. My good lord,
I guess their tenor.

Arch. Like enough you do.

To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch; for, sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The king, with mighty and quick-raised power,
Meets with Lord Harry: and I fear, Sir Michael,
What with the sickness of Northumberland,—
Whose power was in the first proportion,—
And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,—

Who with them was a rated sinew too,
And comes not in, o'erruled by prophecies,—
I fear the power of Percy is too weak
To wage an instant trial with the king.

Sir M. Why, my good lord, you need not fear;
there is Douglas,

And Lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir M. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord
Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester; and a head
Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

Arch. And so there is; but yet the king hath drawn

The special head of all the land together:—
The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt;
And many more cornivals and dear men
Of estimation and command in arms. [Oppos'd.]

Sir M. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well

Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear;
And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speed:

For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,—

For he hath heard of our confederacy,—

And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him:

Therefore make haste. I must go write again

To other friends; and so, farewell, Sir Michael.
[Exeunt severally.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The KING'S Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter KING HENRY, PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and SIR JOHN FALSTAFF.

K. Hen. How bloodily the sun begins to peer Above yon bosky hill! the day looks pale
At his distemperature.

P. Hen. The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest and a blustering day.

K. Hen. Then with the losers let it sympathize,

For nothing can seem foul to those that win.
[Trumpets sound.]

Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

How now, my lord of Worcester! 'tis not well
That you and I should meet upon such terms
As now we meet. You have deceiv'd our trust;
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel;
This is not well, my lord, this is not well.
What say you to it? will you again unknit
This churlish knot of all-abhorred war?
And move in that obedient orb again
Where you did give a fair and natural light;
And be no more an exhal'd meteor,
A prodigy of fear, and a portent
Of broached mischief to the unborn times?

Wor. Hear me, my liege:
For mine own part, I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours; for, I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike.

K. Hen. You have not sought it! how comes it, then? [it]

Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found
P. Hen. Peace, chewet, peace! [looks]

Wor. It pleas'd your majesty to turn you
Of favour from myself and all our house;
And yet I must remember you, my lord,
We were the first and dearest of your friends.
For you my staff of office did I break

In Richard's time; and posted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place and in account.
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
It was myself, my brother, and his son,
That brought you home, and boldly did outdare
The dangers of the time: you swore to us,—
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,—
That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state;
Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n right,
The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster:
To this we swore our aid. But in short space
It rain'd down fortune showering on your head,
And such a flood of greatness fell on you,—
What with our help, what with the absent king,
What with the injuries of a wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious winds that held the king
So long in his unlucky Irish wars
That all in England did repute him dead,—
And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
To gripe the general sway into your hand;
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
And, being fed by us, you us'd us so
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo's bird,
Useth the sparrow,—did oppress our nest,
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk [sight
That even our love durst not come near your
For fear of swallowing; but, with nimble wing
We were enforc'd, for safety-sake, to fly
Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
Whereby we stand opposed by such means
As you yourself have forg'd against yourself;
By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.

K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches;
To face the garment of rebellion
• With some fine colour that may please the eye
Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation:
And never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colours to paint his cause;
Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
Of pellmell havoc and confusion. [a soul

P. Hen. In both our armies there is many Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world

In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,
This present enterprise set off his head,
I do not think a braver gentleman,
More active-valiant or more valiant-young,
More daring or more bold, is now alive
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry;
And so I hear he doth account me too:
Yet this before my father's majesty,—
I am content that he shall take the odds,
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight.

K. Hen. And, Prince of Wales, so dare we venture thee,

Albeit considerations infinite
Do make against it.—No, good Worcester, no,
We love our people well; even those we love
That are misled upon your cousin's part;
And, will they take the offer of our grace,
Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his:
So tell your cousin, and bring me word
What he will do: but if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait upon us,
And they shall do their office. Do, be gone;
We will not now be troubled with reply:
We offer fair; take it advisedly.

[Exeunt WOR. and VER.]

P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life:
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms.

K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge;

For, on their answer, will we set on them:
And God befriend us, as our cause is just!

[Exeunt KING, BLUNT, and P. JOHN.]

Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle, and bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.

P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell!

Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all
well.

P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death. [Exit.]

Fal. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loth to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well,
'tis no matter; honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour prick me off when I come on?
how then? Can honour set-to a leg? no: or an arm? no: or take away the grief of a wound?
no. Honour hath no skill in surgery, then?
no. What is honour? a word. What is in that word, honour? What is that honour? air. A trim reckoning!—Who hath it? he that died o' Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible, then? yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? no.
Why? detraction will not suffer it:—therefore I'll none of it: honour is a mere scutcheon:
and so ends my catechism. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The Rebel Camp.

Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, Sir
Richard,

The liberal kind offer of the king.

Ver. 'Twere best he did.

Wor. Then are we all undone.

It is not possible, it cannot be,
The king should keep his word in loving us;
He will suspect us still, and find a time
To punish this offence in other faults:
Suspicion shall be all stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like the fox,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks;
And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
The better cherish'd still the nearer death.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot,—
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,

And an adopted name of privilege,—
A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen:
All his offences live upon my head
And on his father's: we did train him on;
And, his corruption being ta'en from us,
We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know,
In any case the offer of the king.

Ver. Deliver what you will, I'll say 'tis so.
Here comes your cousin.

Enter HOTSPUR and DOUGLAS; Officers and Soldiers behind.

Hof. My uncle is return'd:—deliver up
My Lord of Westmoreland.—Uncle, what news?

Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.

Doug. Defy him by the Lord of Westmoreland.

Hof. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.

Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly.
[Exit.]

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king.
Hof. Did you beg any? God forbid!

Wor. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,—
By now forswearing that he is forsworn.
He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge
With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter DOUGLAS.

Doug. Arm, gentlemen; to arms! for I have thrown

A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engag'd, did bear
it;

Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The Prince of Wales stepp'd forth before the king,

And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Hof. O, would the quarrel lay upon our heads; [day]

And that no man might draw short breath to—
But I and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me,
How show'd his tasking? seem'd it in contempt?

Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms.

He gave you all the duties of a man;
Trimm'd up your praises with a princely tongue;
Spoke your deservings like a chronicler;
Making you ever better than his praise,
By still dispraising praise valu'd with you:
And, which became him like a prince indeed,
He made a blushing cital of himself;

And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching and of learning instantly.
There did he pause: but let me tell the world,—
If he outlive the envy of this day,
England did never owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstru'd in his wantonness.

Hof. Cousin, I think thou art enamour'd
Upon his follies: never did I hear
Of any prince so wild o' liberty.

But be he as he will, yet once ere night
I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy,— Arm, arm with speed:—and, fellows, soldiers,
friends,

Better consider what you have to do
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you.

Hof. I cannot read them now.—

O gentlemen, the time of life is very short!
To spend that shortness basely were too long,
If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour
An if we live, we live to tread on kungs;
If die, brave death, when princes die with us!
Now, for our consciences,—the arms are fair,
When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare; the king comes on apace. [tale,

Hof. I thank him that he cuts me from my
For I profess not talking; only thus,— Let each man do his best: and here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal
In the adventure of this perilous day.
Now,—Esperance!—Percy!—and set on.—
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace:
For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.

[The trumpets sound. They embrace, and exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Plan near Shrewsbury.

Excursions, and parties fighting. Alarum to the battle. Then enter DOUGLAS and BLUNT meeting.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in the battle thus
Thou crossest me? What honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

Doug. Know, then, my name is Douglas;
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus
Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true. [bought

Doug. The Lord of Stafford dear to-day hath Thy likeness; for, instead of thee, King Harry,
The sword hath ended him: so shall it thee,
Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot;

And thou shalt find a king that will revenge
Lord Stafford's death.

[They fight, and BLUNT is slain.]

Enter HOTSPUR.

Hof. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus,
I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.

Doug. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies the king.

Hof. Where?

Doug. Here.

Hof. This, Douglas? no; I know this face full well:

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Sensibly furnish'd like the king himself.

Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!
A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear:
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

Hot. The king hath many masking in his coats.

Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats;

I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece Until I meet the king.

Hot. Up, and away! Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day.

[Exeunt.]

Other alarms. Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here. here's no scoring but upon the pate.—Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt:—there's honour for you: here's no vanity!—I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels.—I have led my raggamuffins where they are peppered: there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end, to beg during life.—But who comes here?

Enter PRINCE HENRY.

P. Hen. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy sword:

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies, Whose deaths are unreveng'd: pr'ythee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. O Hal, I pr'ythee, give me leave to breathe awhile.—Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee. Lend me thy sword, I pr'ythee.

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive thou gettest not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

P. Hen. Give it me: what, is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will sack a city.

[The PRINCE draws out a bottle of sack.]

P. Hen. What, isn't a time to jest and dally now?

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so; if he do not, if I come in his willingly, let him make a carbonado of me. I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: give me life: which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's an end.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarms. Excursions. Enter KING HENRY, PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN, and WESTMORELAND.

K. Hen. I pr'ythee, Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much.—

Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

P. John. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

P. Hen. I do beseech your majesty, make up, Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.

K. Hen. I will do so.—

My Lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

West. Come, my lord, I will lead you to your tent.

P. Hen. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help:

And God forbid a shallow scratch should drive The Prince of Wales from such a field as this, Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on, And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

P. John. We breathe too long:—come, cousin Westmoreland,

Our duty this way lies; for God's sake, come.

[Exeunt P. JOHN and WEST.]

P. Hen. By heaven, thou hast deceiv'd me, Lancaster;

I did not think thee lord of such a spirit:

Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John;

But now I do respect thee as my soul.

K. Hen. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point

With lustier maintenance than I did look for Of such an ungrown warrior.

P. Hen. O, this boy

Lends mettle to us all. [Exit.]

Alarms. Enter DOUGLAS.

Doug. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads:

I am the Douglas, fatal to all those That wear those colours on them:—What art thou,

That counterfeit'st the person of a king?

K. Hen. The king himself, who, Douglas, grieves at heart,

So many of his shadows thou hast met,

And not the very king. I have two boys

Seek Percy and thyself about the field:

But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,

I will assay thee; so, defend thyself!

Doug. I fear, thou art another counterfeit;

And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king:

But mine I am sure thou art, whoever thou be,

And thus I win thee.

[They fight; the KING beina in danger.]

Re-enter P. HENRY.

P. Hen. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like

Never to hold it up again! the spirits

Of Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms:

It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee;

Who never promiseth but he means to pay.

[They fight; DOUGLAS flies.]

Cheerly, my lord: how fares your grace?—

Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent,

And so hath Clifton: I'll to Clifton straight.

K. Hen. Stay, and breathe awhile:—

Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion;

And show'd thou mak'st some tender of my life

In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

P. Hen. O God, they did me too much injury

That ever said I hearken'd for your death!

If it were so, I might have let alone

The insulting hand of Douglas over you,

Which would have been as speedy in your end

As all the poisonous potions in the world,

And sav'd the treacherous labour of your son.

K. Hen. Make up to Clifton, I'll to Sir

Nicholas Gawsey. [Exit.]

Enter HOTSPUR.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

P. Hen. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

P. Hen. Why, then I see A very valiant rebel of the name. I am the Prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,

To share with me in glory any more: Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere; Nor can one England brook a double reign, Of Harry Percy and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come To end the one of us; and would to God The name in arms were now as great as mine!

P. Hen. I'll make it greater ere I part from thee;

And all the budding honours on thy crest I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities. [They fight.]

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to thee, Hal!—Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

Re-enter DOUGLAS; he fights with FALSTAFF who falls down as if he were dead, and exit DOUGLAS. HOTSPUR is wounded, and falls.

Hot. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth!

I better brook the loss of brittle life Than those proud titles thou hast won of me; They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh:—

But thought'st the slave of life, and life time's fool;

And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. O, I could prophesy, But that the earthy and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue:—No, Percy, thou art dust, And food for— [Dies.]

P. Hen. For worms, brave Percy: fare thee well, great heart!—

Ill-weav'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk! When that this body did contain a spirit, A kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now two paces of the vilest earth Is room enough:—this earth that bears thee dead

Bears not alive so stout a gentleman.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so dear a show of zeal:— But let my favours hide thy mangled face; And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself For doing these fair rites of tenderness. Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven! Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave, But not remember'd in thy epitaph!—

[He sees FAL. on the ground.] What, old acquaintance! could not all this flesh

Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell! I could have better spar'd a better man. O, I should have a heavy miss of thee, If I were much in love with vanity. Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day, Though many dearer, in this bloody fray.

Embowell'd will I see thee by and by:

Till then in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit.]

Fal. [Rising slowly.] Embowell'd! if thou embowel me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder me and eat me too to-morrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie, I am no counterfeit; to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man who hath not the life of a man; but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is discretion; in the which better part I have saved my life. Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead; how if he should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure: yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah [stabbing him], with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me. [Takes HOTSPUR on his back.]

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY and PRINCE JOHN.

P. Hen. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thou flesh'd

Thy maiden sword.

P. John. But, soft! whom have we here? Did you not tell me this fat man was dead?

P. Hen. I did; I saw him dead, breathless and bleeding

On the ground.—

Art thou alive? or is it fantasy

That plays upon our eyesight? I pry'thee, speak;

We will not trust our eyes without our ears:—Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain: I am not a double man; but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy [throwing the body down]: if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, Lord, how this world is given to lying!—I grant you I was down and out of breath, and so was he; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them that should reward valour bear the sun upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh; if the man were alive, and would deny it, zounds, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

P. Hen. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.—

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back For my part, if a lie may do thee grace, I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

A retreat is sounded

The trumpet sounds retreat; the day is ours.
Come, brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what friends are living, who are dead.

[Exeunt P. HENRY and P. JOHN.

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

[Exit, bearing off the body.

SCENE V.—Another part of the Field.

The Trumpets sound. Enter KING HENRY,
PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN, WESTMORE-LAND, and others, with WORCESTER and VERNON prisoners.

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.—
Ill-spur'd Worcester! did we not send grace,
Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?

And wouldst thou turn our offers contrary?

Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust?

Three knights upon our party slain to-day,

A noble earl, and many a creature else,

Had been alive this hour,

If, like a Christian, thou hadst truly borne

Between our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What I have done my safety urg'd me
to,

And I embrace this fortune patiently,

Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon too:

Other offenders we will pause upon.

[Exeunt WOR. and VER., guarded.
How goes the field?

P. Hen. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas, when he saw

The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,

The noble Percy slain, and all his men

Upon the foot of fear,—fled with the rest;

And falling from a hill, he was so bruised

That the pursuers took him. At my tent

The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace

I may dispose of him.

K. Hen. With all my heart.

P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you

This honourable bounty shall belong:

Go to the Douglas, and deliver him

Up to his pleasure, ransomless and free:

His valour, shown upon our crests to-day,

Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds

Even in the bosoms of our adversaries.

P. John. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,

Which I shall give away immediately.

K. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our power.—

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,

Towards York shall bend you with your dearest
speed,

To meet Northumberland and the prelate
Scroop,

Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:

Myself,—and you, son Harry,—will towards Wales,

To fight with Glendower and the Earl of March.

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,

Meeting the check of such another day:

And since this business so fair is done,

Let us not leave till all our own be won.

[Exeunt.

SCENE,—ENGLAND.

INDUCTION.

WAREWORTH. Before NORTHUMBERLAND'S
Castle.

Enter Rumour, painted full of tongues.

Rum. Open your ears; for which of you will stop

The vent of hearing when loud Rumour speaks?
I, from the orient to the drooping west,
Making the wind my post-horse, shll unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongues continual slanders ride,
The which in every language I pronounce,
Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.

I speak of peace, while covert enmity,
Under the smile of safety, wounds the world.
And who but Rumour, who but only I,
Make fearful musters and prepar'd defence;
Whilst the big year, swoln with some other
grief,

Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
And no such matter? Rumour is a pipe
Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures;
And of so easy and so plain a stop
That the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
The still-discordant wavering multitude,
Can play upon it. But what need I thus

My well-known body to anatomize
Among my household? Why is Rumour here?
I run before King Harry's victory;
Who, in a bloody field by Shrewsbury, [troops,
Hath beaten down young Hotspur and his Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebel's blood. But what mean I

To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad that Harry Monmouth fell
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword;
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death.
Thus have I rumour'd through the peasant towns

Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland, Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tring on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learn'd of me: from Rumour's tongues [true wrongs.

They bring smooth comforts false, worse than [Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The same.

*The Porter before the Gate; enter LORD
BARDOLPH.*

L. Bard. Who keeps the gate here, ho?—
Where is the earl?

Port. What shall I say you are?

L. Bard. Tell thou the earl
That the Lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Port. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard:

Please it your honour, knock but at the gate,
And he himself will answer.

L. Bard. Here comes the earl.
[Exit Porter.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

North. What news, Lord Bardolph? every minute now

Should be the father of some stratagem:
The times are wild, contention, like a horse,
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose
And bears down all before him.

L. Bard. Noble earl,
I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an God will!

L. Bard. As good as heart can wish:—
The king is almost wounded to the death;
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts [John,
Kill'd by the hand of Douglas: young

And Westmoreland, and Stafford, fled the field;
And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir
John,

Is prisoner to your son: O, such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times,
Since Caesar's fortunes!

North. How is this deriv'd?

Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence;

A gentleman well bred and of good name,
That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant Travers, whom I sent

On Tuesday last to listen after news.

L. Bard. My lord, I over-rode him on the way;

And he is furnish'd with no certainties
More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter TRAVERS.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you? [back

Tra. My lord, Sir John Umfrevile turn'd me
With joyful tidings; and, being better hors'd,
Out-rode me. After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forspent with speed,
That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodied
horse.

He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him
I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me that rebellion had bad luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.
With that, he gave his able horse the head,
And, bending forward, struck his armed heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel-head; and starting so,
He seem'd in running to devour the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Ha!—Again:

Said he young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
Of Hotspur, coldspur? that rebellion
Had met ill-luck?

L. Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what;

If my young lord your son have not the day,
Upon mine honour, for a silken point
I'll give my barony: never talk of it.

North. Why should the gentleman that rode by Travers

Give, then, such instances of loss?

L. Bard. Who, he?

He was some hilding fellow, that had stolen
The horse he rode on; and, upon my life,
Spoke at a venture.—Look, here comes more news.

Enter MORTON.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf,

Foretells the nature of a tragic volume:
So looks the strand, whereon the imperious flood

Hath left a witness'd usurpation,— Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord;
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask
To fright our party.

North. How doth my son and brother?
Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burn'd;

But Priam found the fire ere he his tongue,
And I my Percy's death ere thou report'st it.
This thou wouldst say,—Your son did thus and
thus;

Your brother thus; so fought the noble Douglas.
Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds.
But in the end to stop mine ear indeed,
Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise,
Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.

Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother,
yet;

But, for my lord your son,—

North. Why, he is dead.

See what a ready tongue suspicion hath!
He that but fears the thing he would not know
Hath by instinct knowledge from others' eyes
That what he fear'd is chanced. Yet speak, Morton;

Tell thou thy earl his divination lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace,
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great to be by me gainsaid:
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.

I see a strange confession in thine eye:
Thou shak'st thy head, and hold'st it fear or sin
To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so;
The tongue offends not that reports his death:
And he doth sin that doth belie the dead;
Not he which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd knolling a departing friend.

L. Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.

Mor. I am sorry I should force you to believe That which I would to God I had not seen;
But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rend'ring faint quittance, wearied and out-
breath'd,

To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath beat
The never-daunted Percy to the earth,
From whence with life he never more sprang up.

In few, his death,—whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dulllest peasant in his camp,—
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best-temper'd courage in his troops;
For from his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead:
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement, flies with greatest speed,
So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss, Lend to this weight such lightness with their fear,

That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field. Then was that noble
Worcester

Too soon ta'en prisoner; and that furious Scot,
The bloody Douglas, whose well-labouring sword

Had three times slain the appearance of the [Kung,
'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs; and in his fight,

Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all
Is, that the king hath won; and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster
And Westmoreland. This is the news at full.

North. For this I shall have time enough to mourn.

In poison there is physic; and these news,
Having beer well, that would have made me
sick,

Being sick, have in some measure made me
well,

And as the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,

Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms; even so my limbs, Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with
grief,

Are thrice themselves. Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch!

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand: and hence, thou sickly quoil!

Thou art a guard too wanton for the head
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit.

Now bind my brows with iron, and approach
The rugged'st hour that time and spite dare bring

To frown upon the enrag'd Northumberland!
Let heav'n kiss earth! Now let not Nature's hand

Keep the wild flood confin'd! let order die!
And let this world no longer be a stage
To feed contention in a lingering act;
But let one spirit of the first-born Cain
Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set,
On bloody courses, the rude scene may end
And darkness be the buriar of the dead!

Tra. This strained passion doth you wrong,
my lord.

L. Bard. Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from your honour.

Mor. The lives of all your loving complices
Lean on your wealth; the which, if you give o'er
To stormy passion, must perforce decay.
You cast the event of war, my noble lord,
And summ'd the account of chance, before you said,

Let us make head. It was your presumise
That in the dole o' blows your son might drop:

You knew he walk'd o'er perils on an edge,
More likely to fall in than to get o'er;
You were advis'd his flesh was capable
Of wounds and scars; and that his forward spirit

Would lift him where most trade of danger
Yet did you say,—Go forth; and none of this Though strongly apprehended, could restrain
The stiff-borne action. What hath, then, befallen,

Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth,
More than that being which was like to be?

L. Bard. We all that are engaged to this loss
Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous seas,
That if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd, for the gain propos'd
Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd;
And since we are o'erset, venture again.
Come, we will all put forth, body and goods.

Mor. 'Tis more than time: and, my most noble lord,

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,—
The gentle Archbishop of York is up
With well-appointed powers: he is a man
Who with a double surety binds his followers.
My lord your son had only but the corpse,
But shadows and the shows of men, to fight:
For that same word, rebellion, did divide
The action of their bodies from their souls;
And they did fight with queasiness, constrain'd,
As men drink potions; that their weapons only Seem'd on our side, but, for their spirits and souls,

This word, rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond. But now the archbishop

Turns insurrection to religion:
Suppos'd sincere and holy in his thoughts,
He's follow'd both with body and with mind;
And doth enlarge his rising with the blood
Of fair King Richard, scrap'd from Pomfret stones;

Derives from heaven his quarrel and his cause;
Tells them he doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke;
And more and less do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak truth,

This present grief had wip'd it from my mind.
Go in with me; and counsel every man
The aptest way for safety and revenge.
Get posts and letters, and make friends with speed,—

Never so few, and never yet more need.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—LONDON. A Street.

Enter SIR JOHN FALSTAFF, with his Page bearing his sword and buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water; but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew of.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to invent anything that tends to laughter, more than I invent or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou whoreson mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap than to wait at my heels. I was never mann'd with an agate till now: but I will set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel,—the juvenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not suck to say his face is a face-royal: God may finish it when he will, it is nota hair amiss yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he will be crowing as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him.—What said Master Dumbleton about the satin for my short cloak and my slops?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his bond and yours; he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned, like the glutton!
may his tongue be hotter!—A whoreson Achitophel!
a rascally yea-forsooth knave! to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security!—The whoreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth as offer to stop it with security. I looked he should have sent me two-and-twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it:
and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him.—Where's Bardolph?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife, in the stews, I were mann'd, horsed, and wived.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close; I will not see him.

Enter the Lord Chief-Justice and an Attendant.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Atten. Falstaff, an't please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?

Atten. He, my lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Ch. Just. What, to York? Call him back
again.

Atten. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deaf. [deaf.]

Page. You must speak louder; my master is Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of anything good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow;

I must speak with him.

Atten. Sir John,—

Fal. What! a young knave, and begging!
Is there not wars? is there not employment?
Doth not the king lack subjects? Do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Atten. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiery aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

Atten. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiery aside; and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me! If thou gettest any leave of me, hang me; if thou takest leave, thou wert better be hanged. You hunt-counter, hence! avaunt!

Atten. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord!—God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship to have a reverend care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty:—you would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear, moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. J. Well, God mend him! I pray you let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an't please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief, from study, and perturbation of the brain: I have read the cause of his effects in Galen; it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled withal.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, Sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater and my waist slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have misled the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath misled me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loth to gail a new-healed wound: your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little glided over your night's exploit on Gads-hill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'erposting that action.

Fal. My lord,—

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

[fox.]

Fal. To wake a wolf is as bad as to smell a candle.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wassail candle, my lord; all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravity, gravity, gravity.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light; but I hope he that looks upon me will take me without weighing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go:—I cannot tell. Virtue is of so little regard in these costermonger times that true valour is turned bear-herd: pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings: all the other gifts appertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You that are old consider not the capacities of us that are young; you measure the heat of our livers with the bitterness of your galls: and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Fie, fie, fie, Sir John!

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice,—I have lost it with hollaring and singing of anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not; the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box o' the ear that the prince gave you,—he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it; and the young lion repents; marry, not in ashes and sackcloth, but in new silk and old sack.

Ch. Just. Well, God send the prince a better companion!

Fal. God send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the king hath severed you and Prince Harry: I hear you are going with Lord John of Lancaster against the archbishop and the Earl of Northumberland.

Fal. Yea; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look you, pray, all you that kiss my Lady Peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day; for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, and I brandish anything but my bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can creep out his head but I am thrust upon it: well, I cannot last ever: but it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If you will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is: I were better to be eaten to death with rust than to be scoured to nothing with perpetual motion.

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition!

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses. Fare you well: commend me to my cousin Westmoreland.

[Exeunt Chief-Justice and Attendant.]

Fal. If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.—A man can no more separate age and covetousness than he can part young limbs and lechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the diseases prevent my curses.—Boy!—

Page. Sir?

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable.—Go bear this letter to my Lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the Earl of Westmoreland; and this to old Mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin. About it; you know where to find me. [Exit. Page.] A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one or the other plays the rogue with my great toe. It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. A good wit will make use of anything. I will turn diseases to commodity. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—YORK. A Room in the ARCHBISHOP'S Palace.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, the LORDS HASTINGS, MOWBRAY, and BARDOLPH.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause and know our means;

And, my most noble friends, I pray you all
Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:—
And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Mowb. I well allow the occasion of our arms;
But gladly would be better satisfied

How, in our means, we should advance ourselves

To look with forehead bold and big enough
Upon the power and puissance of the king.

Hast. Our present musters grow upon the file

To five-and-twenty thousand men of choice;
And our supplies live largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns
With an incensed fire of injuries.

L. Bard. The question, then, Lord Hastings, standeth thus;—

Whether our present five-and-twenty thousand
May hold up head without Northumberland?

Hast. With him, we may.

L. Bard. Ay, marry, there's the point:
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgment is, we should not step too far
Till we had his assistance by the hand;
For, in a theme so bloody-fac'd as this,
Conjecture, expectation, and surmise
Of aids uncertain, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true, Lord Bardolph; for, indeed,

It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

L. Bard. It was, my lord; who lin'd himself with hope,

Eating the air on promise of supply,
Flattering himself with project of a power
Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:
And so, with great imagination,

Proper to madmen, led his powers to death,
And, winking, leap'd into destruction. [Hurt]

Hast. But, by your leave, it never yet did
To lay down likelihoods and forms of hope.

L. Bard. Yes, in this present quality of war;—
Indeed, the instant action,—a cause on foot,—
Lives so in hope, as in an early spring
We see the appearing buds; which, to prove fruit,

Hope gives not so much warrant, as despair
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,

We first survey the plot, then draw the model;
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection;

Which, if we find outweighs ability,
What do we then but draw anew the model

In fewer offices, or at least desist [work.—
To build at all? Much more, in this great

Which is almost to pluck a kingdom down
And set another up,—should we survey

The plot of situation and the model,
Consent upon a sure foundation,

Question surveyors, know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,

To weigh against his opposite; or else,
We fortify in paper and in figures,

Using the names of men instead of men:
Like one that draws the model of a house

Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,
Gives o'er, and leaves his part-created cost

A naked subject to the weeping clouds,
And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes,—yet likely of fair birth,—

Should be still-born, and that we now possess'd
The utmost man of expectation;

I think we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king.

L. Bard. What, is the king but five-and-twenty thousand?

Hast. To us no more; nay, not so much, Lord Bardolph;

For his divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads: one power against the French,

And one against Glendower; perforce a third
Must take up us: so is the uniform king
In three divided; and his coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness.

Arch. That he should draw his several strengths together,
And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh

Baying him at the heels: never fear that.

L. Bard. Who is it like should lead his forces hither? [moreland]

Hast. The Duke of Lancaster and West-
Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Monmouth:

But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I have no certain notice.

Arch. Let us on,
And publish the occasion of our arms.
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice;
Their over-greedy love hath surfeited:
An habitation giddy and unsure
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond man! with what loud applause
Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Boling-broke,

Before he was what thou wouldst have him be!
And being now trimm'd in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times? [die]

They that, when Richard liv'd, would have him
Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that threw'st dust upon his goodly head,
When through proud London he came sighing
on

After the admired heels of Bolingbroke,
Cry'st now, *O earth yield us that king again,
And take thou this!* O thoughts of men accurs'd!
Past, and to come, seems best; things present, worst. [set on?]

Mowb. Shall we go draw our numbers, and Hast. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Street.

*Enter Hostess, FANG and his Boy with her,
and SNARE following.*

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?

Fang. It is entered.

Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman? will he stand to it?

Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?

Host. O Lord, ay! good Master Snare.

Snare. Here, here.

Fang. Snare, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff.

Host. Yea, good Master Snare; I have entered him and all.

Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.

Host. Alas the day! take heed of him; he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly: in good faith, he cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foil like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Host. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.

Fang. An I but fist him once; an he comes but within my vice,—

Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he is an infinitive thing upon my score:—
good Master Fang, hold him sure;—good Master Snare, let him not 'scape. He comes continually to Pie-corner,—saving your manhoods,—to buy a saddle; and he is indited to dinner to the Lubber's Head in Lumber Street, to Master Smooth's the silkman: I pray ye, since my exion is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long one for a poor lone woman to bear: and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been fubbed off, and fubbed off, and fubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.
Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmseynose knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices, Master Fang and Master
Snare; do me, do me, do me your offices.

Enter SIR JOHN FALSTAFF, Page, and BAR-DOLPHE.

Fal. How now! whose mare's dead? what's the matter?

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of Mistress Quickly.

Fal. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph: cut me off the villain's head; throw the quean in the channel.

Host. Throw me in the channel! I'll throw thee in the channel. Wilt thou? wilt thou?
thou bastardy rogue!—Murder, murder! O thou honeysuckle villain! wilt thou kill God's officers and the king's? O thou honey-seed rogue! thou art a honey-seed; a man-queller and a woman-queller.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph.

Fang. A rescue! a rescue!

Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two.—
Thou wo't, wo't thou? thou wo't, wo't thou?
do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scullion! you rampallian! you fustilorian! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief-Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What is the matter? keep the peace here, ho!

Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me!

Ch. Just. How now, Sir John! what, are you brawling here? [business?]
Doth this become your place, your time, and You should have been well on your way to York.— [on him?]

Stand from him, fellow: wherefore hang'st thou
Host. O my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at his suit.

Ch. Just. For what sum?

Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all,—all I have. He hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his:—but I will have some of it out again, or I will ride thee o' nights like the mare.

Fal. I think I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir John? Fie! What man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation? Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitsun-week, when the prince broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor,—thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us she had a good dish of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some; whereby I told thee they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarly with such poor people; saying that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-oath: deny it, if thou canst!

Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you; she hath been in good case, and, the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you I may have redress against them.

Ch. Just. Sir John, Sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you. can thrust me from a level consideration: you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and in person.

Host. Yes, in troth, my lord.

Ch. Just. Pr'ythee, peace.—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villainy you have done with her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance.

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply. You call honourable boldness impudent sauciness: if a man will make court'sy, and say nothing, he is virtuous:—no, my lord, my humble duty remembered, I will not be your suitor. I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.

Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong; but answer in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess. [Takes her aside.]

Enter GOWER.

Ch. Just. Now, Master Gower,—what news?

Gow. The king, my lord, and Harry Prince of Wales

Are near at hand: the rest this paper tells.

[Gives a letter.]

Fal. As I am a gentleman,—

Host. Nay, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a gentleman:—come, no more words of it.

Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking: and for thy walls,—a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the Prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if thou canst. Come, an it were not for thy humours, there is not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action. Come thou must not be in this humour with me; dost not know me? come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

Host. Pray thee, Sir John, let it be but twenty nobles: i' faith, I am loth to pawn my plate, so God save me, la.

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope you'll come to supper. You'll pay me all together?

Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her [to BARDOLPH]; hook on, hook on.

Host. Will you have Doll Tearsheet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words; let's have her.

[Exit HOST., BARD., Officers, and Page.]

Ch. Just. I have heard better news.

Fal. What's the news, my good lord?

Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?

Gow. At Basingstoke, my lord.

Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: what's the news, my lord?

Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?

Gow. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse,

Are march'd up to my Lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland and the archbishop.

Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord? [tently:]

Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently, go along with me, good master Gower.

Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?

Gow. I must wait upon my good lord here, —I thank you, good Sir John.

Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, Master Gower?

Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, Sir John?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me.—This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.

Ch. Just. Now, the Lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Another Street.

Enter PRINCE HENRY AND POINS.

P. Hen. Before God, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is it come to that? I had thought weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

P. Hen. Faith, it does me; though it discolors the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth it not show vilely in me to desire small beer?

Poins. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike, then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz., these, and those that were thy peach-coloured ones? or to bear the inventory of thy shirts, as, one for superfluity, and one other for use?—but that the tennis court-keeper knows better than I; for it is a low ebb of linen with thee when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-countries have made a shift to eat up thy holland; and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen shall inherit thy kingdom: but the midwives say the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Yes, faith; and let it be an excellent good thing.

P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

P. Hen. Marry, I tell thee,—it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee,—as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend,—I could be sad and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hardly on the subject.

P. Hen. By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book as thou and Falstaff for obduracy and persistency: let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly that my father is so sick: and keeping such vile company as thou art hath in reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow.

Poins. The reason?

P. Hen. What wouldst thou think of me if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

P. Hen. It would be every man's thought; and thou are a blessed fellow to think as every man thinks: never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?

Poins. Why, because you have been so lewd, and so much engrafted to Falstaff.

P. Hen. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoke on; I can hear it with mine own ears: the worst that they can say of me is that I am a second brother, and that I am a proper fellow of my hands; and those two things, I confess, I cannot help.—By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff, he had him from me Christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.

Enter BARDOLPH and Page.

Bard. God save your grace!

P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph!
Bard. Come, you virtuous ass [to the Page], you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man-at-arms are you become? Is it such a matter to get a pottle-pot's maidenhead?

Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window: at last I spied his eyes; and methought he had made two holes in the alewife's new red petticoat, and so peeped through.

P. Hen. Hath not the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabbit, away!

Page. Away, you rascally Althæa's dream, away!

P. Hen. Instruct us, boy; what dream, boy?

Page. Marry, my lord, Althæa dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand; and therefore I call him her dream.

P. Hen. A crown's worth of good interpretation:—there it is, boy. [Gives him money.]

Poins. O that this good blossom could be kept from cankers!—Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town; there's a letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect.—And how doth the martlemas, your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him: though that be sick, it dies not.

P. Hen. I do allow this wen to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place; for look you how he writes.

Poins. [Reads.] John Falstaff, knight,—every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself: even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger but they say, There is some of the king's blood spill.—How comes that? says he, that takes upon him not to conceive. The answer is as ready as a borrower's cap, I am the king's poor cousin, sir.

P. Hen. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But to the letter:—

Poins. [Reads.] Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting.—Why, this is a certificate.

P. Hen. Peace!

Poins. [Reads.] I will imitate the honourable Romans in brevity:—sure he means brevity in breath, short-winded.—I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou mayest, and so, farewell.

Thune, by yea and no, (which is as much as to say, as thou usest him,)
JACK FALSTAFF, with my familiars;
JOHN, with my brothers and sisters;
and SIR JOHN with all Europe.

My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Poins. God send the wench have no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time; and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us.—Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank? [cheap.]

Bard. At the old place, my lord, —in East.

P. Hen. What company? [church.]

Page. Ephesians, my lord,—of the old

P. Hen. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old Mistress Quickly and Mistress Doll Tearsheet.

P. Hen. What pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentiewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

P. Hen. Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull.—Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper?

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy,—and Bardolph,—no word to your master that I am yet come to town: there's for your silence.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir,—I will govern it.

P. Hen. Fare ye well; go. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and Page.]—This Doll Tearsheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Alban's and London.

P. Hen. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leathern jerkins and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Hen. From a god to a bull? a heavy descension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a pretence? a low transformation! that shall be mine; for in everything the purpose must weigh with the folly.—Follow me, Ned.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—WARKWORTH. Before the castle.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, LADY NORTHUMBERLAND, and LADY PERCY.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter,

Give even way unto my rough affairs:

Put not you on the visage of the times,

And be, like them, to Percy troublesome.

Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more:

Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.
North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn;

And, but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lady P. O, yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars!

The time was, father, that you broke your word,
When you were more endear'd to it than now,
When your own Percy, when my heart-dear

Harry,
Threw many a northward look to see his father
Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain.
Who then persuaded you to stay at home?
There were two honours lost,—yours and your son's.

For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it!
For his,—at stuck upon him, as the sun
In the grey vault of heaven: and by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts: he was, indeed, the glass
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves:
He had no legs that practis'd not his gait;
And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant;
For those that could speak low and tardily
Would turn their own perfection to abuse
To seem like him: so that in speech, in gait,
In diet, in affections of delight,
In military rules, humours of blood,
He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous him!

O miracle of men!—him did you leave,—
Second to none, unseconded by you,—
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage; to abide a field
Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name

Did seem defensible:—so you left him.
Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong
To hold your honour more precise and nice
With others than with him! let them alone:
The marshal and the archbishop are strong:
Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,

To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beshrew your heart,
Fair daughter, you do draw my spirits from me
With new lamenting ancient oversights.
But I must go, and meet with danger there;
Or it will seek me in another place,
And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O, fly to Scotland,
Till that the nobles and the armed commons
Have of their pussance made a little taste.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the king,

Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves,

First let them try themselves. So did your son;
He was so suffer'd: so came I a widow;
And never shall have length of life enough
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recordation to my noble husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me. 'Tis with my mind

As with the tide swell'd up unto its height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way.
Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back.
I will resolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Room in the Boar's
Head Tavern in Eastcheap.

Enter two Drawers.

1 Draw. What the devil hast thou brought there? apple-johns? thou know'st Sir John cannot endure an apple-john.

2 Draw. Mass, thou sayest true. The prince once set a dish of apple-johns before him, and told him there was five more Sir Johns; and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, withered knights. It angered him to the heart: but he hath forgot that.

1 Draw. Why, then, cover, and set them down: and see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise: Mistress Tearsheet would fain hear some music. Despatch:—the room where they supped is too hot; they'll come in straight.

2 Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince and Master Poin; and they will put on two of our jenkins and aprons; and Sir John must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

1 Draw. By the mass, here will be old utis:
it will be an excellent stratagem.

2 Draw. I'll see if I can find out Sneak.

[Exit.]

Enter Hostess and DOLL TEARSHEET.

Host. I' faith, sweetheart, methinks now you are in an excellent good temperality: your pul-sidge beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire; and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose; but, I' faith, you have drunk too much canaries; and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say, What's this?—How do you now?

Doll. Better than I was:—hem.

Host. Why, that's well said; a good heart's worth gold.—Look, here comes Sir John.

Enter FALSTAFF singing.

Fal. When Arthur first in court—Empty the jorden. [Exit 1 Drawer.].—And was a worthy king.—How now, Mistress Doll!

Host. Sick of a calm; yea, good sooth.

Fal. So is all her sect; an they be once in a calm, they are sick.

Doll. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals, Mistress Doll.

Doll. I make them! gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

Doll. Yea, joy,—your chains and our jewels.

Fal. Your brooches, pearls, and ouches:—for to serve bravely is to come halting off, you know: to come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely,—

Doll. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion;
you two never meet but you fall to some discord: you are both, in good troth, as rheumatic as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's confirmities. What the good-year! one must bear, and that must be you [to Doll]: you are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

Doll. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hogshead? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him; you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold.— Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter First Drawer.

1 Draw. Sir, Ancient Pistol is below, and would speak with you.

Doll. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul-mouth'dst rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here:
no, by my faith; I must live amongst my neighbours; I'll no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very best:—shut the door;—there comes no swaggerers here: I have not lived all this while to have swaggering now:
—shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?—

Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, Sir John:
there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-fally, Sir John, never tell me:
your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors.
I was before Master Tisick, the deputy, the other day; and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesday last,—Neighbour Quickly, says he;—Master Dumb, our mimis-ter, was by then;—Neighbour Quickly, says he,
receive those that are civil, for, saith he, you are in an ill-name;—now he said so, I can tell whereupon; for, says he, you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive: receive, says he,

no swaggering companions.—There comes none here;—you would bless you to hear what he said:—no, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater, i'faith; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance.—Call him up, drawer.

[Exit Drawer.]

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater: but I do not love swaggering; by my troth, I am the worse when one says swagger: feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

Doll. So you do, hostess.

Host. Do I? yea, in very truth, do I, an'twere an aspen leaf: I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and PAGE.

Pist. God save you, Sir John.

Fal. Welcome, Ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, Sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her.

Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs nor no bullets: I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you, Mrs. Dorothy; I will charge you.

Doll. Charge me! I scorn you, scurvy companion. What! you poor, base, rascally, cheating lack-linen mate! Away, you mouldy rogue, away! I am meat for your master.

Pist. I know you, Mistress Dorothy.

Doll. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, an you play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-hilt stale juggler, you!—Since when, I pray you, sir?—God's light, with two points on your shoulder? much!

Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol; I would not have you go off here: discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good Captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Doll. Captain! thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called captain? If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain! you slave, for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house?—He a captain! hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouldy stewed prunes and dried cakes. A captain! God's light, these villains will make the word as odious as the word occupy; which was an excellent good word before it was ill-sorted: therefore captains had need to look it.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Hark thee hither, Mistress Doll.

Pist. Not I: I tell thee what, Corporal Bardolph,—I could tear her:—I'll be revenged on her.

Pist. I'll see her damned first;—to Pluto's damned lake, by this hand, to the infernal deep, with Erebus and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down, down, dogs! down, fatiors! Have we not Hiren here?

Host. Good Captain Peesel, be quiet; it is very late, i'faith: I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed! Shall packhorses,

And hollow pamp'rd jades of Asia,
Which cannot go but thirty miles a-day,
Compare with Casars, and with Cannibals,
And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with

King Cerberus; and let the welkin roar.

Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl anon.

Pist. Die men like dogs! give crowns like pins! Have we not Hiren here?

Host. O' my word, captain; there's none such here. What the good-year! do you think I would deny her? for Godsake, be quiet.

Pist. Then feed and be fat, my fair Calipolis. Come, give me some sack.

Se fortuna mi tormenta, lo sperare mi contenta.—

Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire: Give me some sack:—and, sweetheart, lie thou there. [Laying down his sword.]

Come we to full points here; and are et-ceteras nothing?

Fal. Pistol, I would, be quiet.

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif: what! we have seen the seven-stars.

Doll. Thrust him downstairs; I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.

Pist. Thrust him downstairs! know we not Galloway nags?

Fal. Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-groat shilling: nay, an he do nothing but speak nothing, he shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we imbrue?— [Snatching up his sword.]
Then death rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days!

Why, then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds Untwine the Sisters Three! Come, Atropos, I say!

Host. Here's goodly stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Doll. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.

Fal. Get you down stairs.

[Drawing, and driving Pist. out.]

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house afore I'll be in these tiritits and frights. So; murder, I warrant now.—Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons. [Exeunt PIST. and BARD.]

Doll. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal is gone.—Ah, you whoreson little valiant villain, you!

Host. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

Fal. Have you turned him out of doors?

Bard. Yes, sir. The rascal's drunk: you have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal! to brave me!

Doll. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, how thou sweatest! come, let me wipe thy face;—come on, you whoreson chops:—ah, rogue! i' faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the nine worthies: ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Doll. Do, if thou darest for thy heart: if thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheets.

Enter Musicians

Fal. Let them play;—play, sirs.—Sit on my knee, Doll.—A rascal-bragging slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Doll. I' faith, and thou followedst him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting o'days and foining o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter, behind, PRINCE HENRY and Poins disguised as Drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a Death's head; do not bid me remember mine end.

Doll. Sirrah, what humour is the prince off?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow: he would have made a good pantier; he would have chipped bread well.

Doll. They say Poins has a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit? hang him, baboon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard; there is no more conceit in him than is in a mallet.

Doll. Why does the prince love him so, then?

Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness; and he plays at quoits well; and eats conger and fennel; and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons; and rides the wild mare with the boys; and jumps upon joint-stools; and swears with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories; and such other gambol faculties he has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admires him: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoirdupois.

P. Hen. Would not this nave of a wheel have his ears cut off?

Poins. Let us beat him before his whore.

P. Hen. Look, whether the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.

Poins. Is it not strange that desire should so many years outlive performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanac to that?

Poins. And look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not lisping to his master's old tables, his note-book, his counsel-keeper.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering buxses.
Doll. By my troth, I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Doll. I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt thou have a kurtle of? I shall receive money on Thursday; thou shalt have a cap tomorrow. A merry song, come: it grows late; we will to bed. Thou wilt forget me when I am gone.

Doll. By my troth, thou wilt set me a weeping, an thou sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return:—well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis.

P. Hen., Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

[Advancing.]

Fal. Ha! a bastard son of a king's?—And art not thou Poins, his brother?

P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead!

Fal. A better than thou: I am a gentleman; thou art a drawer.

P. Hen. Very true, sir, and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London. Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty,—by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome.

[Leaning his hand upon DOLL.]

Doll. How, you fat fool! I scorn you.

Poins. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

P. Hen. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how vilely did you speak of me even now before this honest, virtuous, civil, gentlewoman!

Host. God's blessing on your good heart! and so she is, by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou hear me?

P. Hen. Yes; and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gadshill: you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no; not so; I did not think thou wast within hearing.

P. H. I shall drive you, then, to confess the wilful abuse, and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honour; no abuse.

P. Hen. Not! to dispraise me, and call me pantler, and bread-chipper, and I know not what!

Fal. No abuse, Hal.

Poins. No abuse.

Fal. No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none. I dispraised him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him;—in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal;—none, Ned, none,—no, faith, boys, none.

P. Hen. See now, whether pure fear and entire cowardice doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us? is she

of the wicked? is thine hostess here of the wicked? or is thy boy of the wicked? or honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in his nose, of the wicked?

Poins. Answer, thou dead elm, answer.

Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph; irrecoverable; and his face is Lucifer's privy-kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For the boy,—there is a good angel about him; but the devil outbids him too.

P. Hen. For the women?

Fal. For one of them,—she is in hell already, and burns, poor soul! For the other,—I owe her money; and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

Host. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No, I think thou art not; I think thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another indictment upon thee for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law; for the which I think thou wilt howl.

Host. All victuallers do so: what's a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lent?

P. Hen. You, gentlewoman,—

Doll. What says your grace?

Fal. His grace says that which his flesh rebels against. [Knocking within.]

Host. Who knocks so loud at door? Look to the door there, Francis.

Enter PETO.

P. Hen. Peto, how now! what news?

Pet. The king your father is at Westminster; And there are twenty weak and wearied posts Come from the north: and as I came along I met and overtook a dozen captains, Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns And asking everyone for Sir John Falstaff.

P. Hen. By heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame,
So idly to profane the precious time;
When tempest of commotion, like the south,
Borne with black vapor, doth begin to melt,
And drop upon our bare unarmed heads.
Give me my sword and cloak.—Falstaff, good-night.

[Exeunt P. HEN., POINS, PETO, and BARD.]

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence, and leave it unpicked. [Knocking within.] More knocking at the door!

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

How now! what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently; a dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. Pay the musicians, sirrah [to the Page].—Farewell, hostess;—farewell, Doll.—You see my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after: the undeserver may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches: if I be not sent away post, I will see you again ere I go.

Doll. I cannot speak;—if my heart be not ready to burst,—well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, farewell.

[Exeunt FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH]

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peascodtime; but an honest and truer-hearted man,—well, fare thee well.

Bard. [Within.] Mistress, Tearsheet,—

Host. What's the matter?

Bard. [Within.] Bid Mistress Tearsheet come to my master.

Host. O, run, Doll, run; run, good Doll.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—WESTMINSTER. A Room in the Palace

Enter KING HENRY in his nightgown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go call the Earls of Surrey and of Warwick;

But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these And well consider of them: make good speed.

[Exit Page.]

How many thousand of my poorest subjects Are at this hour asleep!—O sleep, O gentle sleep,

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down, And steep my senses in forgetfulness?

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs, Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee, [slumber], And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy

Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great, Under high canopies of costly state, And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?

O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch A watch-case or a common 'larum bell?

Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains In cradle of the rude impetuous surge,

And in the visitation of the winds, Who take the ruffian billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them

With deafening clamour in the slippery shrouds, That, with the hurly, death itself awakes?

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude; And in the calmest and most stillest night,

With all appliances and means to boot, Deny it to a king? Then, happy low, lie down! Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter WARWICK and SURREY.

War. Many good-morrrows to your majesty!

K. Hen. Is it good-morrow, lords?

War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past.

K. Hen. Why, then, good-morrow to you all, my lords.

Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?

War. We have, my liege. [kingdom]

K. Hen. Then you perceive the body of our How foul it is; what rank diseases grow, And with what danger, near the heart of it.

War. It is but as a body yet distemper'd; Which to his former strength may be restor'd With good advice and little medicine:—

My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

K. Hen. O God! that one might read the book of fate,

And see the revolution of the times Make mountains level, and the continent,—

Weary of solid firmness, —melt itself
 Into the sea! and, other times, to see
 The beachy girdle of the ocean [mock,
 Too wide for Neptune's hips; how chances
 And changes fill the cup of alteration
 With divers liquors! Oh, if this were seen,
 The happiest youth, —viewing his progress through,

What perils past, what crosses to ensue, —
 Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.
 'Tis not ten years gone [friends,
 Since Richard and Northumberland, great
 Did feast together, and in two years after
 Were they at wars. It is but eight years since
 This Percy was the man nearest my soul;
 Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs,
 And laid his love and life under my foot;
 Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard Gave him defiance. But which of you was by,—

You, cousin Nevil, as I may remember,—

[To WARWICK.

When Richard,—with his eye brimful of tears,
 Then check'd and rated by Northumberland, —
 Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy?
Northumberland, thou ladder by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne,—
 Though then, God knows, I had no such intent,
 But that necessity so bow'd the state
 That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:—
*The time shall come, thus did he follow it,
 The time will come, that foul sin, gathering
 head,*

Shall break into corruption—so went on,
 Foretelling this same time's condonion,
 And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives,
 Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
 The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
 With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
 And weak beginnings lie intreasur'd. [time;
 Such things become the hatch and brood of
 And, by the necessary form of this,
 King Richard might create a perfect guess
 That great Northumberland, then false to him,
 Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness;
 Which should not find a ground to root upon,
 Unless on you.

K. Hen. Are these things, then, necessities?
 Then let us meet them like necessities;—
 And that same word even now cries out on us:
 They say the bishop and Northumberland
 Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord;
 Rumour doth double like the voice and echo,
 The numbers of the fear'd. Please it your grace

To go to bed. Upon my life, my lord,
 The powers that you already have sent forth
 Shall bring this prize in very easily.
 To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd
 A certain instance that Glendower is dead.
 Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill;
 And these unseason'd hours perforce must add
 Unto your sickness.

K. Hen. I will take your counsel:
 And, were these inward wars once out of hand,
 We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Court before JUSTICE SHALLOW'S
 House in Gloucestershire.

Enter SHALLOW and SILENCE, meeting;
 MOULDY, SHADOW, WART, FEEBLE, BULL-
 CALF, and Servants, behind

Shal. Come on, come on, come on, sir; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer, by the rood. And how doth my good cousin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bedfellow? and your fairest daughter and mune, my god-daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a black ousel, cousin Shallow!

Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say my cousin William is become a good scholar: he is at Oxford still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir, to my cost.

Shal. He must, then, to the inns of court shortly: I was once of Clement's-inn; where I think they will talk of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were called lusty Shallow then, cousin.

Shal. By the mass, I was called anything;
 and I would have done anything indeed, too, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Bare, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele a Cotswold man,—you had not four such swingebucklers in all the inns of court again; and, I may say to you, we knew where the bona-robas were, and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now Sir John, a boy, and page to Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This Sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same. I saw him break Skogan's head at the court gate, when he was a crack not thus high; and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Jesu, Jesu, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure: death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all; all shall die.—How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain.—Is old Double of your town living yet?

Sil. Dead, sir.

Shal. Jesu, Jesu, dead!—he drew a good bow; and dead!—he shot a fine shoot:—John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead!—he would have clapp'd in the clout at twelve score, and carried you a forehead shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's heart good to see.—How a score of ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Sil. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as I think.

Enter BARDOLPH and one with him.

Bard Good-morrow, honest gentlemen: I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir, a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace: what is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you; my captain, Sir John Falstaff,—a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir; I knew him a good backward man: how doth the good knight? may I ask how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!—it is good; yea, indeed, is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated!—it comes from accommodo: very good; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word. Phrase call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase; but I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command. Accommodated; that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or, when a man is, being, whereby he may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

Shal. It is very just.—Look, here comes good Sir John.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand: by my troth, you look well and bear your years very well: welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good Master Robert Shallow:—Master Surecard, as I think?

Shal. No, Sir John, it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good Master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Fie! this is hot weather.—Gentlemen, have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? where's the roll?—let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so:—yea, marry, sir:—Ralph Mouldy!—let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see; where is Mouldy?

Moul. Here, an't please you.

Shal. What think you, Sir John? a good limbed fellow; young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, an't please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, i' faith! things that are mouldy lack use: very singular good!—in faith, well said, Sir John; very well said.

Fal. Prick him.

[To SHALLOW.]

Moul. I was pricked well enough before, an you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now for one to do her husbandry and her drudgery: you need not to have pricked me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy; you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent?

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside: know you where you are?—For the other, Sir John:—let me see;—Simon Shadow!

Fal. Yea, marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shad. Here, sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Shad. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: it is often so, indeed; but not much of the father's substance.

Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer,—prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book.

Shal. Thomas Wart!

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.

Shal. Shall I prick him, Sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well.—Francis Feeble!

Fee. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have pricked you.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

Fee. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no more.

Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove or most magnanimous mouse.—Prick the woman's tailor well, Master Shallow; deep, Master Shallow.

Fee. I would Wart might have gone, sir.

Fal. I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou mightst mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands: let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Fee. It shall suffice, sir.

Fal. I am bound to thee. Reverend Feeble.—Who is next?

Shal. Peter Bullcalf of the green!

Fal. Yea, marry, let us see Bullcalf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow!—Come, prick me, Bullcalf, till he roar again.

Bull. O lord! good my lord captain,—

Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?

Bull. O lord, sir! I am a diseased man.

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whoreson cold, sir,—a cough, sir,—which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order that thy friends shall ring for thee.—Is here all?

Shal. Here is two more called than your number; you must have but four here, sir:—and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, by my troth, Master Shallow.

Shal. O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's Fields?

Fal. No more of that, good Master Shallow, no more of that.

Shal. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Nightwork alive?

Fal. She lives, Master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Fal. Never, never; she would always say she could not abide Master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bona-roba. Doth she hold her own well?

Fal. Old, old, Master Shallow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old; certain she's old; and had Robin Nightwork, by old Nightwork, before I came to Clement's-inn.

Sil. That's fifty-five year ago.

Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen that that this knight and I have seen!—Ha, Sir John, said I well?

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, Master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, Sir John, we have: our watchword was, Hem, boys!—Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner:—O, the days that we have seen!—come, come.

[Exeunt FAL., SHAL., and SIL.]

Bull. Good Master Corporal Bardolph, stand my friend; and here is four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hanged, sir, as go; and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care for mine own part, so much.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Moul. And, good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nobody to do anything about her when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself: you shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Fee. By my troth, I care not; a man can die but once; we owe God a death: I'll ne'er bear a base mind: an't be my destiny, so; an't be not, so no man's too good to serve his prince; and, let it go which way it will, he that dies this year is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.

Fee. Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

Re-enter FALSTAFF and Justices.

Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Four of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you:—I have three pound to free Mouldy and Bulcalf.

Fal. Go to; well. [have?]

Shal. Come, Sir John, which four will you Fal. Do you choose for me.

Shal. Marry, then,—Mouldy, Bulcalf, Feeble, and Shadow.

Fal. Mouldy and Bulcalf:—for you, Mouldy, stay at home till you are past service: and for your part, Bulcalf,—grow till you come unto it: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself wrong: they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, Master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thews, the stature, bulk, and big assemblance of a man! Give me the spirit, Master Shallow.—Here's Wart;—you see what a ragged appearance it is: he shall charge you and discharge you, with the motion of a pewterer's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he that gobbets on the brewer's bucket. And thus same half-faced fellow, Shadow,—give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. And, for a retreat,—how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's tailor, run off! O, give me the spare man, and spare me the great ones.—Put me a caliver into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold, Wart, traverse; thus, thus, thus.

Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So:—very well:—go to:—very good:—exceeding good.—O, give me always a little, lean, old, chapped, bald shot.—Well said, i'faith, Wart; thou'rt a good scab: hold, there's a tester for thee.

Shal. He is not his craft's-master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end Green, —when I lay at Clement's-inn,—I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show,—there was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about, and come you in and come you in: rah, tah, tah, would he say; bounce would he say; and away again would he go, and again would he come:—I shall never see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellows will do well, Master Shallow.—God keep you, Master Silence: I will not use many words with you.—Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to-night.—Bardolph, give the soldiers coats.

Shal. Sir John, heaven bless you, and prosper your affairs, and send us peace! as you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure I will with you to the court.

Fal. 'Fore God, I would you would, Master Shallow.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke at a word. Fare you well. [Exeunt SHAL. and SIL.]

Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. On, Bardolph; lead the men away. [Exeunt BAR-

DOLPH, Recruits, &c.]. As I return, I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of Justice Shallow. Lord, Lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbull Street, and every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's-inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastical^{ly} carved upon it with a knife: he was so forlorn that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible: he was the very genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him mandrake: he came ever in the rearward of the fashion; and sung those tunes to the overscutched huswives that he heard the carmen whistle, and sware they were his fancies or his good-nights. And now is this Vice's dagger become a squire, and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard; and then he burst his head for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it, and told John of Gaunt he beat his own name; for you might have thrust him and all his apparel into an eel-skin; the case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him, a court:—and now has he land and beeves. Well, I will be acquainted with him if I return; and it shall go hard but I will make him a philosopher's two stones to me, if the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason, in the law of nature, but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, MOWBRAY, HASTINGS, and others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis Gualtree Forest, an't shall please your grace.

Arch. Here stand, my lords; and send discoverers forth

To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'Tis well done.

My friends and brethern in these great affairs, I must acquaint you that I have receiv'd New-dated letters from Northumberland; Their cold intent, tenour, and substance, thus:—Here doth he wish his person, with such powers As might hold sortance with his quality, The which he could not levy; whereupon He is retir'd, to ripe his growing fortunes, To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers That your attempts may over-live the hazard And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Mowb. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground, And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news?

Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile, In goodly form comes on the enemy;

And, by the ground they hude, I judge their number

Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowb. The just proportion that we gave them out.

Let us sway on, and face them in the field.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here?

Mowb. I think it is my Lord of Westmoreland.

Enter WESTMORELAND.

West. Health and fair greeting from our general

The prince, Lord John and Duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my Lord of Westmoreland, in peace,

What doth concern your coming.

West. Then, my lord,

Unto your grace do I in chief address

The substance of my speech. If that rebellion

Came like itself, in base and abject routs,

Led on by bloody youth, guarded with rags,

And countenanc'd by boys and beggary,—

I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,

In his true, native, and most proper shape,

You, reverend father, and these noble lords,

Had not been here, to dress the ugly form

Of base and bloody insurrection

With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop,—

Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd;

Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd; [tutor'd;

Whose learning and good letters peace hath

Whose white investments figure innocence,

The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,—

Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself

Out of the speech of peace, that bears such

grace,

Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war;

Turning your books to greaves, your ink to

blood,

Your pens to lances, and your tongue divine

To a loud trumpet and a point of war?

Arch. Wherefore do I this?—so the question stands.

Briefly to this end:—we are all diseases'd;

And with our surfeiting and wanton hours

Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,

And we must bleed for it: of which disease

Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.

But, my most noble Lord of Westmoreland,

I take not on me here as a physician;

Nor do I, as an enemy to peace,

Troop in the throngs of military men;

But, rather, show awhile like fearful war,

To diet rank minds sick of happiness,

And purge the obstructions which begin to stop

Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.

I have in equal balance justly weigh'd

What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs

we suffer,

And find our griefs heavier than our offences.

We see which way the stream of time doth run,

And are enforc'd from our most quiet sphere

By the rough torrent of occasion;

And have the summary of all our griefs,

When time shall serve, to show in articles;

Which long ere this we offer'd to the king,

And might by no suit gain our audience:

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,

We are denied access unto his person [wrong.
Even by those men that most have done us
The dangers of the days but newly gone,—
Whose memory is written on the earth
With yet appearing blood,—and the examples
Of every minute's instance,—present now,—
Have put us in these ill-beseeming arms;
Not to break peace, or any branch of it,
But to establish here a peace indeed,
Concurring both in name and quality.

West. When ever yet was your appeal
dem'd;

Wherein have you been galled by the king;
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on
you;

That you should seal this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine,
And consecrate commotion's bitter edge?

Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth,

To brother born an household cruelty,
I make my quarrel in particular.

West. There is no need of any such redress;
Or if there were, it not belongs to you. [all

Mowb. Why not to him in part, and to us
That feel the bruises of the days before,
And suffer the condition of these times
To lay a heavy and unequal hand
Upon our honours?

West. O, my good Lord Mowbray.
Construe the times to their necessities,
And you shall say indeed, it is the time,
And not the king, that doth you injuries.
Yet, for your part, it not appears to me,
Either from the king or in the present time,
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on: were you not restor'd
To all the Duke of Norfolk's signories,
Your noble and right-well-remember'd father's?

Mowb. What thing, in honour, had my father
lost,

That need to be reviv'd and breath'd in me?
The king, that lov'd him, as the state stood
then,

Was, force perforce, compell'd to banish him,
And then that Henry Bolingbroke and he,—
Being mounted and both roused in their seats,
Their neighing couriers daring of the spur,
Their armed staves in charge, their beavers
down,

Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel,

And the loud trumpet blowing them together,— Then, then, when there was nothing could have stay'd

My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warder down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw;
Then threw he down himself, and all their lives
That by indictment and by dint of sword
Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.

West. You speak, Lord Mowbray, now you know not what.

The Earl of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant gentleman:
Who knows on whom fortune would then have smil'd?

But if your father had been victor there,
He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry:
For all the country, in a general voice,
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers and love

Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bless'd and grac'd indeed, more than the
king.

But this is mere digression from my purpose.—
Here come I from our princely general
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace
That he will give you audience; and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them,—everything set off
That might so much as think you enemies.

Mowb. But he hath forc'd us to compel this offer;

And it proceeds from policy, not love.

West. Mowbray, you overween to take it so;
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear:
For, lo! within a ken, our army lies:
Upon mine honour, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason will our hearts should be as good:
Say you not, then, our offer is compell'd.

Mowb. Well, by my will we shall admit no parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence:

A rotten case abides no handling. [sion,
Hast. Hath the Prince John a full commis-
In very ample virtue of his father,
To hear and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon?

West. That is intended in the general's name:

I muse you make so slight a question.

Arch. Then take, my Lord of Westmoreland,
this schedule,

For this contains our general grievances:
Each several article herein redress'd,
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinew'd to this action,
Acquitted by a true substantial form,
And present execution of our wills
To us and to our purposes consign'd,—
We come within our awful banks again,
And knit our powers to the arm of peace.

West. This will I show the general. Please you, lords,

In sight of both our battles we may meet;
And either end in peace,—which God so frame!—

Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.

Arch. My lord, we will do so.
[Exit WESTMORELAND.

Mowb. There is a thing within my bosom tells me

That no conditions of our peace can stand.

Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace

Upon such large terms and so absolute
As our conditions shall consist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

Mowb. Ay, but our valuation shall be such,
That every slight and false-derived cause,

Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton reason,
Shall to the king taste of this action;
That, were our royal faiths martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

Arch. No, no, my lord. Note this,—the king is weary

Of dainty and such picking grievances:
For he hath found, to end one doubt by death
Revives two greater in the heirs of life;
And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,
And keep no tell-tale to his memory,
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance: for full well he knows
He cannot so precisely weed this land
As his misdoings present occasion:

His foes are so enrooted with his friends
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend.
So that this land, like an offensive wife
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up.
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution.

Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement:
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Arch. 'Tis very true:
And therefore be assur'd, my good lord marshal,
If we do now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.

Mowb. Be it so,
Here is return'd my Lord of Westmoreland.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

West. The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship
To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies?

Mowb. Your grace of York, in God's name, then, set forward.

Arch. Before, and greet his grace:—my lord,
we come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter, from one side, MOWBRAY, the ARCH-BISHOP, HASTINGS, and others: from the other side, PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, WESTMORELAND, Officers and Attendants.

P. John. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray:

Good-day to you, gentle lord archbishop;
And so to you, Lord Hastings,—and to all.—
My Lord of York, it better show'd with you
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text,
Than now to see you here an iron man.
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword, and life to death.
That man that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
Alack, what mischiefs might he set abroad

In shadow of such greatness! With you, lord
bishop,

It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken
How deep you were within the books of God?
To us the speaker in his parliament;
To us the imagin'd voice of God himself;
The very opener and intelligencer
Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven,
And our dull workings. O, who shall believe
But you misuse the reverence of your place,
Employ the countenance and grace of heaven,
As a false favourite doth his prince's name,
In deeds dishonourable? You have taken up,
Under the counterfeited seal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father,
And both against the peace of heaven and him
Have here up-swarm'd them.

Arch. Good my Lord of Lancaster,

I am not here against your father's peace;
But as I told my lord of Westmoreland,
The time misorder'd doth, in common sense,
Crowd us and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
The parcels and particulars of our grief,—
The which hath been with scorn show'd from the court,—

Whereon this Hydra son of war is born;
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleep

With grant of our most just and right desires,
And true obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty. [tunes]

Mowb. If not, we ready are to try our forto the last man.

Hast. And though we here fall down
We have supplies to second our attempt:
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them;
And so success of mischief shall be born,
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up
Whiles England shall have generation.

P. John. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow,
To sound the bottom of the after-times.

West. Pleaseth your grace to answer them directly,

How far-forth you do like their articles.

P. John. I like them all, and do allow them
well;

And swear here, by the honour of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning and authority.—
My lord; these griefs shall be with speed redress'd; [you]

Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please Discharge your powers unto their several counties,

As we will ours; and here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these re-dresses. [word:]

P. John. I give it you, and will maintain my
And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

Hast. Go, captain [to an Officer], and deliver to the army [part:]

This news of peace; let them have pay, and I know it will well please them. Hie thee, captain. [Exit Officer.]

Arch. To you, my noble Lord of Westmoreland. [what pains]

West. I pledge your grace; and, if you knew I have bestow'd to breed this present peace, You would drink freely: but my love to you Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.—

Health to my lord and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;

For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

Arch. Against ill chances men are ever merry;

But heaviness foreruns the good event.

West. Therefore be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow [morrow]

Serves to say thus.—Some good thing comes to—

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true. [Shouts within.]

P. John. The word of peace is render'd; hark, how they shout!

Mowb. This had been cheerful after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest; For then both parties nobly are subdued,

And neither party loser.

P. John. Go, my lord,

And let our army be discharged too.

[Exit WESTMORELAND.]

And, good my lord, so please you let your trains

March by us, that we may peruse the men

We should have cop'd withal.

Arch. Go, good Lord Hastings, And, ere they be dismissed, let them march by.

[Exit HASTINGS.]

P. John. I trust, my lords, we shall lie tonight together.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

West. The leaders, having charge from you to stand,

Will not go off until they hear you speak.

P. John. They know their duties.

Re-enter Hastings.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispers'd already: Like youthful steers unyok'd, they take their courses [up,

East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke Each hurries toward his home and sporting-place. [the which]

West. Good tidings, my Lord Hastings; for I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason:—

And you, lord archbishop,—and you, Lord Mowbray.—

Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

P. John. I pawn'd thee none: I promis'd you redress of these same grievances

Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honour,

I will perform with a most Christian care.

But for you, rebels,—look to taste the due Meet for rebellion and such acts as yours.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence, Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.—

Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd stray: God, and not we, hath safely fought to-day.—

Some guard these traitors to the block of death, Treason's true bed and yielder-up of breath.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another part of the Forest.

Alarums: excursions. Enter FALSTAFF and COLEVILLE, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you, and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Coleville of the dale.

Fal. Well, then, Coleville is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the dale: Coleville shall be still your name, a traitor your degree, and the duncheon your dale,—a dale deep enough; so shall you be still Coleville of the dale.

Cole. Are not you Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, whoe'er I am. Do ye yield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death; therefore rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think you are Sir John Falstaff; and in that thought yield me.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine; and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of any indifferency, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: my womb, my womb, my womb undoes me.—Here comes our general.

Enter PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, WESTMORELAND, and others.

P. John. The heat is past, follow no farther now:—

Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.

[Exit WESTMORELAND.]

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while?

When everything is ended, then you come: These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life, One time or other break some gallows' back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet but rebuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility; I have foundered nine-score and odd posts; and here, travel tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the dale, a most furious knight and valorous enemy. But what of that? he saw me, and yielded; that I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome,—I came, saw, and overcame.

P. John. It was more of his courtesy than your deservng.

Fal. I know not:—here he is, and here I yield him; and I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or, by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it, Coleville kissing my foot: to the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all show like gilt two-pences to me, and I, in the clear sky of fame, o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the cinders of the element, which show like pins' heads to her, believe not the word of the noble: therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

P. John. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine, then.

P. John. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

P. John. Is thy name Coleville?

Cole. It is, my lord.

P. John. A famous rebel art thou, Coleville.

Fal. And a famous true subject took him.

Cole. I am, my lord, but as my betters are. That led me hither: had they been rul'd by me, You should have won them dearer than you have.

Fal. I know not how they sold themselves: but thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away gratis; and I thank thee for thee.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

P. John. Now, have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made, and execution stay'd.

P. John. Send Coleville, with his confederates,

To York, to present execution:—[sure.
Blunt, lead him hence; and see you guard him
Exeunt some with COLEVILLE.

And now despatch we toward the court, my lords.

I hear the king, my father, is sore sick:
Our news shall go before us to his majesty,—
Which, cousin, you shall bear,—to comfort him;
And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go [court,

Through Glostershire: and, when you come to Stand, my good lord, pray, in your good report.

P. John. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition,

Shall better speak of you than you deserve.
[Exeunt all but FAL.

Fal. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better than your dukedom. Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me; nor a man cannot make him laugh;—but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof; for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness; and then, when they marry, they get wenches: they are generally fools and cowards;—which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherris-sack hath a twofold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish and dull and crudy vapours which environ it; makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which delivered o'er to the voice,—the tongue,—which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is,—the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme: it illumineth the face; which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm; and then the vital commoners and inland petty spirits muster me all to their captain, the heart, who, great and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage: and this valour comes of sherris. So that skill in the weapon is nothing without sack, for that sets it a-work; and learning, a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil till sack commences it and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it that Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them should be,—to forswear thin potations, and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter BARDOLPH.

How now, Bardolph!

Bard. The army is discharged all, and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I'll through Glostershire: and there will I visit Master Robert Shallow, Esquire: I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—WESTMINSTER. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, PRINCE HUMPHREY, WARWICK, and others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if God doth give successful end

To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Our navy is address'd, our power collected,
Our substitutes in absence well invested,
And everything lies level to our wish:
Only, we want a little personal strength;
And pause us till these rebels, now afoot,
Come underneath the yoke of government.

War. Both which we doubt not but your majesty shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Gloster, Where is the prince your brother?

P. Humph. I think he's gone to hunt, my lord, at Windsor.

K. Hen. And how accompanied?

P. Humph. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord, he is in presence here.

Cl. What would my lord and father?

K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?

He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him;
Thou hast a better place in his affection
Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy;
And noble offices thou mayest effect
Of meditation, after I am dead,
Between his greatness and thy other brethren:
Therefore omit him not; blunt not his love,
Nor lose the good advantage of his grace
By seeming cold or careless of his will;
For he is gracious if he be observ'd:
He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed in the spring of day.
His temper, therefore, must be well observ'd:
Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth;
But, being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Learn this, Thomas,

And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood,
Mingled with venom of suggestion,—
As, force perforce, the age will pour it in,— Shall never leak, though it do work as strong
As acanition or rash gunpowder. [love.]

Cla. I shall observe him with all care and

K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him, Thomas? [London.]

Cla. He is not there to-day; he dines in
K. Hen. And how accompanied? canst thou tell that?

Cla. With Poins, and other his continual followers.

K. Hen. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;

And he, the noble image of my youth,
Is overspread with them: therefore my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death:
The blood weeps from my heart when I do shape,

In forms imaginary, the unguided days
And rotten times that you shall look upon
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.
For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
When means and lavish manners meet together,
O, with what wings shall his affections fly
Towards fronting peril and oppos'd decay!

Wor. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite:

The prince but studies his companions
Like a strange tongue; wherein, to gain the language,

'Tis needful that the most immodest word
Be look'd upon and learn'd; which once attain'd,
Your highness knows, comes to no further use
But to be known and hated. So, like gross terms,

The prince will, in the perfectness of time,
Cast off his followers; and their memory
Shall as a pattern or a measure live,
By which his grace must mete the lives of others,

Turning past evils to advantages.

K. Hen. 'Tis seldom when the bee doth leave her comb
In the dead carrion,—

Enter WESTMORELAND.

Who's here? Westmoreland.

West. Health to my sovereign, and new happiness

Added to that that I am to deliver! [hand:
Prince John, your son, doth kiss your grace's
Mowbray, the Bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all,
Are brought to the correction of your law;
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheathed,
But peace puts forth her olive everywhere:
The manner how this action hath been borne
Here at more leisure may your highness read,
With every course in his particular.

K. Hen. O, Westmoreland, thou art a summer bird,

Which ever in the haunch of winter sings
The lifting-up of day. Look, here's more news.

Enter HARCOURT

Har. From enemies heaven keep your majesty;

And, when they stand against you, may they fall

As those that I am come to tell you of!
The Earl Northumberland and the Lord Bardolph,

With a great power of English and of Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown:
The manner and true order of the fight
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich,

That have abundance, and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news;
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy:—
O me! come near me, now I am much ill.

[Swoons.]

P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty!

Cla. O my royal father!

West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself, look up.

War. Be patient, princes; you do know, these fits

Are with his highness very ordinary. [well.
Stand from him, give him air; he'll straight be

Cla. No, no: he cannot long hold out these pangs:

The incessant care and labour of his mind
Hath wrought the mure, that should confine it in, [out.]

So thin, that life looks through, and will break
P. Humph. The people fear me; for they do observe

Unfather'd heirs and loathly births of nature:
The seasons change their manners, as the year
Had found some months asleep, and leaped them over.

Cla. The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between,
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,

Say it did so a little time before [died].
That our great grandsire, Edward, sick'd and War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers. [end.]

P. Humph. This apoplexy will certain be his K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence

Into some other chamber: softly, pray.
[They convey the KING into an inner part of the room, and place him on a bed.]

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;
Unless some dull and favourable hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.
K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow
here.

Cla. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.
War. Less noise, less noise!

Enter PRINCE HENRY.

P. Hen. Who saw the Duke of Clarence?
Cla. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

P. Hen. How now! rain within doors, and none abroad!

How doth the king?

P. Humph. Exceeding ill.

P. Hen. Heard he the good news yet?
Tell it him. [sing it]

P. Humph. He alter'd much upon the hear-
P. Hen. If he be sick

With joy, he will recover without physic.
War. Not so much noise, my lords;—sweet prince, speak low;

The king your father is dispos'd to sleep.
Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.

War. Will't please your grace to go along with us?

P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the king. [Exeunt all but P. HENRY.]
Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night!—sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound and half so deeply sweet
As he whose brow with homely biggin bound SnORES out the watch of night. O majesty!
When thou dost punch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armour worn in heat of day
That scalds with safety. By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather which stirs not:
Did he suspire, that light and weightless down Perforce must move.—My gracious lord! my father!—

This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep
That from this golden rigol hath divorc'd
So many English kings. Thy due from me
Is tears and heavy sorrows of the blood,
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness
Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously:
My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Lo, here it sits,—

[Putting it on his head.]
Which God shall guard: and put the world's whole strength

Into one giant arm, it shall not force
This lineal honour from me: this from thee
Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me. [Exit.]

K. Hen. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!

Re-enter WARWICK and the rest.

Cla. Doth the king call?
War. What would your majesty? how fares your grace? [my lords?]

K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, Cla. We left the prince my brother here, my liege,

Who undertook to sit and watch by you.
K. Hen. The Prince of Wales! Where is he? let me see him:

He is not here.
War. This door is open; he is gone this way.
P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.

K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?

War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.

K. Hen. The prince hath ta'en it hence:— go, seek him out.

Is he hasty that he doth suppose
My sleep my death?— [hither.]
Find him, my Lord of Warwick; chide him
[Exit WARWICK.]

This part of his conjoins with my disease,
And helps to end me.—See, sons, what things you are!

How quickly nature falls into revolt
When gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry;
For this they have engrossed and pil'd up
The canker'd heaps of strange-achieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises:
When, like the bee, tolling from every flower
The virtuous sweets, [pack'd,]
Our things with wax, our mouths with honey
We bring it to the hive: and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the ending father.

Re-enter Warwick.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long
Till his friend sickness hath determin'd me?

War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room,

Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;
With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow,
That tyranny, which never quaff'd but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.

K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away
the crown?

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY

Lo, where he comes.—Come hither to me;
Harry,—

Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.
[Exeunt CLAR., P. HUMPH., LORDS, &c.]

P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak
again.

K. Henry. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought:

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair

That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honours

Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.

Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind
That it will quickly drop: my day is dim. [hours,
Thou hast stolen that which, after some few
Were thine without offence; and at my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:

Thy life did manifest thou lov'dst me not,
And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it.
Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life.

What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then, get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself;
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear,
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.

Let all the tears that should bedew my ears
Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head:

Only compound me with forgotten dust;
Give that which gave thee life unto the worms.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form:—
Harry the fifth is crown'd:—up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors,
hence!

And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness! [scum:
Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your
Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance,
Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?

Be happy, he will trouble you no more;
England shall double-gild his treble guilt,— England shall give him office, honour, might;
For the fifth Harry from curb'd license plucks
The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
Shall flesh his tooth in every innocent.

O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?

O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants?

P. Hen. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears, [Kneeling.

The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke
Ere you with grief had spoke and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And He that wears the crown immortally
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more Than as your honour and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,—
Which my most inward and true dutiful spirit
Teacheth,—this prostrate and exterior bending!
God witness with me, when I here came in,
And found no course of breath within your majesty,

How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
O, let me in my present wildness die,
And never live to show the incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed!
Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,—
And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,—
I spake unto the crown as having sense,
And thus upbraided it: The care on thee de- pending

*Hath fed upon the body of my father;
Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold:
Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,
Preserving life in medicine potable; [noun'd,
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most re-Hast eat thy bearer up. Thus, my most royal
liege,*

Accusing it, I put it on my head,
To try with it,—as with an enemy
That had before my face murder'd my father,—
The quarrel of a true inheritor.
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;
If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
Did with the least affection of a welcome
Give entertainment to the might of it,
Let God for ever keep it from my head,
And make me as the poorest vassal is,
That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!

K. Hen. O my son,
God put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou mightst win the more thy father's
love,

Pleading so wisely in excuse of it!
Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed;
And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my son,
By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
Better opinion, better confirmation;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. It seem'd in me
But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand;
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances;
Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed,
Wounding supposed peace: all these bold fears
Thou see'st with peril I have answered;
For all my reign hath been but as a scene
Acting that argument: and now my death
Changes the mode; for what in me was purchas'd,

Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort;
So thou the garland wear'st successively.

Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,

Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green;

And all my friends, which thou must make thy
friends,

Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out;
By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd: which to avoid,
I cut them off; and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land,
Lest rest and lying still might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
Be it thy course to busy giddy minds [out,
With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne
May waste the memory of the former days.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
How I came by the crown, O God forgive;
And grant it may with thee in true peace live!

P. Hen. My gracious liege,
You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
Then plain and right must my possession be:

Which I with more than with a common pain
'Cainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

K. Hen. Look, look, here comes my John of Lancaster.

Enter PRINCE JOHN OF LANCASTER, WARWICK, Lords, and others.

P. John. Health, peace and happiness to my royal father!

K. Hen. Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John;

But health, alas, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare wither'd trunk: upon thy sight,
My worldly business makes a period.—
Where is my Lord of Warwick?

P. Hen. My Lord of Warwick!

K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong
Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?

War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.

K. Hen. Laud be to God!—even there my life must end.

It hath been prophesied to me many years,
I should not die but in Jerusalem;
Which vainly I suppos'd the Holy Land:—
But bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie;
In that Jerusalem shall Harry die. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—GLOUCESTERSHIRE. A Hall in SHALLOW'S House.

Enter SHALLOW, FALSTAFF, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pie, sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say!

Fal. You must excuse me, Master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused.—Why, Davy!

Enter DAVY.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see, Davy; let me see:—yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus:—those precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir,—shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook:—are there no young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is now the smith's note for shoeing and plough-irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and paid.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had:—and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. He shall answer it.—Some pigeons, Davy, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tny kickshaws, tell William cook. [sir?]

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night,

Shal. Yea, Davy, I will use him well: a friend? the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy:—about thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wincot against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor: that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship that he is a knave sir; but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to; I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit DAVY.] Where are you, Sir John? Come, come, come, off with your boots.—Give me your hand, Master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind Master Bardolph:—and welcome, my tall fellow [to the Page.]—Come, Sir John.

Fal. I'll follow you, good Master Robert Shallow. [Exit SHALLOW.] Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and Page.] If I were sawed into quanties, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermits' staves as Master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: they, by observing of him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving-man: their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society that they flock together in consent, like so many wild geese. If I had a suit to Master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with Master Shallow that no man could better command his servants. It is certain that either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter the wearing out of six fashions,—which is four terms, or two actions,—and he shall laugh without intervallums. O, it is much that a lie with a slight oath, and a jest with a sad brow, will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up!

Shal. [Within.] Sir John!

Fal. I come, Master Shallow; I come, Master Shallow. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—WESTMINSTER. A Room in the Palace.

Enter, severally, WARWICK and the Lord Chief-Justice.

War. How now, my lord chief-justice! whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king? [ended

War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all
Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature;
And to our purposes he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would his majesty had call'd me
with him:

The service that I truly did his life

Hath left me open to all injuries. [you not.

War. Indeed I think the young king loves

Ch. Just. I know he doth not; and do arm myself

To welcome the condition of the time;

Which cannot look more hideously upon me

Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead

Harry:

O that the living Harry had the temper

Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen!

How many nobles then should hold their places

That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort!

Ch. Just. O God, I fear all will be overturn'd.

Enter PRINCE JOHN, PRINCE HUMPHREY, CLARENCE, WESTMORELAND, and others.

P. John. Good-morrow, cousin Warwick, good-morrow.

P. Humph., Cla. Good-morrow, cousin.

P. John. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument
Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

P. John. Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy!

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier!

P. Humph. O, good my lord, you have lost a friend indeed;

And I dare swear you borrow not that face

Of seeming sorrow,—it is sure your own.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find,

You stand in coldest expectation:

I am the sorrier; would 'twere otherwise.

Cla. Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair;

Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honour,

Led by the impartial conduct of my soul;

And never shall you see that I will beg

A ragged and forestall'd remission.

If truth and upright innocence fail me,

I'll to the king my master that is dead,

And tell him who hath sent me after him.

War. Here comes the prince.

Enter KING HENRY V.

Ch. Just. Good-morrow; and God save your majesty! [majesty,

King. This new and gorgeous garment,
Sits not so easy on me as you think.—

Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear:

This is the English, not the Turkish court;

Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds,

But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers,

For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you:

Sorrow so royally in you appears

That I will deeply put the fashion on,

And wear it in my heart: why, then, be sad;

But entertain no more of it, good brothers,

Than a joint burden laid upon us all.

For me, by heaven, I bid you be assur'd,

I'll be your father and your brother too;

Let me but hear your love, I'll bear your cares;

Yet weep that Harry's dead, and so will I;

But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears,

By number, into hours of happiness.

P. John, &c. We hope no other from your majesty.

King. You all look strangely on me:—and you most, [To the Chief-Justice.

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.

Ch. Just. I am assur'd, if I be measur'd rightly.

Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

King. No!

How might a prince of my great hopes forget

So great indignities you laid upon me!

What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison

The immediate har of England! Was this easy?

May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your
father;

The image of his power lay then in me:

And, in the administration of his law,

Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth,

Your highness pleased to forget my place,

And majesty and power of law and justice,

The image of the king whom I presented,

And struck me in my very seat of judgment;

Whereon, as an offender to your father,

I gave bold way to my authority,

And did commit you. If the deed were ill,

Be you contented, wearing now the garland,

To have a son set your decrees at naught,

To pluck down justice from your awful bench,

To trip the course of law and blunt the sword

That guards the peace and safety of your person;

Nay, more, to spurn at your most royal image,

And mock your workings in a second body.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case
yours;

Be now the father, and propose a son;

Hear your own dignity so much profan'd,

See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,

Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd;

And then imagine me taking your part,

And, in your power, soft silencing your son:

After this cold consideration, sentence me;

And, as you are a king, speak in your state

What I have done that misbecame my place,

My person, or my liege's sovereignty.

King. You are right, justice, and you weigh this well;

Therefore still bear the balance and the sword:

And I do wish your honours may increase

Till you do live to see a son of mine

Offend you, and obey you, as I did.

So shall I live to speak my father's words

Happy am I, that have a man so bold,

That dares do justice on my proper son;

And not less happy, having such a son,

That would deliver up his greatness so

Into the hands of justice. You did commit me:

For which I do commit into your hand

The unstain'd sword that you have us'd to bear;

With this remembrance,—that you use the same

With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit
As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand;

You shall be as a father to my youth:
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine
ear;

And I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well-practic'd wise directions.—
And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you;—
My father is gone wild into his grave,
For in his tomb lie my affections;
And with his smit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectation of the world,
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
After my seeming. The tide of blood in me
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now:
Now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea,
Where it shall mingle with the state of floods,
And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
Now call we our high court of parliament:
And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel,
That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best-govern'd nation;
That war or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us;
In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.
[To the Lord Chief-Justice.]

Our coronation done, we will accite.
As I before remember'd, all our state:
And,—God consigning to my good intents,—
No prince nor peer shall have just cause to say,
God shorten Harry's happy life one day.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—GLOUCESTERSHIRE. The Garden of SHALLOW'S House.

Enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, SILENCE, BARDOLPH, the Page, and DAVY.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth:—come, cousin Silence:—and then to bed.

Fal. 'Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, Sir John:—marry, good air.—
Spread, Davy; spread, Davy: well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John:—by the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper:—a good varlet.
Now sit down, now sit down:—come, cousin.

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a,—we shall
Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer,
[Singing.]

And praise heaven for the merry year;
When flesh is cheap, and females dear,
And lusty lads roam here and there,
So merrily,

And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart!—Good Master
Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give Master Bardolph some wine,
Davy.

Davy. Sweet sir, sit [seating BARDOLPH and the Page at another table]; I'll be with you anon; most sweet sir, sit.—Master Page, good Master Page, sit.—Proface! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear; the heart's all. [Exit.]

Shal. Be merry, Master Bardolph;—and, my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;
[Singing.]

For women are shrews, both short and tall;
'Tis merry in hall when beards wag all,

And welcome merry shrove-tide.
Be merry, be merry, &c.

Fal. I did not think Master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who, I? I have been merry twice and once ere now.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats for you. [Setting them before BARD.]

Shal. Davy,—
Davy. Your worship?—I'll be with you straight [to BARD.]—A cup of wine, sir?

Sil. A cup of wine that's brisk and fine,
[Singing.]

And drink unto the leman mine;
And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well, said, Master Silence.

Sil. And we shall be merry;—now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, Master
Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come; [Singing.]
I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wastest anything, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart.—Welcome, my little tiny thief [to the Page]; and welcome indeed too.—I'll drink to Master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleroes about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,— Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together,—hal will you not, Master Bardolph?

Bard. Yea, sir, in a pottle-pot.

Shal. By God's figgins, I thank thee:—the knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that:
he will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry. [Knocking heard.] Look who's at door there, ho! who knocks?

[Exit DAVY.]
Fal. Why, now you have done me right.

[To SIL., who has drunk a bumper.]
Sil. Do me right, [Singing.]

And dub me knight:
Samingo.

Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why, then, say an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. An it please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court! let him come in.

Enter PISTOL,

How now, Pistol!

Pist. Sir John, God save you!

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good.—Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in the realm.

Sir. By'r lady, I think he be, but Goodman Puff of Barson.

Pist. Puff?

Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base!—Sir John, I am thy Pistol and thy friend, And helter-skelter have I rode to thee;

And tidings do I bring, and lucky joys, And golden times, and happy news of price.
Fal. I prythee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A foutra for the world and worldlings: I speak of Africa and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news?

Let King Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sir. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John.

[Singing.

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicons?

And shall good news be baffled?

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap.

Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why, then, lament, therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir—if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it there is but two ways; either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, bezonian? speak, or die.

Shal. Under King Harry.

Pist. Harry the fourth? or fifth?

Shal. Harry the fourth.

Pist. A foutra for thine office!—

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king; Harry the fifth's the man. I speak the truth: When Pistol lies, do this; and fig me, like The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. What! is the old king dead!

Pist. As nail in door: the things I speak are just.

Fal. Away, Bardolph! saddle my horse.—Master Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt in the land, 'tis thine.—Pistol, I will double charge thee with dignities.

Bard. O joyful day!

I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.
Pist. What, I do bring good news?

Fal. Carry Master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow, my Lord Shallow, be what thou wilt; I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots: we'll ride all night.—O sweet Pistol!—away, Bardolph! [Exit BARDOLPH.—Come, Pistol, utter more to me; and, withal, devise something to do thyself good.—Boot, boot, Master Shallow. I know the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been my friends; and woe unto my Lord Chief-Justice!

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also! Where is the life that late I led? say they: Why, here it is;—welcome this pleasant day!

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Street.

Enter Beadles, dragging in HOSTESS QUICKLY and DOLL TEARSHEET.

Host. No, thou arrant knave; I would I might die, that I might have thee hanged: thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

1 Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me, and she shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her: there hath been a man or two lately killed about her.

Doll. Nut-hook, nut-hook you lie. Come on; I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-visaged rascal, an the child I now go with do miscarry, thou hadst better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper-faced villain.

Host. O the Lord, that Sir John were come! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!

1 Bead. If it do, you shall have a dozen of cushions again; you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you, both go with me; for the man is dead that you and Pistol beat among you.

Doll. I'll tell thee what, thou thin man in a censor, I will have you as soundly swinged for this,—you blue-bottle rogue, you filthy famished corrector, if you be not swinged, I'll forswear half-kirtles.

1 Bead. Come, come, you she knight-errant, come.

Host. O God, that right should thus overcome might!

Well, of sufferance comes ease. [a justice.

Doll. Come, you rogue, come; bring me to Host. Ay, come, you starved bloodhound.

Doll. Goodman death, Goodman bones!

Host. Thou atomy, thou!

Doll. Come, you thin thing; come, you rascal.

1 Bead. Very well. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A public Place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms, strewing rushes.

1 Groom. More rushes, more rushes.

2 Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice.

1 Groom. It will be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation: despatch, despatch.

[Exeunt.

Enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and the Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, Master Robert Shallow, I will make the king do you grace: I will leap upon him, as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God bless thy lungs, good knight.

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me.—O, if I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you [to SHALLOW] But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to see him,—

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. It shows my earnestness of affection,—

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion,—

Shal. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me,—

Shal. It is most certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper idem, for absque hoc nihil est: 'tis all in every part.

Shal. 'Tis so, indeed.

Pist. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver,

And make thee rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, is in base durance and contagious prison; Haul'd thither

By most mechanical and dirty hand.—snake, Rouse up revenge from ebon den with fell Alecto's For Doll is in. Pistol speaks naught but truth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

(Shouts within, and the trumpets sound.)

Pist. There roar'd the sea, and trumpet—clangor sounds.

Enter the KING and his Train, the Chief-Justice among them.

Fal. God save thy grace, King Hal; my royal Hal!

Pist. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal imp of fame!

Fal. God save thee, my sweet boy! (man.)

King. My lord chief-justice, speak to that vain

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what 'tis you speak? (heart!)

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my

King. I know thee not, old man: fall to thy prayers;

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,

So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so profane;

But, being awake, I do despise my dream.

Make less thy body hence, and more thy grace;

Leave gormandizing; know the grave doth gape

For thee thrice wider than for other men.—

Reply not to me with a fool-born jest:

Presume not that I am the thing I was;

For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,

That I have turn'd away my former self;

So will I those that keep me company.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,

Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,

The tutor and the feeder of my riots:

Till then I banish thee, on pain of death,—

As I have done the rest of my misleaders,—

Not to come near our person by ten mile.

For competence of life I will allow you,

That lack of means enforce you not to evil:

And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,

We will, according to your strength and qualities, (lord,

Give you advancement.—Be it your charge, my

To see perform'd the tenor of our word.—

Set on. (Exeunt KING and his Train.)

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Yea, marry, Sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, Master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world. fear not your advancement; I will be the man yet that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot perceive how,—unless you give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a colour. (Sir John.)

Shal. A colour, I fear, that you will die in,

Fal. Fear no colours: go with me to dinner.

Come, Lieutenant Pistol;—come, Bardolph:—

I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter PRINCE JOHN, the Chief-Justice, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;

Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord,— (you soon.)

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear

Take them away. (contenta.)

Pist. Se fortuna mi tormenta, lo sperare mi

[Exeunt FAL., SHAL., PIST., BARD.,

Page, and Officers.]

P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king's:

He hath intent his wonted followers

Shall all be very well provided for;

But all are banish'd till their conversations

Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

P. John. The king hath call'd his parliament,

my lord.

Ch. Just. He hath.

P. John. He hath.

P. John. I will lay odds, that, ere this year expire,

We bear our civil swords and native fire

As far as France: I heard a bird so sing,

Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.

Come, will you hence? (Exeunt.)

EPILOGUE.—Spoken by a Dancer.

First my fear; then my court'sy; last my speech. My fear is, your displeasure; my court'sy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me: for what I have to say is of mine own making; and what, indeed, I should say will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture.—Be it known to you,—as it is very well,—I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this; which, if, like an ill venture, it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here I promised you I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment,—to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me: if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewoman, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John Falstaff in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France: where, for anything I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary, when my legs are too, I will bid you good-night: and so kneel down before you;—but, indeed, to pray for the queen.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. O for a Muse of fire, that would ascend
 The brightest heaven of invention!
 A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
 And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
 Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
 Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels,
 Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword,
 and fire, } all,
 Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles
 The flat unraised spirit that hath dar'd
 On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth

So great an object: can this cockpit hold
 The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
 Within this wooden O the very casques
 That did affright the air at Agincourt?
 O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
 Attest in little place a million;
 And let us, ciphers to this great accompt,
 On your imaginary forces work.
 Suppose within the girdle of these walls
 Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies,
 Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
 The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder:

Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts:
 Into a thousand parts divide one man,
 And make imaginary puissance; [them
 Think, when we talk of horses, that you see
 Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth;
 For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
 Carry them here and there; jumping o'er times,
 Turning the accomplishment of many years
 Into an hour-glass: for the which supply,
 Admit me Chorus to this history;
 Who, prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
 Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—LONDON. An Ante-chamber in the KING'S Palace.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY and the BISHOP of ELY.

Cant. My lord, I'll tell you,—that self bill is urg'd, [reign
 Which in the eleventh year of the last king's
 Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
 But that the scrambling and unquiet time
 Did push it out of further question. [now?
Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,

We lose the better half of our possession:
 For all the temporal lands, which men devout
 By testament have given to the church,
 Would they strip from us; being valu'd thus,—
 As much as would maintain, to the king's honour,

Full fifteen earls and fifteen hundred knights,
 Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
 And, to relief of lazars and weak age,
 Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
 A hundred alms-houses right well supplied;
 And to the coffers of the king, beside, [bill.
 A thousand pounds by the year: thus runs the
Ely. This would drink deep.

Cant. 'Twould drink the cup and all.

Ely. By what prevention? [gard.

Cant. The king is full of grace and fair re-

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.

The breath no sooner left his father's body
 But that his wildness, mortified in him,
 Seem'd to die too: yea, at that very moment,
 Consideration, like an angel, came,
 And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him,
 Leaving his body as a paradise,
 To envelop and contain celestial spirits.
 Never was such a sudden scholar made;
 Never came reformation in a flood,
 With such a heady current, scouring faults;
 Nor never Hydra-headed wilfulness
 So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
 As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity,
 And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
 You would desire the king were made a prelate:
 Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
 You would say, it hath been all-in-all his study:
 List his discourse of war, and you shall hear

A fearful battle render'd you in music:
 Turn him to any cause of policy,
 The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
 Familiar as his garter:—that, when he speaks,
 The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,
 And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
 To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences;
 So that the art and practice part of life
 Must be the mistress of this theoretic: [it,
 Which is a wonder how his grace should glean
 Since his addiction was to courses vain;
 His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
 His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports;
 And never noted in him any study,
 Any retirement, any sequestration
 From open haunts and popularity. [nettle,
Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the
 And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best
 Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:
 And so the prince obscur'd his contemplation
 Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
 Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
 Unseen, yet cressive in his faculty.

Cant. It must be so, for miracles are ceas'd;
 And therefore we must needs admit the means
 How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,
 How now for mitigation of this bill
 Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty
 Incline to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent;
 Or, rather, swaying more upon our part
 Than cherishing the exhibitors against us:
 For I have made an offer to his majesty,—
 Upon our spiritual convocation,
 And in regard of causes now in hand
 Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
 As touching France,—to give a greater sum
 Than ever at one time the clergy yet
 Did to his predecessors part withal. [lord?

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty;
 Save that there was not time enough to hear,—
 As, I perceiv'd, his grace would fain have done,—

The severals and unhidden passages
 Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms,
 And, generally, to the crown and seat of France,
 Deriv'd from Edward, his great-grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off? [stant

Cant. The French ambassador upon that in-Crav'd audience: and the hour, I think, is come
 To give him hearing: is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.

Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy;
 Which I could, with a ready guess, declare
 Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you; and I long to hear it. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in the same.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?

Exe. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle.

West. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?

K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin; we would be
Before we hear him, of some things of weight,
That task our thoughts, concerning us and
France.

Enter the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY and BISHOP of ELY.

Cant. God and his angels guard your sacred throne,

And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.

My learned lord, we pray you to proceed,
And justly and religiously unfold
Why the law Salique, that they have in France,
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim:
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,

Or nicely charge your understanding soul
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth;
For God doth know how many, now in health,
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to:
Therefore take heed how you impawn our
person,

How you awake the sleeping sword of war:
We charge you, in the name of God, take heed;
For never two such kingdoms did contend
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops

Are every one a woe, a sore complaint
'Gainst him whose wrongs give edge unto the swords

That make such waste in brief mortality.
Under this conjuration, speak, my lord;
For we will hear, note, and believe in heart
That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd

As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign,— and you peers,

That owe yourselves, your lives, and services
To this imperial throne.—There is no bar

To make against your highness' claim to France
But thus, which they produce from Pharamond,—

*In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant,
No woman shall succeed in Salique land:*

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France, and Pharamond

The founder of this law and female bar.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm

That the land Salique is in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe;

Where Charles the Great, having subdu'd the Saxons,

There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women

For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish'd then this law,—to wit, no female

Should be inheritrix in Salique land:
Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,

Is at this day in Germany called Meisen.
Then doth it well appear, the Salique law

Was not devised for the realm of France:
Nor did the French possess the Salique land

Until four hundred one-and-twenty years

After defunction of King Pharamond,

Idly suppos'd the founder of this law;

Who died within the year of our redemption

Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the Great

Subdu'd the Saxons, and did seat the French

Beyond the river Sala, in the year

Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,

King Pepin, which deposed Childerick,

Did, as heir general, being descended

Of Blithild, which was daughter to King

Clothair,

Make claim and title to the crown of France.

Hugh Capet also,—who usurp'd the crown

Of Charles the Duke of Lorraine, sole heir male

Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,—

To fine his title with some show of truth,—

Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,—

Convey'd himself as heir to the Lady Lingare,

Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son

To Lous the emperor, and Lous the son

Of Charles the Great. Also King Louis the Tenth,

Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,

Could not keep quiet in his conscience,

Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied

The fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother,

Was lineal of the Lady Ermengare,

Daughter to Charles the foresaid Duke of Lorraine:

By the which marriage the line of Charles the

Was re-united to the Crown of France.

So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,

King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim,

King Louis his satisfaction, all appear

To hold in right and title of the female:

So do the kings of France unto this day;

Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law

To bar your highness claiming from the female;

And rather choose to hide them in a net

Than amply to imbar their crooked titles

Usurp'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. May I with right and conscience make this claim?

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sover-ein!

For in the book of Numbers is it writ,—

When the man dies, let the inheritance

Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,

Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag;

Look back unto your mighty ancestors:

Go, my dread lord, to your great-grandshire's

tomb,

From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,

And your great-uncle's, Edward the Black

Prince,

Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy,

Making defeat on the full power of France,

Whiles his most mighty father on a hill

Stood smiling to behold his lion's whelp

Forage in blood of French nobility.

O noble English, that could entertain

With half their forces the full pride of France,

And let another half stand laughing by,

All out of work and cold for action! [dead,

Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant

And with your puissant arm renew their feats:

You are their heir; you sit upon their throne;

The blood and courage that renowned them
Runs in your veins; and my thrice-pussant liege
Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

Exe. Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth

Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know your grace hath cause and means and might:—

So hath your highness; never king of England
Had nobles richer and more loyal subjects,
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,

And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Canf. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood and sword and fire to win your right:

In aid whereof we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors. [French,

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade the
But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
With all advantages. [reign,

Canf. They of those marches, gracious sove-
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,

But fear the main intentment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
For you shall read that my great-grandfather
Never went with his forces into France
But that the Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fullness of his force;
Galling the gleaned land with hot essays,
Girding with grievous siege castles and towns;
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.

Canf. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege;

For hear her but exemplified by herself:—
When all her chivalry hath been in France,
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended,
But, taken, and impounded as a stray,
The king of Scots; whom she did send to
France,

To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings,
And make her chronicle as rich with praise
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.

West. But there's a saying, very old and true,—

If that you will France win,

Then with Scotland first begin:

For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs;

Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and havoc more than she can eat.

Exe. It follows, then, the cat-must stay at home:

Yet that is but a curs'd necessity,
Since we have locks to safeguard necessities,

And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home;
For government, though high, and low, and lower,

Put into parts, doth keep in one consent;
Congruing in a full and natural close,
Like music.

Canf. Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavor in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience: for so work the honey bees;
Creatures that, by a rule in nature, teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king, and officers of sorts:
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home;
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad;
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds;
Which pillage they with merry march bring home

To the tent-royal of their emperor:
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold;
The civil citizens kneading up the honey;
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate;
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. I thus infer,—
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously:
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Fly to one mark;
As many several ways meet in one town;
As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea;
As many lines close in the dial's centre:
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege.

Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried, and our nation lose
The name of hardiness and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin. [Exit an Attendant.]
Now are we well resolv'd: and, by God's help
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe.
Or break it all to pieces: or there we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery
O'er France and all her almost kingly dukedoms,

Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless
mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for we hear

Your greeting is from him, not from the king.
1 Amb. May it please your majesty to give us leave

Freely to render what we have in charge;
 Or shall we sparingly show you far off
 The Dauphin's meaning and our embassy?

K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king;

Unto whose grace our passion is as subject
 As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons:
 Therefore with frank and with uncurbed plainness

Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

1 Amb. Thus, then, in few.

Your highness, lately sending into France,
 Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
 Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third.

In answer of which claim, the prince our master

France

That can be with a nimble galliard won;—
 You cannot revel into dukedoms there.

He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit,
 This tun of treasure, and, in lieu of this,
 Desires you let the dukedoms that you claim
 Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?

Exe. Tennis-balls, my liege.

K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant with us;

His present and your pains we thank you for:
 When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,

We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set
 Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
 Tell him he hath made a match with such a wrangler

That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
 With chases. And we understand him well,
 How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
 Not measuring what use we made of them.
 We never valu'd this poor seat of England;
 And therefore, living hence, did give ourself
 To barbarous license; as 'tis ever common
 That men are merriest when they are from home.

But tell the Dauphin, I will keep my state;
 Be like a king, and show my sail of greatness,
 When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
 For that I have laid by my majesty,
 And plodded like a man for working-days;
 But I will rise there with so full a glory
 That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
 Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
 And tell the present prince this mock of his
 Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones; and his soul
 Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance

That shall fly with them; for many a thousand
 Shall thus his mock mock out of their dear husbands;

Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles
 And some are yet ungotten and unborn [scorn].
 That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's
 But this lies all within the will of God,
 To whom I do appeal; and in whose name,
 Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,

To venge me as I may, and to put forth
 My rightful hand in a well-hallow'd cause.
 So, get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin
 His jest will savour but of shallow wit, [it.—
 When thousands weep, more than did laugh at Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.] [Exeunt Ambassadors.]

Exe. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.

Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour
 That may give furtherance to our expedition;
 For we have now no thought in us but France,
 Save those to God, that run before our business.
 Therefore let our proportions for these wars
 Be soon collected, and all things thought upon
 That may with reasonable swiftness add
 More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
 We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.
 Therefore let every man now task his thought,
 That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now all the youth of England are on fire,

And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies:
 Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought
 Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
 They sell the pasture now to buy the horse;
 Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
 With winged heels, as English Mercuries,
 For now sits Expectation in the air;
 And hides a sword from hilts unto the point
 With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronets,
 Promis'd to Harry and his followers.
 The French, advis'd by good intelligence
 Of this most dreadful preparation,
 Shake in their fear; and with pale policy
 Seek to divert the English purposes.

O England!—model to thy inward greatness,
 Like little body with a mighty heart,— What mightiest thou do, that honour would thee do,

Were all thy children kind and natural! [out
 But see thy fault! France hath in thee found
 A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills

With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted
 men,—

One, Richard Earl of Cambridge; and the Henry Lord Scroop of Masham; and the third,
 Sir Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland,—
 Have, for the guilt of France,—O guilt indeed!—
 Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France;
 And by their hands this grace of kings must die,—

If hell and treason hold their promises,— Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.

Linger your patience on; and well digest
 The abuse of distance, while we force a play.
 The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
 The king is set from London; and the scene
 Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton,—
 There is the play-house now, there must you sit:

And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
 And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
 To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
 We'll not offend one stomach with our play.

But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.

[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—LONDON. Before the Boar's Head
Tavern, Eastcheap.

Enter, severally, NYM and BARDOLPH.

Bard. Well met, Corporal Nym.

Nym. Good-morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph.
Bard. What, are Ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little;
but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles,
—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight;
but I will wink, and hold out mine iron: it is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese: and it will endure cold as another man's sword will, and there's the humour of it.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good Corporal Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and, certainly, she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell:—things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and, some say, knives have edges. It must be as it may:
though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Bard. Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife:—good corporal, be patient here.

Enter PISTOL and Hostess.

How now, mine host Pistol!

Pist. Base like, call'st thou me host?
Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Host. No, by my troth, not long; for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight. [NYM draws his sword.]
O well-a-day, Lady, if he be not drawn! now we shall see wilful adultery and murder committed.

Bard. Good lieutenant,—good corporal,— offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish!

Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-eard'd cur of Iceland!

Host. Good Corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus. [Sheathing his sword.]

Pist. Solus, egregious dog? O viper vile!
The solus in thy most marvellous face;
The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw,
perdy;

And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retort the solus in thy bowels;
For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up,

And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason, you cannot con-jure me. I have an humour to knock you indifferently well. If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O braggart vile and damned furious wight!

The grave doth gape and doting death is near;
Therefore exhale. [PISTOL and NYM draw.]

Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke I'll run him up to the hilt, as I am a soldier. [Draws.]

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate.

Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give:
Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat one time or other,
in fair terms: that is the humour of it.

Pist. Coupe la gorge! That's the word.—I thee defy again.

O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?

No; to the spital go,
And from the powdering tub of infamy
Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind,
Doll Tearsheet she by name, and her espouse
I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly
For the only she; and—Pauca, there's enough.
Go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master,—and you, hostess:—he is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolph, put thy nose between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan. Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue.

Host. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days: the king has killed his heart.—Good husband, come home presently. [Exeunt Hostess and Boy.]

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends?
We must to France together: why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. Let floods o'erswell and fiends for food howl on!

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. Base is the slave that pays.

Nym. That now I will have: that's the humour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound: push home. [PISTOL and NYM draw.]

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why, then, be enemies with me too. Pr'ythee, put up.

Nym. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay;

And liquor likewise will I give to thee,
And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:

I'll live by Nym and Nym shall live by me;—
Is not this just?—for I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.
Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?

Pist. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well, then, that's the humour of it.

Re-enter Hostess.

Host. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John. Ah, poor heart! he is so shaken of a burning quotidian tertian that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight; that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right;
His heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king; but it must be as it may; he passes some humours and careers.

Pist. Let us condole the knight; for, lamb-kins, we will live. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—SOUTHAMPTON. A Council Chamber.

Enter EXETER, BEDFORD, and WESTMORE-LAND.

Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold, to trust
these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves!

As if allegiance in their bosom sat,
Crowned with faith and constant loyalty.

Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend,

By interception which they dream not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,

Whom he hath dull'd and cloy'd with gracious
favours,—

That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell
His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Trumpet sounds. Enter KING HENRY, SCROOP, CAMBRIDGE, GREY, Lords, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.

My Lord of Cambridge,—and my kind Lord of Masham,—

[thoughts:
And you, my gentle knight,—give me your
Think you not that the powers we bear with us
Will cut their passage through the force of
France,

Doing the execution and the act
For which we have in head assembled them?

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.

[persuaded
K. Hen. I doubt not that; since we are well
We carry not a heart with us from hence
That grows not in a fair consent with ours,
Nor leave not one behind that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was monarch better fear'd and lov'd

[subject
Than is your majesty: there's not, I think, a

That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. True: those that were your father's enemies

[you
Have steep'd their galls in honey, and do serve
With hearts create of duty and of zeal.

K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thankfulness;

And shall forget the office of our hand
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit
According to the weight and worthiness.

Scroop. So service shall with steel'd sinews toil,

And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.

K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,

That rail'd against our person: we consider

It was excess of wine that set him on;

And on his more advice we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish'd, sovereign; lest example

Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.

K. Hen. O, let us yet be merciful. [too.

Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish Grey. Sir, you show great mercy if you give him life,

After the taste of much correction. [of me

K. Hen. Alas, your too much love and care
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch!

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch

our eye [digested

When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and

Appear before us?—We'll yet enlarge that man,

Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey, in their dear care

And tender preservation of our person,
Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes:

Who are the late commissioners?

Cam. I one, my lord:

Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scroop. So did you me, my liege.

Grey. And me, my royal sovereign.

K. Hen. Then, Richard Earl of Cambridge,

there is yours;— [sir knight,

There yours, Lord Scroop of Masham;—and

Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:—

Read them, and know I know your worthiness.— [eter,—

My Lord of Westmoreland,—and uncle Ex-

We will aboard to-night.—Why, how now, gentlemen!

What see you in those papers, that you lose

So much complexion?—Look ye, how they change! [there

Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you

That hath so cowarded and chas'd your blood

Out of appearance?

Cam. I do confess my fault,

And do submit me to your highness' mercy.

Grey, Scroop. To which we all appeal.

K. Hen. The mercy that was quick in us but late

By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:

You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;

For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,

As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.—

See you, my princes and my noble peers,

These English monsters! My Lord of Cambridge here,—

You know how apt our love was to accord
To furnish him with all appurtenments
Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd,
And sworn unto the practices of France,
To kill us here in Hampton: to the which
This knight, no less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn.—

But, O, [cruel,
What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop? thou
Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature!
Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
That almost mightst have coin'd me into gold, Wouldst thou have practis'd on me for thy use,—

May it be possible that foreign hire
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil
That might annoy my finger? 'tis so strange
That, though the truth of it stands off as gross
As black from white, my eye will scarcely see it.
Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause
That admiration did not whoop at them:
But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason and on murder:
And whatsoever cunning fiend it was
That wrought upon thee so preposterously
Hath got the voice in hell for excellence:
And other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation [fetch'd
With patches, colours, and with forms being
From glistering semblances of piety;
But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do
treason,

Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.
If that same demon that hath gull'd thee thus
Should with his lion gait walk the whole world,
He might return to vasty Tartar back,
And tell the legions, *I can never win
A soul so easy as that Englishman's.*
O, how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! Show men dutiful?
Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: seem they religious?
Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet;
Free from gross passion, or of mirth or anger;
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood;
Garish'd and deck'd in modest complement;
Not working with the eye without the ear,
And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
Such and so finely boited didst thou seem:
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
To mark the full-fraught man and best indu'd
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man.—Their faults are open:
Arrest them to the answer of the law;—
And God acquit them of their practices!

Exe. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard Earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry Lord Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland.

Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discovered;

And I repent my fault more than my death;
Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me,—the gold of France did not seduce;

Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention;
Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoice,
Beseeching God and you to pardon me.

Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice
At the discovery of most dangerous treason
Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
Prevented from a damned enterprise:

My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.
K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.

You have conspir'd against our royal person, Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers

Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death;
Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,

His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt,
And his whole kingdom into desolation.

Touching our person seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws

We do deliver you. Get you, therefore, hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death:
The taste whereof God of his mercy give you

Patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences!—Bear them hence.

[Exeunt Conspirators, guarded.]

Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof
Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.

We doubt not of a fair and lucky war:
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason, lurking in our way

To hinder our beginnings, we doubt not now
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then, forth, dear countrymen: let us deliver

Our puissiance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.

Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not king of France.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—LONDON. The Hostess's House in Eastcheap.

Enter PISTOL, Hostess, NYM, BARDOLPH, and Boy.

Host. Pr'ythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.—
Bardolph, be blithe;—Nym, rouse thy vaunting [is dead,
veins;—

Boy, bristle thy courage up;—for Falstaff he
And we must yearn therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, wheresome'er he is, either in heaven or in hell!

Host. Nay, sure, he's not in hell: he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom. 'A made a finer end, and went away, an it had been any christom child; 'a parted even just between twelve and one, even at the turning o' the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his fingers' ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and 'a babbled of green fields. How now, Sir John! quoth I: what, man! be o' good cheer. So 'a cried out—God, God! three or four times. Now I, to comfort him, bid him 'a should not think of God; I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say he cried out of sack.

Host. Ay, that 'a did.

Bard. And of women.

Host. Nay, that 'a did not.

Boy. Yes, that 'a did; and said they were devils incarnate.

Host. 'A could never abide carnation; 'twas a colour he never liked.

Boy. 'A said once, the devil would have him about women.

Host. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women; but then he was rheumatic, and talked of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose, and 'a said it was a black soul burning in hell?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton. [thy lips.]

Pist. Come, let's away.—My love, give me Look to my chattels and my moveables:

Let senses rule; the word is, Pitch and pay; Trust none; [cakes,

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are water—And holdfast is the only dog, my duck: Therefore cave to be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystals.—Yoke-fellows in arms, Let us to France; like horse-leeches, my boys, To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

Boy. And that is but unwholesome food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her.]

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but, adieu.

Pist. Let housewifery appear: keep close, I thee command.

Host. Farewell; adieu. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—FRANCE. A Room in the FRENCH KING'S Palace.

Flourish. Enter the FRENCH KING, attended; the DAUPHIN, the DUKE of BURGUNDY; the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us;

And more than carefully it us concerns

To answer royally in our defences.

Therefore the Dukes of Berri and of Bretagne, Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth,—And you, Prince Dauphin,—with all swift despatch,

To line and new repair our towns of war With men of courage and with means defendant; For England his approaches makes as fierce As waters to the sucking of a gulf.

It fits us, then, to be as provident As fear may teach us, out of late examples Left by the fatal and neglected English Upon our fields.

Dau. My most redoubted father, It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe; For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,— Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question,—

But that defences, musters, preparations, Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected, As were a war in expectation.

Therefore, I say, 'tis meet we all go forth To view the sick and feeble parts of France: And let us do it with no show of fear; No, with no more than if we heard that England Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance: For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd, Her sceptre so fantastically borne By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth, That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, Prince Dauphin! You are too much mistaken in this king: Question your grace the late ambassadors,— With what great state he heard their embassy, How well supplied with noble counsellors, How modest in exception, and withal How terrible in constant resolution,— And you shall find his vanities forespent Where but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly;

As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots That shall first spring and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable; But though we think it so, it is no matter: In cases of defence 'tis best to weigh The enemy more mighty than he seems: So the proportions of defence are fill'd; Which, of a weak and niggardly projection, Doth like a miser spoil his coat with scanting A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we King Harry strong; And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him.

The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us; And he is bred out of that bloody strain That haunted us in our familiar paths: Witness our too-much memorable shame When Cressy battle fatally was struck, And all our princes captiv'd by the hand Of that black name, Edward Black Prince of Wales; [standing, Whiles that his mountain sire,—on mountain Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,— Saw his heroic seed, and smil'd to see him, Mangle the work of nature, and deface The patterns that by God and by French fathers Had twenty years been made. This is a stem Of that victorious stock; and let us fear The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Harry King of England Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience.
Go, and bring them.

[Exeunt Mess. and certain Lords.]

You see this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dau. Turn head and stop pursuit; for coward dogs

Most spend their mouths when what they seem Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short; and let them know
Of what a monarchy you are the head:
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with EXETER and Train.

Fr. King. From our brother England?

Exe. From him; and thus he greets your majesty.

He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories that by gift of heaven,
By law of nature and of nations, 'long
To him and to his heirs; namely, the crown,
And all wide-stretch'd honours that pertain
By custom and the ordinance of times,
Unto the crown of France. That you may know
'Tis no sinister nor no awkward claim, [days]
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd,
He sends you this most memorable line,

[Gives a paper.]

In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you overlook this pedigree:
And when you find him evenly deriv'd
From his most fam'd of famous ancestors,
Edward the Third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows? [crown]

Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it:
Therefore in fierce tempest is he coming,
In thunder and in earthquake, like a Jove,—
That if requiring fail, he will compel;—
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown; and to take mercy
On the poor souls for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws: and on your head
Turns he the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens'
groans,

For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threatening, and my message;

Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further:

To-morrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother England.

Dau. For the Dauphin,
I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorn and defiance; slight regard, contempt,

And anything that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus says my king: an if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer for it
That caves and wombly vaultages of France

Shall chide your trespass and return your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair return,
It is against my will; for I desire
Nothing but odds with England: to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity,
I did present him with the Paris balls. [for it,

Exe. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe:
And, be assur'd, you'll find a difference,—
As we, his subjects, have in wonder found,—
Between the promise of his greener days
And these he masters now: now he weighs time
Even to the utmost grain:—that you shall read
In your own losses if he stay in France.

Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full. [king]

Exe. Despatch us with all speed, lest that our
Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already.

Fr. King. You shall be soon despatch'd with fair conditions:

A night is but small breath and little pause
To answer matters of this consequence.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Chorus.

Cho. Thus with imagin'd wing our swift scene flies,

In motion of no less celerity [seen]
Than that of thought. Suppose that you have
The well-appointed king at Hampton pier
Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet [ning:]
With silken streamers the young Phoebus fan—
Play with your fancies; and in them behold
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing,
Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give
To sounds confus'd; behold the threaden sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd
sea,

Breasting the lofty surge: O, do but think
You stand upon the rivage and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow!

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy;
And leave your England, as dead midnight still,
Guarded with grandsires, babies, and old
women,

Either past or not arrived to pity and puissance;
For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France? [siege;]

Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a
Behold the ordnance on their carriages,
With fatal mouths gaped on girded Harfleur.
Suppose the ambassador from the French comes back;

Tells Harry that the king doth offer him
Katharine his daughter; and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.

The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,

[Alarum, and chambers go off, within.]
And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—FRANCE. Before Harfleur.

Alarums. Enter KING HENRY, EXETER, BEDFORD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers, with scaling-ladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
As modest stillness and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it

As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit
To his full height!—On, on, you noble English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof!
Fathers that, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought,
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument:—

Dishonour not your mothers; now attest
That those whom you call'd fathers did beget you!

Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war!—And you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here

The mettle of your pasture; let us swear
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not;
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot:
Follow your spirit; and upon this charge
Cry—God for Harry! England!—and Saint George!

[Exeunt. Alarum, and chambers go off within.]

Enter NYM, BARDOLPH, PISTOL, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knocks are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is most just; for humours do abound:

*Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die
And sword and shield
In bloody field
Doth win immortal fame.*

Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale and safety.

Pist. And I:

If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I hie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.

Enter FLUELLEN.

Flu. Up to the preach, you dogs! avaunt, you cullions! [Driving them forward.]

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!

Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage!

Abate thy rage, great duke! [chuck!]

Good bawcock, bate thy rage! use lenity, sweet Nym. These be good humours!—your honour wins bad humours.

[Exeunt NYM, PISTOL, BARDOLPH, followed by FLUELLEN.]

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am boy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for, indeed, three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph,—he is white-livered and red-faced; by the means whereof 'a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol,—he hath a killing tongue and a quiet sword; by the means whereof 'a breaks words and keeps whole weapons. For Nym,—he hath heard that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers lest 'a should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are matched with as few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's head but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal anything, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three halfpence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching; and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchers: which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service: their villany goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up. [Exit.]

Re-enter FLUELLEN, GOWER following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the Duke of Gloster would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke it is not so goot to come to the mines; for, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war: the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' athversary,—you may discuss unto the duke, look you,—is digt himself four yard under the countermines; by Cheshu, I think 'a will plow up all, if there is no better directions.

Gow. The Duke of Gloster, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman,—a very valiant gentleman, i' faith.

Flu. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the 'orld: I will verify as much in his peard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciples, than is a puppy-dog.

Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, Captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous falerous gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition and knowledge in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the 'orld, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Enter MACMORRIS and JAMY, at a distance.

Jamy. I say gud-day, Captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, goot Captain Jamy.

Gow. How now, Captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish la, tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and by my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blowed up the town, so Chrish save me, la, in an hour: O, tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done!

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I peseech you, now, will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly to satisfy my opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.

Jamy. It sall be very gud, gud feith, gud captains bath: and I sall quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that sall I, mary.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me: the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes: it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet call us to the breach; and we talk and, by Chrish, do nothing: 'tis shame for us all: so God sa' me, 'tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is throats to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa' me, la.

Jamy. By the mess, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, aile do gud service, or aile lig i' the grund for it; ay, or go to death; and aile pay't as valorously as I may, that sall I suerly do, that is the breff and the long. Mary, I wad full fain heard some question 'tween you tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation,—

Mac. Of my nation! What ish my nation? what ish my nation? Who talks of my nation ish a villain, and a basterd, and a knave, and a rascal.

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmorris, peradventure I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as goot a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of war and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. Au! that's a foul fault.

[A parley sounded.]

Gow. The town sounds a parley.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more petter opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so pold as to tell you I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Before the Gates of Harfleur.

The Governor and some Citizens on the walls; the English Forces below. Enter KING HENRY and his Train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the latest parley we will admit: Therefore, to our best mercy give yourselves; Or like to men proud of destruction, Defy us to our worst: for as I am a soldier,— A name that, in my thoughts, becomes me best.—

If I begin the battery once again, I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur Till in her ashes she lie buried. The gates of mercy shall be all shut up; And the flesh'd soldier,—rough and hard of heart,—

In liberty of bloody hand shall range With conscience wide as hell; mowing like grass Your fresh-fair virgins and your flowering infants.

What is it then to me if impious war,— Array'd in flames, like to the prince of fiends,— Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats Enlink'd to waste and desolation?

What is't to me when you yourselves are cause, If your pure maidens fall into the hand Of hot and forcing violation?

What rein can hold licentious wickedness When down the hill he holds his fierce career? We may as bootless spend our vain command Upon the enrag'd soldiers in their spoil, As send precepts to the Leviathan [flour], To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur Take pity of your town and of your people Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command; Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds Of heady murder, spoil, and villainy.

If not, why, in a moment look to see The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;

Your fathers taken by the silver beards, And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls;

Your naked infants spitted upon pikes, Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confus'd

Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry

At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.
What say you? will you yield, and this avoid?
Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Gou. Our expectation hath this day an end:
The Dauphin, whom of succour we entreated,
Returns us that his powers are not yet ready
To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great
king,

We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy.
Enter our gates; dispose of us and ours;
For we no longer are defensible. [Exeter,

K. Hen. Open your gates.—Come, uncle
Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain,
And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:
Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,—
The winter coming on, and sickness growing
Upon our soldiers,—we will retire to Calais.
To-night in Harfleur will we be your guest;
To-morrow for the march are we address.

Flourish. The KING, &c., enter the Town.

SCENE III.—ROUEN. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KATHARINE and ALICE.

Kath. Alice, tu as été en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame.

Kath. Je te prie, m'enseigner; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez-vous la main en Anglais?

Alice. La main? elle est appelée de hand.

Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?

Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, j'oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? je pense qu'ils sont appelés de fingers; ou, de fingers.

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingers. Je pense que je suis le bon écolier; j'ai gagné deux mots d'Anglais vite. Comment appelez-vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles? les appelons de nails.

Kath. De nails. Écoutez; dites-moi, si je parle bien: de hand, de fingers, et de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglais.

Kath. Dites-moi? l'Anglais pour le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude?

Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fais la répétition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris dès à présent.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Excusez-moi, Alice; écoutez: de hand, de fingers, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu, je m'en oublie! de elbow. Comment appelez-vous le col?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Kath. De nick. Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sin. Le col, de nick; le menton, de sin.

Alice. Oui. Sauf votre honneur, en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les natifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre, par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez-vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous ai enseigné?

Kath. Non, he reciterai à vous promptement:

de hand, de fingers, de mails,—

Alice. De nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arm, de ilbow.

Alice. Sauf votre honneur, de elbow.

Kath. Ainsi dis-je, de elbow, de nick, et de sin. Comment appelez-vous le pied et la robe?

Alice. De foot, madame; et de coun.

Kath. De foot et de coun! O Seigneur Dieu! ce sont mots de son mauvais, corrompible, gros, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user je ne voudrais prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot et de coun néanmoins.

Je reciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fingers, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de nick, de sin, de foot, de coun.

Alice. Excellent, madame!

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois: allons-nous à dîner.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. Another Room in the same.

Enter the FRENCH KING, the DAUPHIN, DUKE OF BOURBON, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain he hath pass'd the river Somme.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord, Let us not live in France; let us quit all, And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Dau. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays of us, The emptying of our fathers' luxury, Our scions, put in wild and savage stock, Spurt up so suddenly into the clouds, And overlook their grafters?

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards!

Mort de ma vie! if they march along Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle?

Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull; On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale, Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water, [broth,

A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley-Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?

And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine, Seem frosty? O, for honour of our land,

Let us not hang like roping icicles Upon our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people [fields,—

Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich Poor we may call them in their native lords!

Dau. By faith and honour, Our madams mock at us, and plainly say

Their mettle is bred out, and they will give Their bodies to the lust of English youth

To new-store France with bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us to the English dancing-schools,

And teach lavoltas high and swift corantos; Saying our grace is only in our heels,

And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy, the herald? speed him hence:

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.—

Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour edg'd
More sharper than your swords, hie to the field:
Charles De-la-bret, high-constable of France;
You Dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berri,
Alencon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;
Jacques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,
Beaumont, Grandpree, Roussi, and Fauconberg,
Foix, Lestrale, Bouciquait, and Charolois; High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights, [shames.

For your great seats, now quit you of great Bar Henry England, that sweeps through our
land

With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur:
Rush on his host as doth the melted snow
Upon the valleys, hose ow vassal seat
The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon:
Go down upon him,—you have power enough,—
And in a captive chariot into Rouen
Bring him our prisoners.

Con. This becomes the great.
Sorry am I his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick, and famish'd in their march;
For I am sure, when he shall see our army,
He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,
And for achievement offer us his ransom.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjo

And let him say to England that we send
To know what willing ransom he will give.—
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

Dau. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

Fr. King. Be patient; for you shall remain
with us.—

Now forth, lord constable and princes all,
And quickly bring us word of England's fall.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The English Camp in Picardy.

Enter, severally, GOWER and FLUELLEN.

Gow. How now, Captain Fluellen! come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you there is very excellent services committed at the pidge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my utter-most power: he is not.—God be praised and pleased!—any hurt in the 'orld; but keeps the pridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline.
There is an ancient there a the pridge,—I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the 'orld; but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called Auncient Pistol.

Gow. I know him not.

Flu. Here is the man.

Enter PISTOL.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me
favours:

The Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise Got; and I have merited some love at his hands. [heart,

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of
Of buxom valour, hath by cruel fate
And giddy Fortune's furious fickle wheel,—
That goddess blind,

That stands upon the rolling restless stone,—

Flu. By your patience, Auncient Pistol.
Fortune is painted plund, with a muffer afore her eyes, to signify to you that Fortune is plund;
and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutability, and vanation: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls.—In good truth the poet makes a most excellent description of it: Fortune is an excellent moral.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him; [be,—

For he hath stol'n a pox, and hanged must 'a
A damned death!

Let gallows gape for dog; let man go free,
And let no hemp his windpipe suffocate:
But Exeter hath given the doom of death
For pox of little price. [voice;

Therefore, go speak,—the duke will hear thy
And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord and vile reproach:
Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee re-quite.

Flu. Auncient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why, then, rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, Auncient, it is not a thing to rejoice at: for if, look you, he were my prother
I would desire the duke to use his goot pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be used. [friendship!

Pist. Die and be damn'd! and fico for thy

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain! [Exit.

Flu. Very goot.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal;

I remember him now; a bawd, a cutpurse.

Flu. I'll assure you, 'a uttered as prave 'ords at the pidge as you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue, that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself, at his return into London, under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote where services are done;—at such and such a scone, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on; and this they con perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-tuned oaths: and what a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistook.

Flu. I tell you what, Captain Gower, I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the 'orld ho is: if I find a hole in his coat I will tell him my mind. [Drum within.] Hark you, the king is coming; and I must speak with him from the pridge.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and Soldiers.

Got bless your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen! cam'st thou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge. the French is gone off, look you; and there is gallant and most prave passages: marry, th' athversary was have possession of the pridge; but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pridge: I can tell your majesty the duke is a prave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th' athversary hath been very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church,—one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles, and wheelks, and knobs, and flames of fire; and his lips plows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plue and sometimes red; but his nose is executed and his fire's out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off:—and we give express charge that in our marches through the country there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for, none of the French upbraided or abused in disdainful language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket sounds. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. You know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well, then, I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king:—Say thou to Harry of England: Though we seemed dead we did but sleep; advantage is a better soldier than rashness. Tell him we could have rebuked him at Harfleur, but that we thought not good to bruise an injury till it were full ripe:—now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which, in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mont. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back,

And tell thy king,—I do not seek him now; But could be willing to march on to Calais Without impeachment: for, to say the sooth,—Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much Unto an enemy of craft and vantage,—My people are with sickness much enfeebled; My numbers lessen'd; and those few I have Almost no better than so many French; Who, when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,

I thought upon one pair of English legs Did march three Frenchmen.—Yet, forgive me God,

That I do brag thus!—this your air of France Hath blown that vice in me; I must repent. Go, therefore, tell thy master here I am; My ransom is this frail and worthless trunk; My army but a weak and sickly guard:

Yet, God before, tell him we will come on, Though France himself, and such another neighbour, [Montjoy.]

Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Go, bid thy master well advise himself: If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well. The sum of all our answer is but this:

We would not seek a battle as we are; Nor as we are, we say, we will not shun it: So tell your master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness. [Exit.]

Glo. I hope they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs. [night:—]

March to the bridge; it now draws toward Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves; And on to-morrow bid them march away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The French Camp near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the LORD RAMBURES, the DUKE of ORLEANS, the DAUPHIN, and others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armour of the world.—Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My Lord of Orleans and my lord high-constable, you talk of horse and armour,—

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.

Dau. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns. Ca, ha! he bounds from the earth as if his entrails were hairs; le cheval volant, the Pegasus, qui a les narines de feu! When I bestride him I soar, I am a hawk: he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him: he is indeed a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world,—familiar to us and unknown,—to lay apart their particular functions and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: Wonder of nature,—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser: for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Nay, for methought yesterday your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O, then, belike she was old and gentle; and you rode like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off and in your strait strossers.

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me, then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au boubrier: thou makest use of anything.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such proverb so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars or suns upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

[hope.]

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluously, and 'twere more honour some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well were some of your brags dismounted.

Dau. Would I were able to load him with his desert!—Will it never be day?—I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: but I would it were morning; for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight; I'll go arm myself.

[Exit.]

Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Ram. He longs to eat the English.

Con. I think he will eat all he kills.

Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Orl. He is, simply, the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.

Orl. He never did harm that I heard of.

Con. Nor will 'do none to-morrow: he will keep that good name still.

Orl. I know him to be valiant.

Con. I was told that by one that knows him better than you.

Orl. What's he?

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not; it is no hidden virtue in him.

Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never anybody saw it but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour; and when it appears it will bate.

Orl. Ill-will never said well.

Con. I will cap that proverb with—There is flattery in friendship.

Orl. And I will take up that with—Give the devil his due.

Con. Well placed: there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb with—A pox of the devil.

Orl. You are the better at proverbs by how much—A fool's bolt is soon shot.

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high-constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpree.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.—Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not for the dawning as we do.

Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this King of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge!

Con. If the English had any apprehension they would run away.

Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Orl. Foolish curs, that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples! You may as well say, that's a valiant flea that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustous and rough coming-on, leaving their wits with their wives: and them give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves and fight like devils. [of beef.]

Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out

Con. Then shall we find to-morrow they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm: come, shall we about it?

Orl. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see,—by ten

We shall have each a hundred Englishmen.

[Exeunt]

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time
When creeping murmur and the poring dark
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of
night

The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix'd sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face:
Steeds threatens steeds, in high and boastful neighs

Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents
The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation:

The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.
Proud of their numbers and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned
English,

Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The morning's danger; and their gesture sad
Investing lank-lean cheeks and war-worn coats
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon [hold
So many hornd ghosts. O, now, who will be-
The royal captain of this ruin'd band [tent,
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to Let him cry, Praise and glory on his head!
For forth he goes and visits all his host;
Bids them good-morrow with a modest smile,
And calls them brothers, friends, and country-
men.

Upon his royal face there is no note
How dread an army hath enrouned him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night;
But freshly looks, and over-bears attaint
With cheerful semblance and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks:
A largess universal, like the sun,
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear. Then, mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night:
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where,—O for pity!—we shall much disgrace
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,

Right ill-dispos'd in brawl ridiculous,
The name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see;
Minding true things by what their mockeries be. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—FRANCE. The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter KING HENRY, BEDFORD, and GLOSTER.

K. Hen. Gloster, 'tis true that we are in great danger;
The greater therefore should our courage be.—
Good-morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty!

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out;
For our bad neighbour makes early stirrers,
Which is both healthful and good husbandry:
Besides, they are our outward consciences
And preachers to us all: admonishing
That we should dress us fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Good-morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a churlish turf of France.

Erp. Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me better,

Since I may say, Now lie I like a king.

K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present pains

Upon example; so the spirit is eas'd:
And when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. [both Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas.—Brothers
Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good-morrow to them; and anon
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and BEDFORD]

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. No, my good knight;

Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
I and my bosom must debate awhile,
And then I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speak'st cheerfully. [Exit.]

Enter PISTOL.

Pist. Qui va là?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me; art thou officer?
Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trail'st thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so. What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a bawcock and a heart of gold,

A lad of life, an imp of fame;
Of parents good, of fist most valiant:
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from my heart-strings
I love the lovely bulby.—What is thy name?

K. Hen. Harry le Roi.

Pist. Le Roy's a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about Upon Saint Davy's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The fico for thee, then!

K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called. Exit.

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So! in the name of Cheshu Christ, speak fewer. It is the greatest admiration in the universal 'orld when the true and auncient precedents and laws of the wars is not kept: if you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle-taddle nor pibblepabble in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb,—in your own conscience, now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you and peseech you tnat you will.

(Exeunt GOWER and FLUELLEN.)

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion,
There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter BATES, COURT, and WILLIAMS.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

K. Hen. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Will. A good old commander and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the
king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should.
For though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man as I am; the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me, all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man, and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing.

Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are. yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in the Thames up to the neck;—and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself anywhere but where he is.

Bates. Then I would he were here alone: so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

K. Hen. I dare say you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds' methinks I could not die anywhere so contented as in the king's company,—his cause being just and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough if we know we are the king's subjects: if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make when all those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all, We died at such a place; some swearing; some crying for a surgeon; some upon their wives left poor behind them; some upon the debts they owe; some upon their children rawly left. I am afeared there are few die well that die in a battle; for how can they chantly dispose of anything when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; who to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Hen. So if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers, and die in many irrecon-ciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation:—
but this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant;
for they purpose not their death when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers: some peradventure have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some making the wars their bulwark that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for before-breach of the king's laws in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death they have borne life away; and where they would be safe they perish: then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed,—wash every mote out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost wherein such preparation was gained: and in him that escapes it were not sin to think that, making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head,—the king is not to answer for it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say he would not be ransomed.

Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully: but when our throats are cut he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder-gun, that a poor and a private displeasure can do against a monarch you may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after come, 'tis a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with you if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us if you live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any age of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou darest acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove: give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, This is my glove, by this hand I will take thee a box on the ear. [Lunge it.]

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it I will challenge it.

Will. Thou darest as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: but it is no English treason to cut French crowns; and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper.

[Exeunt Soldiers.]

Upon the king!—let us our lives, our souls, Our debts, our careful wives, our children, and Our sins lay on the king! We must bear all.

O hard condition, twin-born with greatness, Subject to the breath of every fool, [sing!]

Whose sense no more can feel but his own wrong—What infinite hearts'-ease must kings neglect

That private men enjoy!

And what have kings that privates have not too,

Save ceremony,—save general ceremony?

And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?

What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more

Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers?

What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in?

O ceremony, show me but thy worth!

What is thy soul of adoration?

Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,

Creating awe and fear in other men?

Wherein thou art less happy being fear'd

Than they in fearing.

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet, [ness,

But poison'd flattery? O, be sick, great great—

And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee,

Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream,

That play'st so subtly with a king's repose:

I am a king that find thee; and I know

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,

The intertissued robe of gold and pearl,

The farced title running 'fore the kin,

The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp

That beats upon the high shore of this world,—

No, not all these, thrice gorgeous ceremony,

Not all these, laid in bed majestical,

Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave

Who, with a body fill'd and vacant mind,

Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread;

Never sees horrid night, the child of hell;

But, like a lackey, from the rise to set

Sweats in the eye of Phoebus, and all night

Sleeps in Elysium; next day, after dawn,

Doth rise and help Hyperion to his horse;

And follows so the ever-running year,

With profitable labour, to his grave:

And but for ceremony, such a wretch,

Winding up days with toils and nights with sleep,

Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.

The slave, a member of the country's peace,

Enjoys it; but in gross brain little wots

What watch the king keeps to maintain the

peace

Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,

Seek through your camp to find you.

K. Hen. Good old knight.
Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be before thee.

Exp. I shall do 't, my lord. [Exit.]

K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers'
hearts;
Possess them not with fear; take from them
now
The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O
Lord,

O, not to-day, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown!
I Richard's body have interred new,
And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears
Than from it issu'd forced drops of blood:
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built

Two chantries, wherethesad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do;
Though all that I can do is nothing worth,
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. My liege!

K. Hen. My brother Gloster's voice?—Ay;
I know thy errand, I will go with thee:—
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The French Camp.

Enter DAUPHIN, ORLEANS, RAMBURES, and others.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords!

Dau. Montez à cheval!—My horse! varlet,
laquais! ha!

Orl. O brave spirit!

Dau. Via!—les eaux et la terre,—

Orl. Rienpui? l'air et le feu,—

Dau. Ciel! cousin Orleans.

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides,

That their hot blood may spin in Engli eyes,
And dout them with superfluous courage, ha!

Ram. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?

How shall we, then, behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!

Do but behold you poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;

Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
To give each naked curtle-axe a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheathe for lack of sport: let us but blow
on them,

The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,—

Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle,—were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe;
Though we upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation,— But that our honours must not. What's to say?

A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket-sonance and the note to moune:
For our approach shall so much dare the field
That England shall couch down in fear and yield.

Enter GRANDPRE.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?

Yond island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favour'dly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully:
Big Mars seem bankrupt in their beggar'd host.
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sat like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor
jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,

The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel-but Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Con. They have said their prayers and they stay for death. [fresh suits,]

Dau. Shall we go send them dinners and
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them? [field!—]

Con. I stay but for my guidon:—to the
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come, away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The English Camp.

Enter the English Host; GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, SALISBURY, and WESTMORELAND.

Glo. Where is the king?

Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full three-score thousand. [fresh.]

Exe. There's five to one; besides, they all are Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.

God b' wi' you, princes all; I'll to my charge:
If we no more meet till we meet in heaven,

Then joyfully,—my noble Lord of Bedford,—
My dear Lord Gloster,—and my good Lord
Exeter,—

And my kind kinsman,—warriors all, adieu!
Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Exe. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to—
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it,
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.
[Exit SALISBURY.]

Bed. He is as full of valour as of kindness,
Princely in both.

West. O that we now had here

Enter KING HENRY.

But one ten thousand of those men in England
That do no work to-day!

K. Hen. What's he that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland?—No, my fair cousin:

If we are mark'd to die, we are enow
To do our country loss; and if to live,
The fewer men the greater share of honour.

God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold,
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;
It yearns me not if men my garments wear;
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive.

No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour,

As one man more, methinks, would share from
For the best hope I have. O do not wish one more!

Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my
That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse:

We would not die in that man's company
That fears his fellowship to die with us.

This day is call'd the feast of Crispian:
He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,

Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.

He that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, To-morrow is Saint Crispian:

Then will he strip his sleeve and show his scars,
And say, These wounds I had on Crispin's day.

Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he'll remember with advantages [names,
What feats he did that day: then shall our Familiar in their mouths as household words,—

Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,—

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
This story shall the good man teach his son;

And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered,—

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he to-day that sheds his blood with me
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition:

And gentlemen in England now a-bed [here,
Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not
And hold their manhoods cheap while any

That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

Re-enter SALISBURY.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:

The French are bravely in their battles set,
And will with all expedience charge on us.

K. Hen. All things are ready if our minds be so.

West. Perish the man whose mind is backward now!

K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England, coz?

West. God's will! my liege, would you and I alone,

Without more help, could fight this royal battle!

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;

Which likes me better than to wish us one.—
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee,
King Harry,

If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured overthrow:

For certainly thou art so near the gulf Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy,

The constable desires thee thou wilt mind
Thy followers of repentance, that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire

From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies

Must lie and fester.

K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?
Mont. The constable of France. [back:

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer
Bid them achieve me, and then sell my bones.

Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?

The man that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast liv'd was kill'd with hunting
him.

A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work:

And those that leave their valiant bones in France, [hulls'

Dying like men, though buried in your dung—
They shall be fam'd; for there the sun shall greet them,

And draw their honours reeking up to heaven,
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your clime,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.

Mark, then, abounding valour in our English,
That, being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.

Let me speak proudly:—tell the constable
We are but warriors for the working-day;
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,—

Good argument, I hope, we will not fly,—
And time hath worn us into slovenry:

But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim;
And my poor soldiers tell me yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes; or they will pluck

The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads, [thus,—
And turn them out of service. If they do
As, if God please, they shall,—my ransom then
Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour;

Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald:
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints,—

Which if they have as I will leave 'em them,
Shall yield them little, tell the constable.

Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so, fare thee well:

Thou never shalt hear herald any more. [Exit.

K. Hen. I fear thou wilt once more come again for ransom.

Enter the DUKE OF YORK.

York. My Lord, most humbly on my knee
I beg

The leading of the vaward.

K. Hen. Take it, brave York.—Now, soldiers, march away:—

And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day!
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Field of Battle.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter French Soldier,
PISTOL, and Boy.

Pist. Yield, cur!

Fr. Sol. Je pense que vous êtes le gentilhomme de bonne qualité.

Pist. Quality! Callino, castore me! art thou a gentleman? what is thy name? discuss.

Fr. Sol. O seigneur Dieu!

Pist. O, Signieur Dew should be a gentleman:—

Perpend my words, O Signieur Dew, and mark:—

O Signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox,
Except, O Signieur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.

Fr. Sol. O prenez miséricorde! ayez pitié de moi!

Pist. Moy shall not serve; I will have forty moys;

Or I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat
In drops of crimson blood.

Fr. Sol. Est-il impossible d'échapper la force de ton bras?

Pist. Brass, cur!

Thou damned and luxurious mountain-goat,
Offer'st me brass?

Fr. Sol. O pardonnez-moi! [moys?—

Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of Come hither, boy: ask me this slave in French
What is his name.

Boy. Ecoutez: comment êtes-vous appelé?

Fr. Sol. Monsieur le Fer.

Boy. He says his name is Master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and firke him, and ferret him:—discuss the same in French unto him.

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firke.

Pist. Bid him prepare; for I will cut his throat.

Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monsieur?

Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous faites vous prêt; car ce soldat ici est disposé tout à cette heure de couper votre gorge.

Pist. Oui, coupe la gorge, par ma foi, pesant,
Unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns;
Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword.

Fr. Sol. O, je vous supplie, pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonner! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison: gardez ma vie, et je vous donnerai deux cents écus.

Pist. What are his words?

Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and for his ransom
he will give you two hundred crowns.

Pist. Tell him my fury shall abate, and I the crowns will take.

Fr. Sol. Petit monsieur, que dit-il?

Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son jurement de pardonner aucun prisonnier, néanmoins, pour les écus que vous l'avez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchisement.

Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux je vous donne mille remerciements; et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, vaillant, et très distingué seigneur d'Angleterre.

Pist. Expound unto me, boy.

Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks; and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of one,—as he thinks,—the most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy signieur of England.

Pist. As I suck blood, I will some mercy show.—Follow me! [Exit.

Boy. Survez-vous le grand capitaine. [Exit.
French Soldier.] I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the saying is true,—the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Bardolph and Nym had ten times more valour than this roaring devil! the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger; and they are both hanged; and so would this be if he durst steal anything adventurously. I must stay with the lackeys, with the luggage of our camp: the French might have a good prey of us if he knew of it;
for there is none to guard it but boys. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Another part of the Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter DAUPHIN, ORLEANS, BOUR-BON, Constable, RAMBURES, and others.

Con. O diable!

Orl. O seigneur! le jour est perdu, tout est perdu!

Dau. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!

Reproach and everlasting shame [tune!—

Sits mocking in our plumes.—O méchante for-do not run away. [A short alarm.

Con. Why, all our ranks are broke.

Dau. O perdurable shame!—let's stab ourselves. [for?

Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom? [but shame!

Bour. Shame, and eternal shame nothing
Let us die in honour: once more back again;
And he that will not follow Bourbon now,
Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand,
Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door

Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated. [now!]

Con. Disorder, that hath spoil'd us, friend us
Let us on heaps go offer up our lives
Unto these English, or else die with fame.

Orl. We are enow yet living in the field
To smother up the English in our throngs,
If any order might be thought upon.

Bour. The devil take order now! I'll to the throng:

Let life be short, else shame will be too long.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Another part of the Field.

*Alarums. Enter KING HENRY and Forces,
EXETER, and others.*

K. Hen. Well have we done, thrice-valiant countrymen: [field.]

But all's not done; yet keep the French the Exe. The Duke of York commends him to your majesty. [this hour]

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thrice within
I saw him down; thrice up again, and fighting;
From helmet to the spur all blood he was.

Exe. In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie

Larding the plain; and by his bloody side,—
Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds,—
The noble Earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first died; and York, all haggled over,
Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteep'd,
And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes
That bloodily did yawn upon his face;
And cries aloud, Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk!
My soul shall thine keep company to heaven;
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine then fly a-breast;
As in this glorious and well-foughten field
We kept together in our chivalry!

Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up:
He smil'd me in the face, rought me his hand,
And, with a feeble grip, says, Dear my lord,
Commend my service to my sovereign.
So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck
He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips:
And so, espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd
A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me which I would have stopp'd;

But I had not so much of man in me,
And all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen. I blame you not;
For, hearing this, I must perforce compound
With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.—

[Alarum.]
But, hark! what new alarum is this same?—
The French have reinforc'd their scatter'd
men:—

Then every soldier kill his prisoners;
Give the word through. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Another part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offer'd; in your conscience, now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain there's not a boy left alive;
and the cowardly rascals that ran from the battle have done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king, most worthily, hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, Captain Gower. What call you the town's name where Alexander the pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig great? the pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think Alexander the Great was born in Macedon: his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedon where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain, if you look in the maps of the world, I warrant you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye at Monmouth; but it is out of my prains what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmon in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Mon-mouth's life is come after it indifferent well, for there is figures in all things. Alexander,—Got knows, and you know,—in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indigna-tions, and also being a little intoxicates in his prains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his best friend, Clytus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that: he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth ere it is made and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: as Alexander is kill his friend Clytus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, turned away the fat knight with the great pelly-doublet: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveries, and mocks; I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he:—I can tell you there is goat men born at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

*Alarum. Enter KING HENRY, with a part of the English Forces; WARWICK, GLOSTER
EXETER, and others.*

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to
France

Until this instant.—Take a trumpet, herald;
Ride thou unto the horsemen on yond hill:
If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field; they do offend our sight:
If they'll do neither, we will come to them,
And make them skirr away as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings:
Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have;
And not a man of them that we shall take
Shall taste our mercy:—go and tell them so.

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French,
my liege.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they us'd to be.

Enter MONTJOY.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald?
know'st thou not

That I have fin'd these bones of mine for ransom?

Com'st thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king:
I come to thee for charitable license,

That we may wander o'er this bloody field
To book our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men;
For many of our princes,—woe the while!—
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;—
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes;—and their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,

Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great
king,

To view the field in safety, and dispose
Of their dead bodies!

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not if the day be ours or no,
For yet a many of your horsemen peer
And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength, for it!—

What is this castle call'd that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it Agincourt.

K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agin-court,

Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the Plack Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most prave pattle here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: if your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did goot service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service; and I do pe-heve your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour;
For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's blood out of your pody, I can tell you that: Got pless it and preserve it as long as it pleases his grace and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Cheshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world: I need not be ashamed of your majesty, praised be Got, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so!—Our heralds go
with him:

Bring me just notice of the numbers dead
On both our parts.—Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to WILL. Exeunt MONT. and others.

Exe. Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, why wearest thou that glove in thy cap?

Will. An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if alive and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear: or if I can see my glove in his cap,—which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear if alive,—I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, Captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as goot a gentleman as the tevil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain and a Jack saucy as ever his plack shoe trod upon Got's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la.

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meetest the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain, and is goot knowledge and literated in the wars.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege.

[Exit.
K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap: when Alencon and myself were down together I pluck'd this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alencon and an enemy to our person, if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost love me.

Flu. Your grace does me as great honours:
can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man that has but two legs that shall find himself aggreed at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once, and please Got of his grace that I might see it.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him.

[Exit.
K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick and my brother
Gloster,

Follow Fluellen closely at the heels:

The glove which I have given him for a favour
May haply purchase him a box o' the ear;

It is the soldier's; I, by bargain, should

Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:

If that the soldier strike,—as I judge

By his blunt bearing he will keep his word,—

Some sudden mischief may arise of it;

For I do know Fluellen valiant,

And, touch'd with choler, hot as gunpowder,

And quickly will return an injury:

Follow, and see there be no harm between

them.—

Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exeunt

SCENE VIII.—Before KING HENRY'S Pavilion.

Enter GOWER and WILLIAMS.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter FLUELLEN.

Ftu. Got's will and his pleasure, captain, I peseech you now, come apace to the king; there is more goot toward you peradventure than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove? [glove.]

Ftu. Know the glove! I know the glove is a

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it. [Strikes him.]

Ftu. 'Sblood, an arrant traitor as any's in the universal world, or in France, or in England!

Gow. How now, sir! you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Ftu. Stand away, Captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Ftu. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he's a friend of the Duke Alencon's.

Enter WARWICK and GLOSTER.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Ftu. My Lord of Warwick, here is,—praised be Got for it!—a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day.—Here is his majesty.

Enter KING HENRY and EXETER.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?

Ftu. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alencon.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to in change promised to wear it in his cap: I promised to strike him if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Ftu. Your majesty hear now,—saving your majesty's manhood,—what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lousy knave it is: I hope your majesty is pear me testimony and witness, and will avouchment, this is the glove of Alencon that your majesty is give me, in your conscience, now

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it.

'Twas I, indeed, thou promisedst to strike; And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Ftu. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it if there is any martial law in the world? [tion?]

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfac-
Will. All offences, my liege, come from the heart: never came any from mine that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape I beseech you take it for your own fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,

And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow;

And wear it for an honour in thy cap

Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns:—

And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Ftu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly:—hold, there is twelve pence for you; and I pray you to serve Got, and keep you out of prawls, and rabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the petter for you.

Will. I will none of your money.

Ftu. It is with a goot will; I can tell you it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, wherefore should you be so pashful? your shoes is not so goot: 'tis a goot silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald,—are the dead number'd?

Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French. [Delivers a paper.]

K. Hen. What prisoners of good sort art taken, uncle? [king;]

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleans, nephew to the John Duke of Bourbon, and Lord Bouciquait: Of other lords and barons, knights and squires, Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French [number,

That in the field lie slam: of princes, in this And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead

One hundred twenty-six: added to these, Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,

Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights:

So that, in these ten thousand they have lost, There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;

The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires,

And gentlemen of blood and quality.

The names of those their nobles that lie dead,—

Charles de-la-bret, high-constable of France;

Jaques of Chatillon, admiral of France;

The master of the cross-bows, Lord Rambures;

Great-master of France, the brave sir Guischaud

Dauphin; [bant,

John Duke of Alencon; Antony Duke of Bra-

The brother to the Duke of Burgundy;

And Edward Duke of Bar: of lusty earls,

Grandpree and Roussi, Fauconberg and Foix,

Beaumont and Marle, Vaudemont and Lestrale

Here was a royal fellowship of death!—

Where is the number of our English dead?

[Herald presents another paper.]

Edward the Duke of York, the Earl of Suffolk,

Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam, esquire:

None else of name; and of all other men

But five-and-twenty.—O God, thy arm was here;

And not to us, but to thy arm alone,

Ascribe we all!—When, without stratagem,

But in plain shock and even play of battle,

Was ever known so great and little loss
On one part and on the other?—Take it, God,
For it is none but thine!

Exe. 'Tis wonderful!

K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village.

And be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this, or take that praise from God
Which is his only.

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain, but with this acknowledgment,

That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites?

Let there be sung Non nobis and Te Deum;

The dead with charity enclos'd in clay.

We'll then to Calais; and to England then;

Where ne'er from France arriv'd more happy men.

Exeunt.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,

That I may prompt them: and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit the excuse

Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life

Be here presented. Now we bear the king Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen,

Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Behold, the English beach

Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys,

Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,

Which, like a mighty whiffer, 'fore the king
Seems to prepare his way: so let him land;

And solemnly see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath thought that even now

You may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where that his lords desire him to have borne

His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city: he forbids it,

Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;

Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent,
Quite from himself to God. But now behold,

In the quick forge and working-house of thought,

How London doth pour out her citizens!
The mayor and all his brethren, in best sort,—

Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebians swarming at their heels,—

Go forth, and fetch their conquering Caesar in:
As, by a lower but by loving likelihood,

Were now the general of our gracious empress,—

As in good time he may,—from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,

How many would the peaceful city quit
To welcome him! much more, and much more

cause
Did they this Harry. Now in London place
him;—

As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of England's stay at home;

The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them;—and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chanc'd,
Till Harry's back-return again to France:
There must we bring him; and myself have play'd

The interim, by remembering you 'tis past.
Then brook abridgment; and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight back again to France. Exit.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—FRANCE. An English Court of Guard.

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

Gow. Nay, that's right, but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, Captain Gower:—the rascally scald, peggarly, lousy, praggling knave, Pistol,—which you and yourself, and all the 'orld, know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits,—he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and pid me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not preed no contention with him, but I will be so pold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings nor his turkey-cocks.

Enter PISTOL.

Got pless you, Auncient Pistol! you scurvy, lousy knave, Got pless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou bedlam? dost thou thirst, base Trojan,

To have me fold up Parca's fatal web?
Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I peseech you heartily, scurvy, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek: because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats.
Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes hum.] Will you be so goot, scald knave. as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.
Flu. You say very true, scald knave,—when Got's will is: I will desire you to live in the meantime and eat your victuals: come, there is sauce for it. [Striking him again.] You called me yesterday mountain-squire; but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain: you have astonished
him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days.—
Pite, I pray you; it is goot for your green wound and your ploody coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt, and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge: I eat, and eke, I swear—

Flu. Eat, I pray you: will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see I eat.

Flu. Much goot do you, scald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you, throw none away, the skin is goot for your broken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pist. Good

Flu. Ay, leeks is goot:—hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a groat!

Flu. Yes, verily and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy groat in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you anything I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God b' wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. [Exit.]

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition,—begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour,—and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise, and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

[Exit.]

Pist. Doth Fortune play the housewife with me now?

News have I that my Nell is dead i' the spital Of malady of France;

And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.

Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs

Honour is cudgell'd. Well, bawd will I turn,

And something lean to cutpurse of quick hand.

To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:

And patches will I get unto these scars,

And swear I got them in the Gallia wars.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—TROYES in Champagne.

An Apartment in the FRENCH KING'S Palace.

Enter at one door, KING HENRY, BEDFORD, GLOSTER, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and other Lords; at another, the FRENCH KING, QUEEN ISABEL, the PRINCESS KATHARINE, Lords, Ladies, &c., the DUKE OF BURGUNDY, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met!

Unto our brother France, and to our sister, Health and fair time of day,—joy and good wishes [ine;—

To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine,—as a branch and member of this royalty, By whom this great assembly is contriv'd,—

We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy;— And, princes French, and peers, health to you all!

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold Most worthy brother England, fairly met:— So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother England,

Of this good day and of this gracious meeting As we are now glad to behold your eyes; Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them Against the French, that met them in their bent, The fatal balls of murdering basilisks: The venom of such looks, we fairly hope, Have lost their quality; and that this day Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you.

Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love. Great Kings of France and England! That I have labour'd

With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavor To bring your most imperial majesties

Unto this bar and royal interview, Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.

Since then my office hath so far prevail'd That face to face and royal eye to eye

You have congregated, let it not disgrace me If I demand, before this royal view,

What rub or what impediment there is Why that the naked, poor, and mangled Peace,

Dear nurse of arts, plenty, and joyful births, Should not, in this best garden of the world,

Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage? Alas, she hath from France too long been chas'd!

And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps, Corrupting in its own fertility.

Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart, Unpruned dies; her hedges even-pleach'd,

Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair, Put forth disorder'd twigs; her fallow leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory Doth root upon, while that the coulter rusts,

That should deracinate such savagery; The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth

The freckled crowslip, burnet, and green clover, Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,

Conceives by idleness, and nothing teems But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, hurs, Losing both beauty and utility. [hedges,

And as our vineyards, fallows, meads, and Defective in their natures, grow to wildness,

Even so our horses and ourselves and children Have lost, or do not learn for want of time,

The sciences that should become our country; But grow, like savages,—as soldiers will,

That nothing do but meditate on blood,— To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,

And everything that seems unnatural. Which to reduce into our former favour

You are assembl'd: and my speech entreats That I may know the let why gentle Peace

Should not expel these inconveniences, And bless us with her former qualities.

K. Hen. If, Duke of Burgundy, you would the peace Whose want gives growth to the imperfections

Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenors and particular effects
You have, unschedul'd briefly, in your hands.

Bur. The king hath heard them; to the which as yet

There is no answer made.

K. Hen. Well, then, the peace
Which you before so urg'd lies in his answer.

Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'erglanc'd the articles: pleaseth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will suddenly
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

K. Hen. Brother, we shall.—Go, uncle
Exeter,—

And brother Clarence,—and you, brother
Warwick,—and Huntington,—go with the king,
And take with you free power to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantageous for our dignity,
Anything in or out of our demands;
And we'll consign thereto.—Will you, fair
sister,

Go with the princes or stay here with us?

Q. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with
them;

Haply a woman's voice may do some good
When articles too nicely urg'd be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us:

She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the fore-rank of our articles.

Q. Isa. She hath good leave.

[Exeunt all but K. HEN., KATH., and ALICE.

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms
Such as will enter at a lady's ear,
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez-moi, I cannot tell vat is like me.

K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate, and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les anges?

Alice. Oui, vraiment, sauf votre grace, ainsi dit-il.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Oui, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits,—dat is de princess.

K. Hen. The princess is the better Englishwoman. I' faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad thou canst speak no better English; for if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king that thou wouldst think I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say I love you; then, if you urge me further than to say, Do you in faith? I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; I' faith, do, and so clap hands and a bargain: how say you, lady?

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, me understand veil.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one I have neither words nor measure, and for the other I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife.
Or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like butcher, and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off.
But, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly, nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urg'd, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of anything he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook.
I speak to thee plain soldier if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, so say to thee that I shall die is true,—but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and un-com'd constancy; for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours,
they do always reason themselves out again.
What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald, a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or, rather, the sun, and not the moon,—for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king: and what sayest thou, then, to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate: but in loving me you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine; and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a new-marr'd wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. *Quand j'ai la possession de France, et quand vous avez la possession de moi,—let me see, what then?
Saint Denis be my speed!—donc votre est
France et vous êtes mienne.* It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, le Français que vous parlez est meilleur l'Anglais lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, faith, is't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English,—Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me: and at night, when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou be'st mine, Kate,—as I have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt,—I get thee with scrambling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder: shall not thou and I, between Saint Denis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantinople and take the Turk by the beard? shall we not? what sayest thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a boy; and for my English moiety take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon très chère et divine deesse?

Kath. Your majesty avefausse French enough to deceive de most sage damoiselle dat is en France.

K. Hen. Now, fie upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage. Now, beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me: therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that when I come to woo ladies I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax the better I shall appear: my comfort is that old age, that ill layer-up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better:—and therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand and say,—Harry of England, I am thine: which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal but I will tell thee aloud, England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music,—for thy voice is music and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English,—wilt thou have me?

-Kath. Dat is as it sall please de roi mon père.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate,—it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it sall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez: ma foi, je ne veux point que vous abaissez votre grandeur en baisant la main d'une votre indigne serviteur; excusez-moi. je vous supplie, mon très puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames et demoiselles pour être baisées devant leur noces, il n'est pas le coutume de France.

[she]

K. Hen. Madam, my interpreter, what says Alice. Dat it is not be de fashion pour les ladies of France,—I cannot tell vat is baiser en English.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre better que moi.

K. Hen. It is not a fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Out, vraiment.

K. Hen. O Kate, nice customs court'sy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouth of all find-faults,—as I will do yours for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently and yielding, [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England than a general petition of monarchs.—Here comes your father.

Enter the FRENCH KING and QUEEN, BURGUNDY, BEDFORD, GLOSTER, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty! my royal cousin,

Teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her you must make a circle; if you conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked and blind. Can you blame her, then, being a maid yet rosed-over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink and yield; as love is blind and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids well summered and warm kept are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid, for they are all girdled with maiden walls that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content, so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her so the maid that stood in the way of my wish shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is 't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article:—His daughter first; and, in sequel, all, According to their firm proposed natures.

Exe. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:—Where your majesty demands that the King of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form and with this addition, in French,—Notre très cher fils Henry, roi d'Angleterre, héritier de France; and thus in Latin, Proclarissimus filius noster Henricus, rex Angliæ et hæres Franciæ.

Fr. King. Nor thus I have not, brother, so denied

But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you, then, in love and dear alliance,

Let that one article rank with the rest;

And thereupon give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up

Issue to me, that the contending kingdoms Of France and England, whose very shores look pale

With envy of each other's happiness, 'tween May cease their hatred, and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen

K. Hen. Now, welcome, Kate:—and bear me witness all,

That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

Flourish.

Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages, Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! As man and wife, being two, are one in love, So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal That never may ill office or fell jealousy, Which troubles off the bed of blessed marriage, Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,

To make divorce of their incorporate league; That English may as French, French Englishmen, Receive each other—God speak thus Amen!

All. Amen! which day,

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage:—on My Lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath, And all the peers', for surety of our leagues. Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me; And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

Exeunt.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus far, with rough and all-unable pen, Our bending author hath pursu'd the story; In little room confining mighty men, glory,

Mangling by starts the full course of their Small time, but, in that small, most greatly liv'd This star of England: Fortune made his sword;

By which the world's best garden he achiev'd, And of it left his son imperial lord.

Henry the Sixth, in infant bands crown'd king Of France and England, did this king succeed;

Whose state so many had the managing That they lost France and made his England bleed:

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Dead March. Corpse of KING HENRY THE FIFTH, in state is, brought in, attended on by the DUKES OF BEDFORD, GLOSTER and EXETER, the EARL OF WARWICK, the BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hung be the heavens with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars
That have consented unto Henry's death!
Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long:
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne'er had a king until his time.
Virtue he had, deserving to command:
His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams;

His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings;
His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces.

What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech:
He ne'er lift up his hand but conquered.

Exe. We mourn in black: why mourn we not in blood?

Henry is dead, and never shall revive:
Upon a wooden coffin we attend;
And death's dishonourable victory
We with our stately presence glorify,
Like captives bound to a triumphant car.
What! shall we curse the planets of mishap,
That plott'd thus our glory's overthrow?
Or shall we think the subtle-witted French
Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magic verses have contriv'd his end?

Win. He was a king bless'd of the King of kings,

Unto the French the dreadful judgment-day
So dreadful will not be as was his sight.
The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought:
The church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it? Had not church-men pray'd,

His thread of life had not so soon decay'd:
None do you like but an effeminate prince,
Whom, like a school-boy, you may overawe.

Win. Gloster, whate'er we like, thou art protector,

And lookest to command the prince and realm.
Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe
More than God or religious churchmen may.

Glo. Name not religion, for thou lov'st the flesh; [go'st,

And ne'er throughout the year to church thou
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars and rest your minds in peace!

Let's to the altar:—heralds, wait on us:—
Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms;
Since arms avail not, now that Henry's dead.—
Posterity, await for wretched years,
When at their mother's moisten'd eyes babes shall suck;

Our isle be made a marsh of salt tears,
And none but women left to wail the dead.—

Henry the Fifth! thy ghost I invoke;
Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils!
Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make
Than Julius Cæsar or bright—

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all!

Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guienne, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans,
Paris, Guysors, Poitiers, are all quite lost.

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's corse?

Speak softly; or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his lead and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? is Rouen yielded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost. [us'd?

Exe. How were they lost? what treachery was Mess. No treachery but want of men and money.

Among the soldiers this is muttered,—
That here you maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be despatch'd and fought,

You are disputing of your generals:
One would have long ring wars, with little cost;
Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third man thinks, without expense at all,
By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.
Awake, awake, English nobility!

Let not sloth dim your honours, new-begot:
Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Exe. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,
These tidings would call forth her flowing tides.

Bed. Me they concern; regent I am of France.— [France.—

Give me my steeled coat! I'll fight for Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Wounds will I lend the French, instead of eyes,
To weep their intermissive miseries.

Enter a second Messenger.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mischance.

France is revolted from the English quite,
Except some petty towns of no import:
The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims;
The Bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Reignier, Duke of Anjou, doth take his part;
The Duke of Alençon fieth to his side.

Exe. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly to him!

O, whither shall we fly from this reproach?
Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats:—

Bedford, if thou be slack I'll fight it out
Bed. Gloster, why doubt'st thou of my forwardness?

An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is overrun.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords,—to add to your laments,

Wherewith you now bedew King Henry's hearse,--

I must inform you of a dismal fight
Betwixt the stout Lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is't so? o'erthrown.

3 Mess. O, no; wherein Lord Talbot was
The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.
The tenth of August last this dreadful lord,
Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three-and-twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon.
No leisure had he to enrank his men,
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof, sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges,

They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand
him.

Here, there, and everywhere, enrag'd he flew.
The French exclaim'd the devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood amaz'd on him:
His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out again,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up
If Sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward
He, being in the vaward,-- plac'd behind,
With purpose to relieve and follow them,--
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre,
Enclosed were they with their enemies--
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,

Durst not presume to look once in the face
Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease,
While such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foemen is betray'd.

3 Mess. O no, he lives, but is took prisoner,
And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford.

Most of the rest slaughter'd or took likewise.
Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall pay-- [throne,--

I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.--
Farewell, my masters, to my task will I,
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast withal:
Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe
quake. [sieg'd;

3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is be-
The English army is grown weak and faint:
The Earl of Salisbury craveth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Exe. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn,

Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it, and here take my leave,

To go about my preparation.

[Exit

Glo. I'll to the Tower, with all the haste
I can,

To view the artillery and munition,
And then I will proclaim young Henry king
[Exit

Exe. To Eltham will I, where the young king is,

Being ordain'd his special governor,
And for his safety there I'll best devise
[Exit.

Win. Each hath his place and function to attend:

I am left out; for me nothing remains
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office:
The king from Eltham I intend to steal,
And sit at chiefest stern of public weal
[Exit Scene closes.

SCENE II.--FRANCE. Before Orleans.

Enter CHARLES, with his Forces, ALLENÇON,
REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens,
So in the earth, to this day is not known.
Late did he shine upon the English side,
Now we are victors, upon us he smiles.
What towns of any moment but we have?
At pleasure here we lie near Orleans,
Otherwhiles the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,

Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Allen. They want their porridge and their fat bull-beeves--

Either they must be dieted like mules,
And have their provender tied to their mouths,
Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice

Reig. Let's raise the siege why live we idly here?

Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear:
Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury;
And he may well in fretting spend his gall,--
Nor men nor money hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound alarum! we will rush
on them.

Now for the honour of the forlorn French!--
Him I forgive my death that killeth me,
When he sees me go back one foot or flee.

[Exeunt

Alarums; excursions; afterwards a retreat
Re-enter CHARLES, ALLENÇON, REIGNIER
and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I!--

Dogs! cowards! dastards! I would ne'er have fled

But that they left me midst my enemies.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fighteth as one weary of his life.
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Allen. Froissart, a countryman of ours, records
England all Olivers and Rowlands bred
During the time Edward the Third did reign
More truly now may this be verified;

For none but Samsons and Goliasses
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!
Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose

They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves,

And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they'll tear down than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd gimmicks or device,

Their arms are set, like clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do.
By my consent, we'll even let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the BASTARD OF ORLEANS.

Bast. Where's the Prince Dauphin? I have news for him. [us.]

Char. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to Bast. Methinks your looks are sad, your cheer appall'd:

Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succor is at hand:

A holy maid hither with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,
Ordained is to raise this tedious siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome:
What's past and what's to come she can descry.
Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words,
For they are certain and infallible.

Char. Go, call her in. [Exit BASTARD.]

But first, to try her skill,

Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:
Question her proudly; let thy looks be stern:
By this means shall we sound what skill she hath. [Retires.]

Re-enter the BASTARD OF ORLEANS, with LA PUCELLE.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats?

Puc. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?— [behind;]

Where is the Dauphin?—Come, come from
I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart.—
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash. [daughter,]

Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's
My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.
Heaven and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd
To shine on my contemptible estate:
Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,
And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,
God's mother deigned to appear to me,
And in a vision full of majesty
Will'd me to leave my base vocation,
And free my country from calamity:
Her aid she promis'd and assur'd success:
In complete glory she reveal'd herself;
And whereas I was black and swart before,

With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,
That beauty am I bless'd with which you see.
Ask me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer unpremeditated:

My courage try by combat if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.
Resolve on this,—thou shalt be fortunate
If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms:

Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,—
In single combat thou shalt buckle with me;
And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true:
Otherwise I renounce all confidence.

Puc. I am prepar'd: here is my keen-edg'd
sword,

Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side;
The which at Touraine, in Saint Katherine's churchyard,
Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

Char. Then come, o' God's name; I fear no woman.

Puc. And while I live I'll ne'er fly from a man. [They fight.]

Char. Stay, stay thy hands! thou art an Amazon,

And fightest with the sword of Deborah.

Puc. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak. [help me:]

Char. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must Impatiently I burn with thy desire;
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd.
Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,
Let me thy servant and not sovereign be:
'Tis the French Dauphin sueth to thee thus.

Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love,
For my profession's sacred from above:
When I have chased all thy foes from hence,
Then will I think upon a recompense.

Char. Meantime look gracious on thy prostrate thrall.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless he shrives this woman to her smock;

Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?

Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know:

These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?

Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Puc. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants!
Fight till the last gasp; I will be your guard.

Char. What she says I'll confirm: we'll fight it out. [scourge.]

Puc. Assign'd am I to be the English
This night the siege assuredly I'll raise:

Expect Saint Martin's summer, halcyon days,
Since I have entered into these wars.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till by broad spreading it disperse to naught.

With Henry's death the English circle ends;
Dispersed are the glories it included.

Now am I like that proud insulting ship
Which Cæsar and his fortune bare at once.

Char. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?
Thou with an eagle art inspired, then.

Helen, the mother of great Constantine, [thee.
Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters, were like
Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth,
How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays, and let us raise the siege. [honours;

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd.

Char. Presently we'll try:—come, let's away about it:—

No prophet will I trust if she prove false.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—LONDON. Before the Gates of the Tower.

Enter the DUKE OF GLOSTER, with his Serving-men in blue coats.

Glo. I am come to survey the Tower this day: [ance.—

Since Henry's death, I fear, there is convey-Where be these warders, that they wait not
here?

Open the gates: Gloster it is that calls.

[Servants knock.

1 Ward. [Within.] Who's there that knocks so imperiously?

1 Serv. It is the noble Duke of Gloster.

2 Ward. [Within.] Whoe'er he be, you may not be let in. [tector?

1 Serv. Villains, answer you so the lord pro-1 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him!
so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd.

Glo. Who willed you? or whose will stands but mine?

There's none protector of the realm but I.—
Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize:
Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill grooms?

[GLOSTER'S Servants rush at the Tower-gates.

Wood. [Within.] What noise is this? what traitors have we here?

Glo. Lieutenant, is it you whose voice I hear?
Open the gates; here's Gloster that would enter.

Wood. [Within.] Have patience, noble Duke;
I may not open;

The Cardinal of Winchester forbids:

From him I have express commandment

That thou nor none of thine shall be let in.

Glo. Faint-hearted Woodville, prizest him fore me,—

Arrogant Winchester? that haughty prelate

Whom Henry, our late sovereign, ne'er could brook?

Thou art no friend to God or to the king:

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

1 Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector, [quickly

Or we'll burst them open if that you come not [GLOSTER'S Servants rush again at the Tower-gates.

Enter WINCHESTER, with his Serving-men in tauny coats.

Win. How now, ambitious Humphry! what means this?

Glo. Peel'd priest, dost thou command me to be shut out?

Win. I do, thou most usurping proditor,
And not protector of the king or realm.

Glo. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator,
Thou that contriv'st to murder our dead lord;
Thou that giv'st whores indulgences to sin:
I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,
If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Win. Nay, stand thou back; I will not budge a foot:

This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain,
To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt. [back:

Glo. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee
Thy scarlet robes as a child's bearing-cloth
I'll use to carry thee out of this place.

Win. Do what thou dar'st; I heard thee to thy face. [face?—

Glo. What! am I dar'd, and bearded to my
Draw, men, for all this privileged place;

Blue-coats to tawney-coats.—Priest, beware
your beard;

I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly:

Under my feet I'll stamp thy cardinal's hat;

In spite of pope or dignities of church,

Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down.

Win. Gloster, thou wilt answer this before the pope. [rope!—

Glo. Winchester goose! I cry, a rope! a
Now beat them hence, why do you let them stay?— [array.—

Thee I'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's
Out, tawny-coats!—Out, scarlet hypocrite!

GLOSTER and his Servants attack the other Party. In the tumult, enter the Mayor of London and Officers.

May. Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumeliously should break the peace!

Glo. Peace, mayor! thou know'st little of my wrongs:

Here's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king,
Hath here distrain'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here's Gloster, too, a foe to citizens;

One that still motions war, and never peace,

O'ercharging your free purses with large fines;

That seeks to overthrow religion,

Because he is protector of the realm;

And would have armour here out of the Tower,

To crown himself king and suppress the prince.

Glo. I will not answer thee with words, but blows. [Here they skirmish again.

May. Naught rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,

But to make open proclamation:—

Come, officer, as loud as e'er thou canst.

Off. [Reads.] All manner of men assembled here in arms this day against God's peace and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use any sword, weapon, or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law;
But we shall meet and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloster, we'll meet, to thy dear cost,
be sure:

Thy heart-blood I will have for this day's work.

May. I'll call for clubs if you will not away:—
This cardinal's more haughty than the devil.

Glo. Mayor, farewell: thou dost but what thou mayst.

Win. Abominable Gloster! guard thy head;
For I intend to have it ere long.

[*Exeunt severally, GLO., and WIN.,
with their Servants.*]

May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.— [bear!]

Good God, these nobles should such stomachs
I myself fight not once in forty year. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—FRANCE. Before Orleans.

Enter, on the walls, the Master-Gunner and his Son.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieg'd,

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Son. Father, I know; and oft have shot at
them,

Howe'er, unfortunate, I missed my aim.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou rul'd by me:

Chief master-gunner am I of this town;
Something I must do to procure me grace.
The prince's espials have informed me
How the English, in the suburbs close intrench'd,

Wont, through a secret grate of iron bars
In yonder tower, to overpeer the city,
And thence discover how with most advantage
They may vex us with shot or with assault.
To intercept this inconvenience,
A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd;
And even these three days have I watch'd if I Could see them.

Now do thou watch, for I can stay no longer.
If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word;
And thou shalt find me at the governor's.

[Exit.]

Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care;
I'll never trouble you if I may spy them.

*Enter, in an upper Chamber of a Tower, the LORDS SALISBURY and TALBOT, SIR WILLIAM GLANSDALE SIR THOMAS GARGRAVE, and
others*

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd!
How wert thou handled being prisoner?

Or by what means gott'st thou to be releas'd?
Discourse, I prythee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The Duke of Bedford had a prison
Call'd the brave Lord Ponton de Santraille
For him I was exchang'd and ransomed.
But with a baser man of arms by far
Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd
me:

Which, I, disdaining, scorn'd; and craved death
Rather than I would be so vile-esteem'd.
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd. [heart!]
But, O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my Whom with my bare fists I would execute
If I now had him brought into my power.

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not how thou wert entertain'd. [taunts]

Tal. With scoffs, and scorns, and contumelious
In open market-place produc'd they me,

To be a public spectacle to all:

Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scarecrow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me,
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground

To hurl at the beholders of my shame:
My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread

That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant:
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had,
That walk'd about me every minute-while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd;

But we will be reveng'd sufficiently.
Now it is supper-time in Orleans:
Here, through this grate, I can count each one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify:
Let us look in; the sight will much delight
thee.—

Sir Thomas Gargrave and Sir William Glansdale,

Let me have your express opinions
Where is best place to make our battery next.

Gar. I think at the north gate, for there stand lords.

Glan. And I here, at the bulwark of the bridge.

Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,

Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.

[*Shot from the town. SAL. and SIR
THOMAS GARGRAVE fall.*]

Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners!

Gar. O Lord, have mercy on me, woeful man!
Tal. What chance is this that suddenly hath cross'd us?—

Speak, Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak:
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?
One of thy eyes and thy cheek's side struck off!—

Accurs'd tower! accurs'd fatal hand
That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame;
Henry the Fifth he first train'd to the wars;
Whilst any trumpet did sound or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.—
Yet liv'st thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,

One eye thou hast, to look to heaven for grace:
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.—
Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands!—
Bear hence his body; I will help to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.—
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort;
Thou shalt not die whiles—

He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me,
As who should say, *When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.*—
Plantagenet, I will; and like thee, Nero,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:

Wretched shall France be only in my name.

[Thunder heard; afterwards an alarum
What stir is this? What tumult's in the heavens?

Whence cometh this alarum, and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head:

The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,—
A holy prophetess new risen up,—
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

[SAL. lifts himself and groans

Tal. Hear, hear how dying Salisbury doth groan!

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd.—
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you:—
Pucelle or puzzle, dolphin or dogfish, [heels,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.—
Convey me Salisbury into his tent, [men dare.
And then we'll try what these dastard French—
[Exeunt, bearing out the bodies

SCENE V.—The same. Before one of the Gates.

Alarum; skirmishings. Enter TALBOT, pursuing the DAUPHIN, drives him in, and exit: then enter JOAN LA PUCELLE, driving Englishmen before her, and exit after them then re-enter TALBOT.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?

Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them,
A woman clad in armour chaseth them.
Here, here she comes.

Enter LA PUCELLE.

I'll have a bout with thee;
Devil or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee
Blood will I draw on thee,—thou art a witch,—
And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Puc. Come, come, 'tis only I that must disgrace thee. [They fight.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail? [courage,

My breast I'll burst with straining of my
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

[They fight again

Puc. [Retiring] Talbot, farewell: thy hour is not yet come:

I must go victual Orleans forthwith.
O'ertake me if thou canst, I scorn thy strength.
Go, go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men,
Help Salisbury to make his testament:
This day is ours, as many more shall be.

[LA Puc. enters the town with Soldiers.

Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;

I know not where I am nor what I do:
A witch by fear, not force, like Hannibal Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists:

So bees with smoke and doves with noisome stench

Are from their hives and houses driven away.
They call'd us, for our fierceness, English dogs;

Now like to whelps we crying run away.

[A short alarum.

Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight
Or tear the lions out of England's coat;
Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead:
Sheep run not half so tumorous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.

[Alarum. Another skirmish.

It will not be:—retire into your trenches:
You all consented unto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.—
Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans,
In spite of us or aught that we could do.
O, would I were to die with Salisbury!
The shame hereof will make me hide my head!

[Alarum. Retreat. Exeunt TALBOT and Forces, &c.

Flourish. Enter on the walls, LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, REIGNIER, ALENÇON, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls,

Rescu'd is Orleans from the English:—
Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.

Char. Divinest creature, Astræa's daughter,
How shall I honour thee for this success?
Thy promises are like Adoms' gardens,
That one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next.—

France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess!—
Recover'd is the town of Orleans:
More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.

Reig. Why ring not out the bells aloud throughout the town?

Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires,
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

Alen. All France will be replete with mirth and joy

When they shall hear how we have play'd the
men.

Char. 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won;

For which I will divide my crown with her;
And all the priests and friars in my realm
Shall in procession sing her endless praise.
A stather pyramus to her I'll rear
Than Rhodope's of Memphis ever was:
In memory of her when she is dead,
Her ashes, in an urn more precious
Than the rich jewell'd coffer of Darius,
Transported shall be at high festivals
Before the kings and queens of France.
No longer on Saint Denis will we cry,
But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint.
Come in, and let us banquet royally,
After this golden day of victory.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Before Orleans.

Enter to the Gate a French Sergeant and two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places and be vigilant:
If any noise or soldier you perceive

Near to the walls, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
1 Sen. Sergeant, you shall. [Exit Sergeant.]

Thus are poor servitors,
When others sleep upon their quiet beds,
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, and Forces, with scaling-ladders; their drums beating a dead march.

Tal. Lord regent and redoubt Burgundy,—
By whose approach the regions of Artois,
Walloon, and Picardy are friends to us,—
This happy night the Frenchmen are secure,
Having all day carous'd and banqueted:
Embrace we, then, this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their-deceit,
Contriv'd by art and baleful sorcery.

Bed. Coward of France!—how much he wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell.

Bur. Traitors have never other company.—
But what's that Pucelle whom they term so pure?

Tal. A maid, they say.

Bed. A maid! and be so martial!

Bur. Pray God she prove not masculine ere long,

If underneath the standard of the French
She carry armour, as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits:

God is our fortress, in whose conquering
name

Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow
thee.

Tal. Not all together: better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways;
That, if it chance the one of us do fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed: I'll to yon corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And here will Talbot mount or make his grave.—

Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appear
How much in duty I am bound to both.

The English scale the walls, crying St. George! a Talbot! and all enter the Town.

Sent. Arm! arm! the enemy doth make assault!

*The French leap over the walls in their shirts.
Enter, several ways, BASTARD, ALENÇON,
REIGNIER, half ready and half unready.*

Alen. How now, my lords? what, all un-ready so? [well.]

Bast. Unready! ay, and glad we 'scap'd so

Reig. 'Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds,

Hearing alarms at our chamber-doors.

Alen. Of all exploits since first I follow'd arms,

Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprise
More venturous or desperate than this.

Bast. I think this Talbot be a fiend of hell.
Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.

Alen. Here cometh Charles: I marvel how he sped.

Bast. Tut! holy Joan was his defensive guard.

Enter CHARLES and LA PUCELLE.

Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame?

Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal,
Make us partakers of a little gain,
That now our loss might be ten times so much?

Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?

At all times will you have my power alike?
Sleeping or waking, must I still prevail,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?
Improvident soldiers! had your watch been good

This sudden mischief never could have fall'n.

Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default,

That, being captain of the watch to-night,

Did look no better to that weighty charge.

Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept

As that whereof I had the government,
We had not been thus shamefully surpris'd.

Bast. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my lord.

Char. And, for myself, most part of all this
night,

Within her quarter and mine own precinct

I was employ'd in passing to and fro,

About relieving of the sentinels:

Then how or which way should they first break in?

Puc. Question, my lords, no further of the case,

How or which way; 'tis sure they found some place

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made.

And now there rests no other shift but this,—
To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms to endamage them.

Alarum. Enter an English Soldier, crying a Talbot! a Talbot! They fly, leaving their clothes behind.

Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword,
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—ORLEANS. Within the Town.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break and night is fled,

Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.

Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.
[Retreat sounded.]

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury,
And here advance it in the market-place,
The middle centre of this cursed town.

Now have I paid my vow unto his soul;
For every drop of blood was drawn from him,
There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-
night.

And that hereafter ages may behold
What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,
Within their chiefest temple I'll erect
A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be interr'd:
Upon the which, that every one may read,
Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans,
The treacherous manner of his mournful death,
And what a terror he had been to France.
But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,
I muse we meet not with the Dauphin's grace,
His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc,
Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. 'Tis thought, Lord Talbot, when the fight began,
Rous'd on the sudden from their drowsy beds,
They did, amongst the troops of armed men,
Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.
Bur. Myself,—as far as I could well discern
For smoke and dusky vapours of the night,—
Am sure I scar'd the Dauphin and his truil,
When arm in arm they both came swiftly running,
Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves,
That could not live asunder day or night.
After that things are set in order here,
We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this princely train
Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts
So much applauded through the realm of
France?

Tal. Here is the Talbot: who would speak
with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, Countess of Auvergne,
With modesty admiring thy renown,
By me entreats, great lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe

To visit her poor castle where she lies,
That she may boast she hath beheld the man
Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Bur. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see our wars

Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport,
When ladies crave to be encounter'd with.—
You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for when a world of men

Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness overrul'd:—
And therefore tell her I return great thanks,
And in submission will attend on her.—
Will not your honours bear me company?

Bed. No, truly; it is more than manners will:
And I have heard it said, unbidden guests
Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,

I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.—

Come hither, captain. [Whispers.] You perceive my mind?

Cath. I do, my lord, and mean accordingly.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—AUVERGNE. Court of the Castle.

Enter the COUNTESS and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge; [me.]

And when you have done so, bring the keys to Port. Madam, I will. [Exit.]

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out
night,

I shall as famous be by this exploit
As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus' death.
Great is the rumor of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account:
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine
ears,

To give their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and TALBOT.

Mess. Madam,
According as your ladyship desir'd,
By message crav'd, so is Lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the man?

Mess. Madam, it is.

Count. Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad
That with his name the mothers still their babes?

I see report is fabulous and false:
I thought I should have seen some Hercules
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs
Alas, this is a child, a silly dwarf!
It cannot be this weak and writhled shrump
Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble
you;

But since your ladyship is not at leisure,
I'll sort some other time to visit you. [Going.]

Count. What means he now?—Go ask him whither he goes.

Mess. Stay, my Lord Talbot; for my lady craves

To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,
I go to certify her Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter with keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.
Tal. Prisoner! to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord;
And for that cause I traun'd thee to my house.
Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my gallery thy picture hangs:

But now the substance shall endure the like;
And I will chain these legs and arms of thine,
That hast by tyranny these many years
Wasted our country, slain our citizens,
And sent our sons and husbands captivate.

Tal. Ha, ha, ha!

Count. Laughest thou, wretch? thy mirth shall turn to moan.

Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond
To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow

Whereon to practise your severity.

Count. Why, art not thou the man?

Tal. I am indeed.

Count. Then have I substance too.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself:
You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here;
For what you see is but the smallest part
And least proportion of humanity:
I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here,
It is of such a spacious lofty pitch,
Your roof were not sufficient to contain't.

Count. This is a niddling merchant for the nonce;

He will be here, and yet he is not here:
How can these contrarieties agree?

Tal. That will I show you presently.

[He winds a Horn. Drums heard; then a Peal of Ordnance. The Gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded
That Talbot is but shadow of himself?
These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength,

With which he yoketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns,
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse:
I find thou art no less than fame hath bruited,
And more than may be gather'd by thy shape.
Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am sorry that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue

The mind of Talbot as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.

What have you done hath not offended me:
No other satisfaction do I crave

But only—with your patience—that we may Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have;

For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart, and think me honoured

To feast so great a warrior in my house.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—LONDON. The Temple Garden.
Enter the EARLS OF SOMERSET, SUFFOLK, and WARWICK; RICHARD PLANTAGENET, VERNON, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords and gentlemen, what means this silence?

Dare no man answer in a case of truth?

Suf. Within the Temple-hall we were too loud;

The garden here is more convenient. [truth;
Plan. Then say at once if I maintain'd the
Or else was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Suf. Faith, I have been a truant in the law,
And never yet could frame my will to it;
And therefore frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, the, between us. [higher pitch;

War. Between two hawks, which flies the Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth; [temper;

Between two blades, which bears the better
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye;—

I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment;

But in these nice sharp quillets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw. [ance:

Plan. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbear—
The truth appears so naked on my side
That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-tied and so loth
to speak,

In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts:

Let him that is a true-born gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,

If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no coward nor no
flatterer,

But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.

War I love no colours; and, without all colour

Of base insinuating flattery,
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet. [set;

Suf. I pluck this red rose with young Somerset
And say withal, I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen, and pluck no more

Till you conclude that he upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree

Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well objected:

If I have fewest I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I. [case,
Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the

I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here,
Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off,
Lest, bleeding, you do paint the white rose red,
And fall on my side so, against your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt,

And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on; who else?
Law. Unless my study and my books be false,

The argument you held was wrong in you;
[To SOMERSET.

In sign whereof I pluck a white rose too.

Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here in my scabbard; meditating that Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red.

Plan. Meantime your cheeks do counterfeit our roses;

For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side

Som. No, Plantagenet,
'Tis not for fear, but anger that thy cheeks

Blush for pure shame to counterfeit our roses,
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;

Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.
[bleeding roses,

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my
That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,

I scorn thee and thy faction, peevish boy.

Suf. Turn not thy scorns thus way, Plantagenet.

Plan. Proud Poole, I will; and scorn both him and thee.

Suf. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole! We grace the yeoman by conversing with him.

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him, Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel Duke of Clarence, Third son to the third Edward King of England. Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root?

Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege, Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words

On any plot of ground in Christendom.

Was not thy father, Richard Earl of Cambridge, For treason executed in our late king's days?

And by his treason stand'st not thou attainted, Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry?

His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;

And till thou be restor'd thou art a yeoman.

Plan. My father was attach'd, not attainted. Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;

And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset Were growing time once open'd to my will.

For your partaker Poole, and you yourself,

I'll note you in my book of memory,

To scourge you for this apprehension:

Look to it well, and say you are well warn'd.

Som. Ay, thou shalt find us ready for thee still;

And know us by these colours for thy foes,—

For these my friends, in spite of thee, shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,

As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,

Will I for ever, and my faction, wear,

Until it wither with me to my grave,

Or flourish to the height of my degree.

Suf. Go forward, and be chok'd with thy ambition!

And so, farewell, until I meet thee next. [Exit.]

Som. Have with thee, Poole.—Farewell, ambitious Richard. [Exit.]

Plan. How I am brav'd, and must perforce endure it!

War. This blot, that they object against your house,

Shall be wip'd out in the next Parliament, Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster:

And if thou be not then created York,

I will not live to be accounted Warwick.

Meantime, in signal of my love to thee,

Against proud Somerset and William Poole,

Will I upon thy party wear this rose:

And here I prophesy,—This brawl to-day,

Grown to this faction, in the Temple-garden,

Shall send, between the red rose and the white,

A thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plan. Good Master Vernon, I am bound to you,

That thou on my behalf would pluck a flower.

Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same.

Law. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, let us four to dinner: I dare say

This quarrel will drink blood another day.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The same. A Room in the Tower.

Enter MORTIMER, brought in in a chair by two Keepers.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,

Let dying Mortimer here rest himself.—

Even like a man new-haled from the rack,

So fare my limbs with long imprisonment;

And these gray locks, the pursuivants of death,

Nestor-like aged, in an age of care,

Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer. [Spent,—

These eyes,—like lamps whose wasting oil is Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent: [grief;

Weak shoulders, overborne with burdening

And pitiless arms, like to a wither'd vine

That droops his sapless branches to the ground:

Yet are these feet,—whose strengthless stay is numb,

Unable to support this lump of clay,—

Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,

As witting I no other comfort have.—

But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?

Keep. Richard Plantagenet, my lord will come:

We sent unto the Temple, to his chamber;

And answer was return'd that he will come.

Mor. Enough: my soul shall then be satisfied.—

Poor gentleman! his wrong doth equal mine.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,—

Before whose glory I was great in arms,—

This loathsome sequestration have I had;

And ever since then hath Richard been obscur'd,

Depriv'd of honour and inheritance.

But now the arbitrator of despairs,

Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,

With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence:

I would his troubles likewise were expir'd

That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET.

Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come. [come?]

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly us'd,

Your nephew, late-despised Richard, comes.

Mor. Direct mine arms I may embrace his neck,

And in his bosom spend my latter gasp:

O, tell me when my lips do touch his cheeks,

That I may kindly give one fainting kiss.—

And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock,

Why didst thou say of late thou wert despis'd?

Plan. First, lean thine aged back against mine arm;

And, in that ease, I'll tell thee my disease.

This day, in argument upon a case,

Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me;

Among which terms he us'd his lavish tongue,

And did upbraid me with my father's death:
Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him.
Therefore, good uncle, for my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And for alliance sake, declare the cause
My father, Earl of Cambridge, lost his head.

Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprisonment of me,

And hath detain'd me all my flowering youth
Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
Was cursed instrument of his decease. [was;

Plan. Discover more at large what cause that
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess.

Mor. I will, if that my fading breath permit,
And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, grandfather to this king,
Depos'd his nephew Richard,—Edward's son,
The first-begotten, and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent:
During whose reign the Percies of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne:
The reason mov'd these warlike lords to this
Was, for that,—young King Richard thus removed,

Leaving no heir begotten of his body,—
I was the next by birth and parentage;
For by my mother I deriv'd am
From Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third son
To King Edward the Third; whereas he
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
But mark: as in this haughty great attempt
They labour'd to plant the rightful heir,
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.
Long after this, when Henry the Fifth,
Succeeding his father Bolingbroke, did reign,
Thy father, Earl of Cambridge, then deriv'd
From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of York,
Marrying my sister, that thy mother was,
Again, in pity of my hard distress,
Levied an army, weening to redeem
And have install'd me in the diadem:
But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.

Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True; and thou see'st that I no issue have,

And that my fainting words do warrant death:
Thou art my heir; the rest I wish thee gather:
But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with
me:

But yet methinks my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.

Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic;
Strong-fixed is the house of Lancaster,
And, like a mountain, not to be remov'd.
But now thy uncle is removing hence;
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O uncle, would some part of my young years

Might but redeem the passage of your age!

Mor. Thou dost then wrong me,—as the slaughterer doth

Which giveth many wounds when one will kill.

Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;
Only, give order for my funeral:
And so, farewell; and far be all thy hopes,
And prosperous be thy life in peace and war!

[Dies.

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soul!

In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage,
And like a hermit overpass'd thy days.—
Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast;
And what I do imagine, let that rest.—
Keepers, convey him hence; and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life.—

[Exeunt Keepers, bearing out the body of MOR.

Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort:—
And for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,
I doubt not but with honour to redress;
And therefore haste I to the Parliament,
Either to be restored to my blood,
Or make my ill the advantage of my good.

[Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—LONDON. The Parliament House.
Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, EXETER, GLOSTER, WARWICK, SOMERSET, and SUFFOLK;
the BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, and others. GLOSTER offers to put up a bill; WINCHESTER snatches
it, and tears it.

Win. Com'st thou with deep premeditated
lines,

With written pamphlets studiously devis'd,
Humphrey of Gloster? If thou canst accuse,
Or aught intend'st to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention, suddenly:
As I with sudden and extemporal speech
Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glo. Presumptuous priest! this place commands
my patience,
Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonour'd me.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen:
No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissentious pranks,
As very infants prattle of thy pride.

Thou art a most pernicious usurer;
Froward by nature, enemy to peace;
Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseems
A man of thy profession and degree;
And for thy treachery, what's more manifest,—
In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life,
As well at London bridge as at the Tower?
Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloster, I do defy thee.—Lords, vouchsafe

To give me hearing what I shall reply.
If I were covetous, ambitious, or perverse,
As he will have me, how am I so poor?
Or how haps it I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?
And for dissension, who preferreth peace

More than I do,—except I be provok'd?
 No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
 It is not that that hath incens'd the duke:
 It is because no one should sway but he;
 No one but he should be about the king;
 And that engenders thunder in his breast,
 And makes him roar these accusations forth.
 But he shall know I am as good—

Glo. As good!
 Thou bastard of my grandfather!—

Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray,
 But one imperious in another's throne?

Glo. Am I not protector, saucy priest?

Win. And am not I a prelate of the church?

Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
 And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloster!

Glo. Thou art reverent
 Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.

Win. Rome shall remedy this.

War. Roam thither then.

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

War. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.

Som. Methinks my lord should be religious,
 And know the office that belongs to such.

War. Methinks his lordship should be humbler,

It fitteth not a prelate so to plead. [near.]

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so

War. State holy or unhallow'd, what of that?

Is not his grace protector to the king? [tongue]

Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his

Lest it be said, Speak, sirrah, when you should;

Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords!

Else would I have a flogging at Winchester.

[Aside.]

K. Hen. Uncles of Gloster and of Winchester,

The special watchmen of our English weal,

I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,

To join your hearts in love and amity.

O, what a scandal is it to our crown

That two such noble peers as ye should jar!

Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell

Civil dissension is a viperous worm

That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.

[A noise within, "Down with the tawney coats,"]

What tumult's this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant,
 Begun through malice of the bishop's men!

[A noise again, "Stones! Stones!"]

Enter the Mayor of London, attended.

May. O, my good lords,—and virtuous
 Henry,—

Pity the city of London, pity us!

The bishop and the Duke of Gloster's men,

Forbidden late to carry any weapon,

Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones,

And, banding themselves in contrary parts,

Do pelt so fast at one another's pate, [out;]

That many have their giddy brains knock'd

Our windows are broke down in every street,

And we, for fear, compell'd to shut our shops.

Enter, skirmishing, the Retainers of GLOSTER and WINCHESTER, with bloody pates.

K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself, [peace.—]

To hold your slaughter'd hands, and keep the Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.

1 Serv. Nay, if we be Forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.

2 Serv. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.

[Skirmish again.]

Glo. You of my household, leave this peevish

broil,

And set this unaccustom'd fight aside.

3 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a
 man

Just and upright; and for your royal birth

Inferior to none but to his majesty:

And ere that we will suffer such a prince,

So kind a father of the commonweal,

To be disgraced by an inhorn mate,

We, and our wives and children, all will fight,

And have our bodies slaughter'd by the foes.

1 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails

Shall pitch a field when we are dead.

[Skirmish again.]

Glo. Stay, stay, I say!

And if you love me, as you say you do,

Let me persuade you to forbear awhile.

K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul!—

Can you, my Lord of Winchester, behold

My sighs and tears, and will not once relent?

Who should be pitiful if you be not?

Or who should study to prefer a peace,

If holy churchmen take delight in broils?

War. Yield, my lord protector;—yield,
 Winchester;—

Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,

To slay your sovereign and destroy the realm.

You see what mischief, and what murder too,

Hath been enacted through your enmity;

Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glo. Compassion on the king commands me
 stoop;

Or I would see his heart out, ere the priest

Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my Lord of Winchester, the duke

Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,

As by his smoothen'd brows it doth appear:

Why look you still so stern and tragical?

Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.

K. Hen. Fie, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you preach

That malice was a great and grievous sin;

And will not you maintain the thing you teach,

But prove a chief offender in the same?

War. Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly gird.—

For shame, my Lord of Winchester, relent!

What, shall a child instruct you what to do?

Win. Well, Duke of Gloster, I will yield to
 thee;

Love for thy love and hand for hand I give.

Glo. Ay, but, I fear me, with a hollow heart.—

See here, my friends and loving countrymen;

This token serveth for a flag of truce

Betwixt ourselves and all our followers:

So help me God, as I dissemble not!

Win. So help me God, as I intend it not!

[Aside.]

K. Hen. O loving uncle, kind Duke of Gloster,

How joyful am I made by this contract!—

Away, my masters! trouble us no more;
But join in friendship, as your lords have done.

1 Serv. Content: I'll to the surgeon's.

2 Serv. And so will I.

3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords.

[Exeunt Servants, Mayor, &c.]

War. Accept this scroll, most gracious sovereign;

Which in the right of Richard Plantagenet
We do exhibit to your majesty.

Glo. Well urg'd my Lord of Warwick;—for,
sweet prince,

An if your grace mark every circumstance,
You have great reason to do Richard right;
Especially for those occasions

At Eltham Place I told your majesty. [force:

K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is
That Richard be restored to his blood.

War. Let Richard be restored to his blood;
So shall his father's wrongs be recompens'd.

Win. As will the rest, so willeth Winchester.

K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that alone,

But all the whole inheritance I give
That doth belong unto the house of York,
From whence you spring by lineal descent.

Plan. Thy humble servant vows obedience
And humble service till the point of death.

K. Hen. Stoop, then, and set your knee against my foot;

And in requerdon of that duty done
I girt thee with the valiant sword of York:

Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet,
And rise created princely Duke of York. [fall!]

Plan. And so thrive Richard as thy foes may
And as my duty springs, so perish they

That grudge one thought against your majesty!
All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty Duke of York!

Som. Perish, base prince, ignoble Duke of York! [Aside.]

Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty
To cross the seas, and to be crown'd in France:

The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends,

As it disanimates his enemies.
K. Hen. When Gloster says the word, King
Henry goes;

For friendly counsel cuts off many foes.
Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.

[Flourish. Exeunt all but EXETER.]

Exe. Ay, we may march in England or in
France,

Not seeing what is likely to ensue.
This late dissension grown betwixt the peers

Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,
And will at last break out into a flame:

As fester'd members rot but by degree,
Till bones and flesh and sinews fall away,

So will this base and envious discord breed.
And now I fear that fatal prophecy

Which in the time of Henry named the Fifth
Was in the mouth of every sucking babe,—

That Henry born at Monmouth should win all,
And Henry born at Windsor should lose all:

Which is so plain that Exeter doth wish
His days may finish ere that hapless time.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—FRANCE. Before Rouen.

Enter LA PUCELLE disguised, and Soldiers dressed like Countrymen, with sacks upon their backs.

Puc. These are the city-gates, the gates of Rouen,

Through which our policy must make a breach:
Take heed, be wary how you place your words;

Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men
That come to gather money for their corn.

If we have entrance,—as I hope we shall,—
And that we find the slothful watch but weak,

I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

1 Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack
the city,

And we be lords and rulers over Rouen;
Therefore we'll knock. [Knocks.]

Guard. [Within.] Qui est là!

Puc. Paysans, pauvres gens de France,—
Poor market-folks that come to sell their corn.

Guard. [Opening the gates.] Enter, go in; the market-bell is rung.

Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground.

[LA PUCELLE, &c., enter the Town.]

Enter CHARLES, BASTARD OF ORLEANS, ALENÇON, and Forces.

Char. Saint Denis bless this happy stratagem!
And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen.

Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle and her practis-
ants;

Now she is there, how will she specify
Where is the best and safest passage in?

Alen. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower; [is,—

Which, once, discern'd, shows that her meaning
No way to that, for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter LA PUCELLE, on a battlement, holding out a torch burning.

Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding-torch
That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen,
But burning fatal to the Talbotites.

Bast. See, noble Charles, the beacon of our friend;

The burning torch in yonder turret stands.
Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,

A prophet to the fall of all our foes!
Alen. Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends;

Enter, and cry The Dauphin, presently,
And then do execution on the watch.

[They enter. Exit LA PUCELLE above.]

Alarum. Enter, from the Town, TALBOT and English Soldiers.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,

If Talbot but survive thy treachery.—
Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,

Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escap'd the pride of France.

[Exeunt into the Town.]

Alarum: excursions. Enter, from the Town, BEDFORD, brought in sick in a chair, with TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and the English Forces. Then enter on the walls LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, BASTARD, ALENÇON, and others.

Puc. Good-morrow, gallants! want ye corn for bread?

I think the Duke of Burgundy will fast Before he'll buy again at such a rate: 'Twas full of darnel;—do you like the taste?

Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend and shameless courtesan!

I trust ere long to choke thee with thine own, And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Char. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time. [treason!]

Bed. O let no words, but deeds, revenge this

Puc. What will you do, good gray-beard? break a lance,

And run a tilt at death within a chair?

Tal. Foul fiend of France, and bag of all despite.

Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours! Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,

And twit with cowardice a man half dead? Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,

Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Puc. Are you so hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy peace;

If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow.

[TALBOT and the rest consult together.]
God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker? [field?]

Tal. Dare ye come forth and meet us in the

Puc. Belike your lordship takes us then for fools,

To try if that our own be ours or no.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate, But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest;

Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?

Alen. Signior, no. [France!]

Tal. Signior, hang!—base multeers of Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls,

And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Puc. Away, captain! let's get us from the walls;

For Talbot means no goodness, by his looks.—God b'w! you, my lord! we came but to tell you That we are here.

[Exeunt LA PUC., &c., from the walls]
Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long

Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame!—Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,—

Prick on by public wrongs sustain'd in France,—

Either to get the town again or die;

And I,—as sure as English Henry lives, And as his father here was conqueror;

As sure as in this late-betrayed town Great Cœur-de-lion's heart was buried,—

So sure I swear to get the town or die. [vows.]

Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy

Tal. But ere we go, regard this dying prince, The valiant Duke of Bedford.—Come, my lord,

We will bestow you in some better place, Fitter for sickness and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me: Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen,

And will be partner of your weal or woe.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade you.

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read

That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick Came to the field, and vanquished his foes:

Methinks I should revive the soldier's hearts, Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!—Then be it so:—heavens keep old Bedford safe!—

And now no more ado, brave Burgundy, But gather we our forces out of hand,

And set upon our boasting enemy.

[Exeunt into the Town, BUR., TAL., and Forces, leaving BED. and others.]

Alarum: excursions. Enter SIR JOHN FASTOLFE, and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste? [flight:]

Fast. Whither away! to save myself by We are like to have the overthrow again. [bot?]

Cap. What! will you fly, and leave Lord Talbot? Ay,

All the Talbots in the world, to save my life. [Exit.]

Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee! [Exit into the Town.]

Retreat: excursions. Re-enter, from the town, LA PUCELLE, ALENÇON, CHARLES, &c., and exeunt flying.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please,

For I have seen our enemies' overthrow. What is the trust or strength of foolish man?

They that of late were daring with their scoffs Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.

[Dies, and is carried off in his chair.]

Alarum. Re-enter TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and others.

Tal. Lost and recover'd in a day again? This is a double honour, Burgundy;

Yet heavens have glory for this victory!

Bur. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy Enshrines thee in his heart; and there erects

Thy noble deeds, as valour's monuments.

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle now?

I think her old familiar is asleep: Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks? [grief]

What, all a-mort? Rouen hangs her head for That such a valiant company are fled.

Now will we take some order in the town, Placing therein some expert officers;

And then depart to Paris to the king, For there young Harry with his nobles lie.

Bur. What wills Lord Talbot pleaseth Burgundy.

Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget The noble Duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,

But see his exequies fulfill'd in Rouen: A braver soldier never couched lance,

A gentler heart did never sway in court; But kings and mightiest potentates must die,

For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Plains near Rouen.

Enter CHARLES, the BASTARD, ALENÇON, LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered:
Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,
For things that are not to be remedied.
Let frantic Talbot triumph for awhile,
And like a peacock sweep along his tail;
We'll pull his plumes and take away his train,
If Dauphin and the rest will be but rul'd.

Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy cunning had no diffidence:
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Bast. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statue in some holy place,
And have thee reverenc'd like a blessed saint:
Employ thee, then, sweet virgin, for our good.
Puc. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise:

By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words,
We will entice the Duke of Burgundy
To leave the Talbot and to follow us. [that,
Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do
France were no place for Henry's warners;
Nor should that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirp'd from our provinces.

Alen. For ever should they be expuls'd from
France,
And not have title of an earldom here.

Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will work
To bring this matter to the wished end.

[Drums heard
Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive
Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over at a distance, TALBOT and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread,
And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the DUKE OF BURGUNDY and his Forces.

Now in the rearward comes the duke and his:
Fortune in favour makes him lag behind.
Summon a parley; we will talk with him.

[A parley sounded.
Char. A parley with the Duke of Burgundy!

Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy?

Puc. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman.

Bur. What say'st thou, Charles? for I am marching hence.

Char. Speak, Pucelle, and enchant him with thy words. [France!

Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.

Bur. Speak on; but be not over-tedious.

Puc. Look on thy country, look on fertile
France,

And see the cities and the towns defac'd
By wasting ruin of the cruel foe!
As looks the mother on her lovely babe
When death doth close his tender dying eyes,
See, see the pining malady of France;

Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds
Which thou thyself hast given her woeful breast!

O, turn thy edged sword another way;
Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help! [bosom

One drop of blood drawn from thy country's Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore:

Return thee, therefore, with a mood of tears,
And wash away thy country's stained spots.

Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words,

Or nature makes me suddenly relent.

Puc. Besides, all French and France ex-claims on thee,

Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny.

Who join'st thou with but with a lordly nation

That will not trust thee but for profit's sake?

When Talbot hath set footing once in France,

And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill.

Who then but English Henry will be lord,

And thou be thrust out like a fugitive?

Call we to mind,—and mark but this for proof,—

Was not the Duke of Orleans thy foe?

And was he not in England prisoner?

But when they heard he was thine enemy,

They set him free, without his ransom paid,

In spite of Burgundy and all his friends.

See, then, thou fight'st against thy countrymen,

And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men.

Come, come, return; return, thou wand'ring
lord;

Charles and the rest will take thee in their arms.

Bur. I am vanquished; these haughty words of hers

Have batter'd me like roaring cannon-shot,

And made me almost yield upon my knees.—

Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen!

And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace:

My forces and my power of men are yours:

So, farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.

Puc. Done like a Frenchman,—turn, and turn again!

Char. Welcome, brave duke! thy friendship makes us fresh. [breasts.

Bast. And doth beget new courage in our Alen. Pucelle hath bravely play'd her part in this,

And doth deserve a coronet of gold.

Char. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers;

And seek how we may prejudice the foe.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—PARIS. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and other
Lords, VERNON, BASSET, &c To them
TALBOT and some of his Officers.

Tal. My gracious prince,—and honourable peers,—

Hearing of your arrival in this realm,

I have awhile given truce unto my wars,

To do my duty to my sovereign:

In sign whereof, this arm,—that hath reclaim'd

To your obedience fifty fortresses,

Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of
strength,

Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem,—
Lest fall his sword before your highness' feet,
And with submissive loyalty of heart
Ascribes the glory of his conquest got
First to my God and next unto your grace.

K. Hen. Is this the Lord Talbot, uncle
Gloster,

That hath so long been resident in France?

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain and victorious lord!

When I was young,—as yet I am not old,—
I do remember how my father said

A stouter champion never handled sword.

Long since we were resolved of your truth,

Your faithful service, and your toil in war;

Yet never have you tasted our reward,

Or been requerdon'd with so much as thanks,

Because till now we never saw your face:

Therefore, stand up; and for these good deserts

We here create you Earl of Shrewsbury;

And in our coronation take your place.

[Exeunt K. HEN., GLO., TAL., and Nobles.]

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea,

Disgracing of these colours that I wear

In honour of my noble Lord of York,—

Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?

Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue

Against my lord the Duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.

Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as
York.

Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that. [Strikes him.]

Bas. Villain, thou know'st the law of arms is such

That whoso draws a sword 'tis present death,
Or else this blow should broach thy dearest

blood.

But I'll unto his majesty, and crave

I may have liberty to venge this wrong;

When thou shalt see I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you;

And, after, meet you sooner than you would.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—PARIS. A Room of State.

*Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, EXETER, YORK
SUFFOLK, SOMERSET, WINCHESTER, WAR-WICK, TALBOT, the Governor of Paris, and others.*

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.

Win. God save King Henry, of that name
the sixth!

Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,— [Governor kneels.]

That you elect no other king but him;

Esteem none friends but such as are his friends

And none your foes but such as shall pretend

Malicious practices against his state:

This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

[Exeunt. Gov. and his Train.]

Enter SIR JOHN FASTOLFE.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,

To haste unto your coronation,
A letter was deliver'd to my hands,

Writ to your grace from the Duke of Burgundy.
Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy and thee! [Next,]

I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee

To tear the garter from thy craven's leg,— [Plucking it off.]

Which I have done,—because unworthily
Thou wast installed in that high degree.—

Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:

This dastard, at the battle of Patay,

When but in all I was six thousand strong,

And that the French were almost ten to one,—

Before we met, or that a stroke was given,

Like to a trusty squire, did run away:

In which assault we lost twelve hundred men

Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,

Were there surpris'd and taken prisoners.

Then judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;

Or whether that such cowards ought to wear

This ornament of knighthood, yea or no.

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,

And ill beseeeming any common man,

Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.

Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my
lords,

Knights of the garter were of noble birth,

Valiant and virtuous, full of haughty courage,

Such as were grown to credit by the wars;

Not fearing death nor shrinking for distress,

But always resolute in most extremes.

He, then, that is not furnish'd in this sort

Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,

Profaning this most honourable order,

And should,—if I were worthy to be judge,—

Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain

That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen, thou hear'st thy doom!

Be packing, therefore, thou that wast a knight:

Henceforth we banish thee, on pain of death.

[Exit FASTOLFE.]

And now, my lord protector, view the letter

Sent from our uncle Duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style?

[Viewing the superscription.]

No more but, plain and bluntly, To the King!

Hath he forgot he is his sovereign?

Or doth this churlish superscription

Pretend some alteration in good-will?

What's here?—[Reads—] I have, upon especial

cause,—

Mov'd with compassion of my country's wreck,

Together with the pitiful complaints

Of such as your oppression feeds upon,—

Forsaken your pernicious faction, [France.

And join'd with Charles, the rightful King of

O monstrous treachery! Can this be so,—

That in alliance, amity, and oaths,

There should be found such false dissembling

guile? [revolt?]

K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy

Glo. He doth, my lord; and is become your foe.

K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain?

Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.

K. Hen. Why, then, Lord Talbot there shall And give him chastisement for this abuse:—
How say you, my lord, are you not content?

Tal. Content, my liege! yes; but that I am prevented,

I should have begg'd I might have been em-
K. Hen. Then gather strength, and march unto him straight:

Let him perceive how ill we brook his treason,
And what offence it is to flout his friends.

Tal. I go, my lord; in heart desiring still
You may behold confusion of your foes. [Exit.]

Enter VERNON and BASSET.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign!

Bas. And me, my lord, grant me the combat
York. This is my servant: hear him, noble prince!

Som. And this is mine: sweet Henry, favour
K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them leave to speak.—

Say, gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaim?
And wherefore crave you combat? or with whom?

Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done me wrong.

Bas. And I with him: for he hath done me wrong.

K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both first let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bas. Crossing the sea from England into France,

This fellow here, with envious carping tongue,
Upbraided me about the rose I wear;

Saying the sanguine colour of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing cheeks

When stubbornly he did repugn the truth
About a certain question in the law

Argu'd betwixt the Duke of York and him;
With other vile and ignominious terms—

In confutation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my lord's worthiness,

I crave the benefit of law of arms.

Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord:
For though he seem with forged quaint conceit

To set a gloss upon his bold intent,
Yet know, my lord, I was provok'd by him;

And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing that the paleness of this flower

Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.
York. Will not this malice, Somerset, be left?

Som. Your private grudge, my Lord of York, will out,

Though ne'er so cunningly you smother it.
K. Hen. Good Lord, what madness rules in brainsick men,

When for so slight and frivolous a cause
Such factious emulations shall arise!—

Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,
Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.

York. Let this dissension first be tried by fight,

And then your highness shall command a peace.
Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;

Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then.

York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.
Bas. Confirm it so, mine honourable lord.

Glo. Confirm it so! Confounded be your strife!

And perish ye, with your audacious prate!
Presumptuous vassals, are you not ashamed

With this immodest clamorous outrage
To trouble and disturb the king and us?—

And you, my lords,—methinks you do not well
To bear with their perverse objections;

Much less to take occasion from their mouths
To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves:

Let me persuade you take a better course.
Exe. It grieves his highness:—good my lords, be friends. [combatants:]

K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be Henceforth I charge you, as you love our favour,

Quite to forget this quarrel and the cause.—
And you, my lords, remember where we are;

In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation:
If they perceive dissension in our looks,

And that within ourselves we disagree,
How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd

To wilful disobedience, and rebel!
Beside, what infamy will there arise,

When foreign princes shall be certified
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,

King Henry's peers and chief nobility [France!]
Destroy'd themselves and lost the realm of

O, think upon the conquest of my father;
My tender years; and let us not forego

That for a trifle that was bought with blood!
Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.

I see no reason, if I wear this rose,
[Putting on a red rose.]

That any one should therefore be suspicious
I more incline to Somerset than York:

Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both:
As well they may upbraid me with my crown,

Because, forsooth, the King of Scots is crown'd.
But your discretions better can persuade

Than I am able to instruct or teach:
And therefore, as we hither came in peace,

So let us still continue peace and love.—
Cousin of York, we institute your grace

To be our regent in these parts of France:—
And, good my Lord of Somerset, unite

Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot;

And like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together, and digest

Your angry choler on your enemies.
Ourself, my lord protector, and the rest,

After some respite, will return to Calais;
From thence to England; where I hope ere long

To be presented, by your victories,
With Charles, Alençon, and that traitorous rout.

[Flourish. Exeunt K. HEN., GLO., SOM., WIN., SUF., and BAS.]

War. My Lord of York, I promise you, the king

Prettily, methought, did play the orator.
York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,

In that he wears the badge of Somerset.
War. Tush, that was but his fancy, blame him

not;
I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.

York. An if I wist he did,—but let it rest;
Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exeunt YORK, WAR., and Ver.]

Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice:

For had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear we should have seen decipher'd there
More rancorous spite, more furious raging
broils,

Than yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd.
But howsoever, no simple man that sees
This jarring discord of nobility,
This shouldering of each other in the court,
This factious bandying of their favourites,
But that it doth presage some ill event.

'Tis much when sceptres are in children's hands;

But more when envy breeds unkind division;
There comes the ruin, there begins confusion.
[Exit.]

SCENE II.—FRANCE. Before Bourdeaux.

Enter TALBOT, with his Forces.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpet.
Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds a parley. Enter, on the walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,
Servant in arms to Harry King of England;
And thus he would,—Open your city gates;
Be humble to us; call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects;
And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power:
But if you frown upon this proffer'd peace
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;
Who, in a moment, even with the earth
Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death,
Our nation's terror and their bloody scourge!
The period of thy tyranny approacheth.
On us thou canst not enter but by death;
For, I protest, we are well fortified,
And strong enough to issue out and fight;
If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee:
On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd
To wall thee from the liberty of flight;
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress
But death doth front thee with apparent spoil,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.
Lo, there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit!
This is the latest glory of thy praise
That I, thy enemy, due thee withal;
For ere the glass that now begins to run
Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.
[Drum afar off.]

Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning
bell,

Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

[Exeunt General, &c. from the Walls.]

Tal. He fables not; I hear the enemy:—
Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.—

O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale,—
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be, then, in blood;
Not rascal-like to fall down with a pinch,
But rather, moody-mad and desperate stags,
Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,
And they shall find dear deer of us, my friends.— [right]

God and Saint George, Talbot and England's Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter YORK, with Forces; to him a Messenger.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd
again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?
Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out

That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot: as he march'd along,
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led,
Which join'd with him, and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset,
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am louted by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier:
God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English
strength,
Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim destruction:
To Bourdeaux, warlike duke! to Bourdeaux,
York! [honour.
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's York. O God, that Somerset,—who in proud heart

Doth stop my cornets,—were in Talbot's place!
So should we save a valiant gentleman
By forfeiting a traitor and a coward.
Mad ire and wrathful fury makes me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd
lord!

York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike
word;
We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get;
All 'long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul;
And on his son, young John, who two hours since

I met in travel toward his warlike father!
This seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.

York. Alas, what joy shall noble Talbot have
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?
Away! vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.—

Lucy, farewell: no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.—
Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours are won away,
'Long all of Somerset and his delay.

[Exit, with Forces.]

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture of sedition
Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,
Sleeping neglectation doth betray to loss
The conquest of our scarce-cold conqueror,
That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth:—whiles they each other cross,
Lives, honours, lands, and all, hurry to loss.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Other Plains of Gascony.

Enter SOMERSET, with his Forces; an Officer of TALBOT'S with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by York and Talbot
Too rashly plotted; all our general force
Might with a sally of the very town
Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour
By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure:
York set him on to fight and die in shame,
That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.

Off. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me
Set from our o'er-matched forces forth for aid.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Som. How now, Sir William! whither were you sent?

Lucy. Whither, my lord! from bought and sold Lord Talbot;

Who, ring'd about with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
To beat assailing death from his weak legions:
And whiles the honourable captain there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs,

And, in advantage lingering, looks for rescue,
You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour,

Keep off aloof with worthless emulation.
Let not your private discord keep away
The levied succours that should lend him aid,
While he, renowned noble gentleman,
Yields up his life unto a world of odds:
Orleans the Bastard, Charles, Burgundy,
Alençon, Reignier, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. York set him on, York should have sent him aid.

Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;

Swearing that you withhold his levied horse,
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York hes; he might have sent and had the horse;

I owe him little duty and less love;
And take foul scorn to fawn on him by sending.

Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,

Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot:
Never to England shall he bear his life;
But dies betray'd to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will despatch the horsemen straight:

Within six hours they will be at his aid.
Lucy. Too late comes rescue; he is ta'en or slain:

For fly he could not, if he would have fled;
And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then, adieu!

Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The English Camp near Bourdeaux.

Enter TALBOT and JOHN his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee

To tutor thee in stratagems of war,
That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd
When sapless age and weak unable limbs
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But,—O malignant and ill-boding stars!—
Now thou art come unto a feast of death,
A terrible and unavoided danger: [horse;
Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest
And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sudden flight: come, dally not, begone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?

And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother,
Dishonour not her honourable name,
To make a bastard and a slave of me!
The world will say, he is not Talbot's blood
That basely fled when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly to revenge my death, if I be slain.

John. He that flies so will ne'er return again.

Tal. If we both stay we both are sure to die.

John. Then let me stay; and, father, do you fly:

Your loss is great, so your regard should be;
My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.
Upon my death the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will, that no exploit have done;
You fled for vantage, every one will swear;
But if I bow, they'll say it was for fear.
There is no hope that ever I will stay.
If the first hour I shrink and run away,
Here, on my knee, I beg mortality,
Rather than life preserv'd with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb? [womb.]

John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's

Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go.

John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. Part of thy father may be sav'd in thee.

John. No part of him but will be shame in me. [lose it.]
Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not
John. Yes, your renowned name: shall I flight abuse it?
Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.
John. You cannot witness for me, being slain. If death be so apparent, then both fly.
Tal. And leave my followers here to fight and die?
My age was never tainted with such shame.
John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?
No more can I be sever'd from your side Than can yourself yourself in twain divide: Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I; For live I will not if my father die. [son,
Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon. Come, side by side together live and die; And soul with soul from France to heaven fly. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—A Field of Battle.

Alarum: excursions wherein TALBOT'S Son is hemmed about, and TALBOT rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight:
 The regent hath with Talbot broke his word, And left us to the rag of France his sword. Where is John Talbot?—pause, and take thy breath;
I gave thee life and rescu'd thee from death.
John. O, twice my father, twice am I thy son! The life thou gav'st me first was lost and done, Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate, To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,
 It warm'd thy father's heart with proud desire Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age, Quickened with youthful spleen and warlike rage,
 Beat down Alencon, Orleans, Burgundy, And from the pride of Gallia rescu'd thee. The ireful bastard Orleans,—that drew blood From thee, my boy, and had the maidenhood Of thy first fight,—I soon encountered, And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace, Bespoke him thus,—Contaminated, base, And misbegotten blood I spill of thine, Mean and right poor, for that pure blood of mine

Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy:—

Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy, [care,—
 Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's Art thou not weary, John? how dost thou fare? Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly, Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry? Fly, to revenge my death when I am dead: The help of one stands me in little stead, O, too much folly is it, well I wot, To hazard all our lives in one small boat! If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage, To-morrow I shall die with mickle age: By me they nothing gain an if I stay,—

'Tis but the short'ning of my life one day:
 In thee thy mother dies, our household's name,
 My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame:

All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
 All these are sav'd if thou wilt fly away.

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me smart; [heart:

These words of yours draw life-blood from my On that advantage, bought with such a shame,— To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame,— Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly, The coward horse that bears me fall and die! And like me to the peasant boys of France;

To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance! Surely, by all the glory you have won, An if I fly, I am not Talbot's son:

Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot; If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot. [Crete,

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Thou Icarus; thy life to me is sweet: If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side; And, commendable prov'd, let's die in pride. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Another part of the same.

Alarum: excursions. Enter TALBOT wounded, supported by a Servant.

Tal. Where is my other life?—mine own is gone;— [John?—

O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity, Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee:—

When he perceiv'd me shrink and on my knee,
 His bloody sword he brandish'd over me, And like a hungry lion did commence Rough deeds of rage and stern impatience; But when my angry guardant stood alone, Tendering my ruin, and assail'd of none, Dizzy-ey'd fury and great rage of heart Suddenly made him from my side to start Into the clustering battle of the French; And in that sea of blood my boy did drench His overmounting spirit; and there died My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride. [borne!]

Serv. O my dear lord! lo where your son is

Enter Soldiers, bearing the body of JOHN TALBOT.

Tal. Thou antic death, which laugh'st us here to scorn,

Anon, from thy insulting tyranny, Coupled in bonds of perpetuity, Two Talbots, winged through the lither sky, In thy despite, shall 'scape mortality.— O thou whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,

Speak to thy father ere thou yield thy breath! Brave death by speaking, whether he will or no; Imagine him a Frenchman and thy foe.— Poor boy! he smiles, methinks, as who should say,

Had death been French, then death had died Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms: My spirit can no longer bear these harms. Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have, Now my old arms are young Talbot's grave. [Dies.]

Alarums. Exeunt Soldiers and Servant, leaving the two bodies. Enter CHARLES, ALENCON, BURGUNDY, BASTARD, LA PUCELLE and Forces.

Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging-wood,
Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Puc. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said,
Thou maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid:
But, with a proud majestic scorn,
He answer'd thus, Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a giglot wench:

So, rushing in the bowels of the French,
He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtless he would have made a noble knight:—

See where he lies inhearsed in the arms
Of the most bloody nurser of his harms!

Bast. Hew them to pieces, hack their bones asunder,

Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. O, no; forbear! for that which we have fled

During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY, attended; a French Herald preceding.

Lucy. Herald,
Conduct me to the Dauphin's tent, to know
Who hath obtain'd the glory of the day,

Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere
French word;

We English warriors note not what it means.
I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en,
And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners ask'st thou? hell our prison is.

But tell me whom thou seek'st. [field,

Lucy. But where's the great Alcides of the Valiant Lord Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury,—

Created, for his rare success in arms, [ence;
Great Earl of Washford, Waterford, and Val-

Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinfield,

Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdun of Alton, [Sheffield,

Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of
That thrice victorious Lord of Falconbridge;

Knight of the noble order of Saint George,
Worthy Saint Michael, and the Golden Fleece;

Great Marshal to Henry the Sixth

Of all his wars within the realm of France?

Puc. Here is a silly-stately style indeed!
The Turk, that two-and-fifty kingdoms hath,

Writes not so tedious a style as this.—

Him that thou magnifiest with all these titles,
Stinking and fly-blown, lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Is Talbot slain.—the Frenchmen's only scourge,

Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?

O were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd,

That I, in rage, might shoot them at your faces!

O that I could but call these dead to life!

It were enough to fright the realm of France:

Were but his picture left among you here,

It would amaze the proudest of you all.

Give me their bodies, that I may bear them
hence,

And give them burial as beseems their worth.

Puc. I think this upstart is old Talbot's ghost,

He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit. [here,

For God's sake, let him have 'em; to keep them
They would but stink, and putrefy the air.

Char. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lucy. I'll bear them hence:
But from their ashes shall be rear'd

A phoenix that shall make all France afraid.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with 'em what thou wilt.—

And now to Paris in this conquering vein:
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and EXETER.

K. Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope,

The emperor, and the Earl of Armagnac?

Glo. I have, my lord: and their intent is this,—

They humbly sue unto your excellence
To have a godly peace concluded of

Between the realms of England and of France.

K. Hen. How doth your grace affect their motion? [means

Glo. Well, my good lord; and as the only
To stop effusion of our Christian blood,

And stablish quietness on every side. [thought

K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always
It was both impious and unnatural

That such immanity and bloody strife

Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glo. Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect
And surer bind this knot of amity,

The Earl of Armagnac,—near knit to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,— Proffers his only daughter to your grace

In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

K. Hen. Marriage, uncle! alas, my years are young;

And fitter is my study and my books
Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.

Yet, call the ambassadors; and as you please,
So let them have their answers every one:

I shall be well content with any choice
Tends to God's glory and my country's weal.

Enter a Legate and two Ambassadors, with WINCHESTER, now CARDINAL BEAUFORT, in a Cardinal's habit.

Exe. What! is my Lord of Winchester in-stall'd,

And call'd unto a cardinal's degree?

Then I perceive that will be verified

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,—

If once he come to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown.

K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits

Have been consider'd and debated on.
Your purpose is both good and reasonable;
And therefore are we certainly resolv'd
To draw conditions of a friendly peace;
Which by my Lord of Winchester we mean
Shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my lord your master,

I have inform'd his highness so at large,
As, liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,
Her beauty, and the value of her dower,
He doth intend she shall be England's queen.

K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract,

Bear her this jewel [to the Amb.], pledge of my affection.—

And so, my lord protector, see them guarded
And safely brought to Dover; where, inshipp'd,
Commit them to the fortune of the sea.

[Exeunt K. HEN., GLO., EXE., and Ambassadors.]

Win. Stay, my lord legate: you shall first receive

The sum of money which I promised
Should be delivered to his holiness

For clothing me in these grave ornaments.

Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure. [Exit.]

Win. Now Winchester will not submit, I trow,

Or be inferior to the proudest peer.

Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive

That neither in birth or for authority

The bishop will be overborne by thee:

I'll either make thee stoop and bend thy knee,

Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—FRANCE. Plains in Anjou.

Enter CHARLES, BURGUNDY, ALENÇON, LA PUCELLE, and Forces, marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits:

'Tis said the stout Parisians do revolt,
And turn again unto the warlike French.

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of
France,

And keep not back your powers in dalliance.

Puc. Peace be amongst them if they turn to us;

Else ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Success unto our valiant general,
And happiness to his accomplices!

Char. What tidings send our scouts? I pr'ythee, speak.

Mess. The English army, that divided was Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one,
And means to give you battle presently. [is;]

Char. Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning
But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust the ghost of Talbot is not there:
Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions fear is most accurs'd:— [thine;]

Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be Let Henry fret and all the world repine.

Char. Then on, my lords; and France be fortunate! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. Before Angiers.

Alarums: excursions. Enter LA PUCELLE.

Puc. The regent conquers and the Frenchmen fly,—

Now help, ye charming spells and periapts;

And ye choice spirits that admonish me,

And give me signs of future accidents,—

You speedy helpers, that are substitutes

Under the lordly monarch of the north,

Appear, and aid me in this enterprise!

[Thunder.]

Enter Fiends.

This speedy and quick appearance argues proof
Of your accustom'd diligence to me.

Now, ye familiar spirits that are cull'd

Out of the powerful legions under earth,

Help me this once, that France may get the field.

[They walk about and speak not.]

O, hold me not with silence over-long!

Where I was wont to feed you with my blood

I'll lop a member off and give it you,

In earnest of a further benefit,

So you do condescend to help me now.

[They hang their heads.]

No hope to have redress?—My body shall Pay recompense if you will grant my suit.

[They shake their heads.]

Cannot my body nor blood sacrifice

Entreat you to your wanted furtherance?

Then take my soul,—my body, soul, and all,

Before that England give the French the foil.

[They depart.]

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come

That France must veil her lofty-plumed crest,

And let her head fall into England's lap.

My ancient incantations are too weak,

And hell too strong for me to buckle with:

Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust.

[Exit.]

Alarums. Enter French and English, fighting. LA PUCELLE and YORK fight hand to hand: LA PUCELLE is taken. The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think I have you fast:

Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,

And try if they can gain your liberty.—

A goodly prize, fit for the devil's grace!

See how the ugly witch doth bend her brows,

As if, with Circe, she would change my shape!

Puc. Chang'd to a worser shape thou canst not be. [man;]

York. O, Charles the Dauphin is a proper

No shape but his can please your dainty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischief light on Charles and thee!

And may ye both be suddenly surpris'd

By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds!

York. Fell, banning hag; enchantress, hold thy tongue! [while.]

Puc. I pr'ythee, give me leave to curse a

York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake. [Exeunt.]

*Alarums. Enter SUFFOLK, leading in LADY
MARGARET.*

Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.

[Gazes on her.]

O fairest beauty, do not fear nor fly!
For I will touch thee but with reverent hands,
And lay them gently on thy tender side.
I kiss these fingers for eternal peace.

[Kissing her hand.

Who art thou? say, that I may honour thee.

Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a king,

The King of Naples—whoso'er thou art.

Suf. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me
So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.
Yet, if this servile usage once offend,
Go, and be free again as Suffolk's friend.

[She turns away as going.

O, stay!—I have no power to let her pass;
My hand would free her, but my heart says no.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.
Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak:
I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind:
Fie, De-la-Poole! disable not thyself;
Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner?
Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight?
Ay, beauty's princely majesty is such, rough,
Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses

Mar. Say, Earl of Suffolk,—if thy name be so,—

What ransom must I pay before I pass?

For I perceive I am thy prisoner. [suff

Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy Before thou make a trial of her love? [Aside.

Mar. Why speak'st thou not? what ransom must I pay?

Suf. She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;

She is a woman, therefore to be won. [Aside.

Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom—yea or no?

Suf. Fond man, remember that thou hast a wife;

Then how can Margaret be thy paramour?

[Aside.

Mar. I were best leave him, for he will not hear.

Suf. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling card. [Aside.

Mar. He talks at random; sure, the man is mad.

Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.

[Aside.

Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me. [whom?

Suf. I'll win this Lady Margaret. For
Why, for my king: tush, that's a wooden thing!

[Aside.

Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter.

Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied,
And peace established between these realms.
But there remains a scruple in that too;
For though her father be the King of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poor,
And our nobility will scorn the match. [Aside.

Mar. Hear ye, captain,—are ye not at leisure? [much:

Suf. It shall be so, disdain they ne'er so
Henry is youthful, and will quickly yield.—

[Aside.

Madam, I have a secret to reveal [a knight,

Mar. What though I be enthrall'd? he seems
And will not any way dishonour me. [Aside.

Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

Mar. Perhaps I shall be rescued by the French;

And then I need not crave his courtesy. [Aside.

Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—

Mar. Tush! women have been captivate ere
now. [Aside.

Suf. Lady, wherefore talk you so?

Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but quid pro quo.

Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose

Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

Mar. To be a queen in bondage is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility;

For princes should be free.

Suf. And so shall you,
If happy England's royal king be free. [me?

Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto

Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's
queen;

To put a golden sceptre in thy hand,

And set a precious crown upon thy head,

If thou wilt condescend to be my—

Mar. What?

Suf. His love.

Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.

Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am

To woo so fair a dame to be his wife,

And have no portion in the choice myself.

How say you, madam,—are you so content?

Mar. An if my father please, I am content.

Suf. Then call our captains and our colours forth!— [Troops come forward.

And, madam, at your father's castle-walls

We'll crave a parley, to confer with him.

A Parley sounded. Enter REIGNIER on the Walls.

Suf. See, Reignier, see, thy daughter prisoner!

Reig. To whom?

Suf. To me.

Reig. Suffolk, what remedy?

I am a soldier, and unapt to weep

Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:

Consent,—and for thy honour give consent,—

Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king;

Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto;

And this her easy-held imprisonment

Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.

Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks?

Suf. Fair Margaret knows

That Suffolk doth not flatter, face, or feign.

Reig. Upon thy princely warrant I descend,

To give thee answer of thy just demand.

[Exit REIGNIER from the Walls.

Suf. And here I will expect thy coming.

Trumpets sound. Enter REIGNIER below.

Reig. Welcome, brave earl, into our terri-tores;

Command in Anjou what your honour pleases.

Suf. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child,

Fit to be made companion with a king
What answer makes your grace unto my suit?

Reig. Since thou dost deign to woo her little worth

To be the princely bride of such a lord,
Upon condition I may quietly
Enjoy mine own, the county Maine and Anjou,
Free from oppression or the stroke of war,
My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.

Suf. That is her ransom,—I deliver her;
And those two counties I will undertake
Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.

Reig. And I again, in Henry's royal name,
As deputy unto that gracious king,
Give thee her hand, for sign of plighted faith.

Suf. Reigner of France, I give thee kingly thanks,

Because this is in traffic of a king:—
And yet, methinks, I could be well content
To be mine own attorney in this case.—

[Aside.

I'll over, then, to England with this news,
And make this marriage to be solemniz'd.
So, farewell, Reigner: set this diamond safe
In golden palaces, as it becomes.

Reig. I do embrace thee as I would embrace
The Christian prince, King Henry, were he here.

[and prayers

Mar. Farewell, my lord: good wishes, praise,
Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret.

[Going.
Suf. Farewell, sweet madam: but hark you,
Margaret,—

No princely commendations to my king?

Mar. Such commendations as become a maid,

A virgin, and his servant, say to him.

Suf. Words sweetly plac'd and modestly directed.

But, madam, I must trouble you again,—
No loving token to his majesty?

[heart,

Mar. Yes, my good lord,—a pure unspotted
Never yet tainted with love, I send the king.

Suf. And this withal.

[Kisses her.

Mar. That for thyself:—I will not so presume
To send such peevish tokens to a king.

[Exeunt REIG., and MAR.

Suf. O, wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk,
stay;

Thou mayst not wander in that labyrinth:
There Minotaurs and ugly treasons lurk.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise:
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,
And natural graces that extinguish art;
Repeat their semblance often on the seas,
That when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet
Thou mayst beseach him of his wits with wonder.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—Camp of the DUKE OF YORK in Anjou.

Enter YORK, WARWICK, and others.

York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn.

Enter LA PUCELLE, guarded, and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah, Joan, this kills thy father's heart outright!

Have I sought every country far and near,
And now it is my chance to find thee out

Must I behold thy timeless cruel death?

Ah, Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee!

Puc. Decrepid miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood;
Thou art no father nor no friend of mine.

Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you,
'tis not so,

I did beget her, all the parish knows:
Her mother liveth yet, can testify
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless, wilt thou deny thy parentage?

[been,—

York. This argues what her kind of life hath Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.

Shep. Fie, Joan, that thou wilt be so obstacle!

God knows thou art a collop of my flesh;
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:
Deny me not, I prythee, gentle Joan.

Puc. Peasant, avaunt!—You have suborn'd
this man,

Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest
The morn that I was wedded to her mother.—
Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.

Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time
Of thy nativity! I would the milk

[breast

Thy mother gave thee when thou suck'dst her
Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake!

Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field,
I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!

Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?

O, burn her, burn her! hanging is too good.

[Exit.

York. Take her away; for she hath liv'd too long,

To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First let me tell you whom you have condemn'd:

Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,
But issu'd from the progeny of kings;
Virtuous and holy; chosen from above,

By inspiration of celestial grace,

To work exceeding miracles on earth.

I never had to do with wicked spirits:

But you,—that are polluted with your lusts,
Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,

Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,—
Because you want the grace that others have,

You judge it straight a thing impossible
To compass wonders but by help of devils.

No, misconceived! Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy,

Chaste and immaculate in very thought;
Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effus'd,

Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay:—away with her to execution!

War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,

Spare for no fagots, let there be enow:

Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shortened.

Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?

Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity,
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.—

I am with child, ye bloody homicides:
Murder not, then, the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.

York. Now heaven forfend! the holy maid with child! [wrought:

War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye
Is all your strict preciseness come to this?

York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling;

I did imagine what would be her refuge. [live;

War. Well, go to; we will have no bastards Especially since Charles must father it. [his:

Puc. You are deceiv'd; my child is none of
It was Alençon that enjoy'd my love.

York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavell!
It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. O, give me leave, I have deluded you:
'Twas neither Charles nor yet the duke I nam'd,

But Reignier, King of Naples, that prevail'd.

War. A married man! that's most intolerable.

York. Why, here's a girl!—I think she knows not well—

There were so many—whom she may accuse.

War. It's sign she hath been liberal and free. [pure.—

York. And yet, forsooth, she is a virgin Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat and
thee:

Use no entreaty, for it is in vain.

Puc. Then lead me hence;—with whom I leave my curse:

May never glorious sun reflex his beams
Upon the country where you make abode;

But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, till mischief and despair

Drive you to break your necks or hang yourselves! [Exit, guarded

York. Break thou in pieces and consume to ashes,

Thou foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter CARDINAL BEAUFORT, attended.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.

For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,
Mov'd with remorse of these outrageous broils,

Have earnestly implor'd a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;

And here at hand the Dauphin and his train
Approacheth, to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect?

After the slaughter of so many peers,

So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers,

That in this quarrel have been overthrow'n,

And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,

Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?

Have we not lost most part of all the towns,

By treason, falsehood, and by treachery,

Our great progenitors had conquered?—

O Warwick, Warwick! I forsee with grief

The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York: if we conclude a peace, [nants

It shall be with such strict and severe cove-

As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter CHARLES, attended; ALENÇON,
BASTARD, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed [France,

That peaceful truce shall be proclaim'd in

We come to be informed by yourselves

What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choler chokes

The hollow passage of my prison'd voice,
By sight of these our baleful enemies.

Car. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:

That in regard King Henry gives consent,

Of mere compassion and of lenity,

To ease your country of distressful war,

And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,—

You shall become true liegemen to his crown:

And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear

To pay him tribute and submit thyself,

Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him,

And still enjoy thy regal dignity. [self?

Alen. Must he be, then, as shadow of him—

Adorn his temples with a coronet,

And yet, in substance and authority,

Retain but privilege of a private man?

This proffer is absurd and unreasonable. [sess'd

Char. 'Tis known already that I am pos-

With more than half the Gallian territories,

And therein reverenc'd for their lawful king:

Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,

Detract so much from that prerogative

As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?

No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep

That when I have than, coveting for more,

Be cast from possibility of all. [means

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret

Us'd intercession to obtain a league,

And now the matter grows to compromise

Stand'st thou aloof upon comparison?

Either accept the title thou usurp'st,

Of benefit proceeding from our king,

And not of any challenge of desert,

Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy

To cavil in the course of this contract:

If once it be neglected, ten to one

We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy

To save your subjects from such massacre

And ruthless slaughters as are daily seen

By our proceeding in hostility;

And therefore take this compact of a truce,

Although you break it when your pleasure serves. [Aside to CHARLES.

War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?

Char. It shall;

Only reserv'd, you claim no interest

In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty,

As thou art knight, never to disobey

Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,—

Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.

[CHARLES and the rest give tokens of fealty.

So, now dismiss your army when ye please;

Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,

For here we entertain a solemn peace. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, in conference with

SUFFOLK; GLOSTER and EXETER following.

K. Hen. Your wondrous rare description,

noble earl,

Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtues, graced with external gifts,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart:
And like as rigour of tempestuous gusts
Provokes the mightiest hulk against the tide,
So am I driven, by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. [tale]

Suf. Tush, my good lord,—this superficial
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,—
Had I sufficient skill to utter them,—
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit:
And, which is more, she is not so divine,
So full-replete with choice of all delights,
But, with as humble lowliness of mind,
She is content to be at your command;
Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste intents,
To love and honour Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume.

Therefore, my lord protector, give consent
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.

Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd
Unto another lady of esteem: [tract,
How shall we, then, dispense with that con-
And not deface your honour with reproach?

Suf. As doth a ruler with unlawful oaths;
Or one that, at a triumph having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds:
A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds,
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than that?

Her father is no better than an earl,
Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suf. Yes, my lord, her father is a king,
The King of Naples and Jerusalem;
And of such great authority in France
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the Earl of Armagnac may do,
Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Exe. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal dower;

While Reignier sooner will receive than give.

Suf. A dower, my lords! disgrace not so your king,

That he should be so object, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love.
Henry is able to enrich his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich:
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship;

Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,
Must be companion of his nuptial bed:
And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,
It most of all these reasons bindeth us
In our opinions she should be preferr'd.
For what is wedlock forced but a hell,
An age of discord and continual strife?
Whereas the contrary bringeth bliss,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.
Whom should we match with Henry, being a
king,

But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?
Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none but for a king:
Her valient courage and undaunted spirit,—
More than in women commonly is seen,—
Will answer our hope in issue of a king;
For Henry, son unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,
If with a lady of so high resolve
As is fair Margaret he be link'd in love. [me
Then yield, my lords; and here conclude with That Margaret shall be queen, and none but
she.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report,

My noble Lord of Suffolk, or for that
My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of inflaming love,
I cannot tell; but this I am assur'd,
I feel such sharp dissension in my breast,
Such fierce alarms both of hope and fear,
As I am sick with working of my thoughts.
Take therefore shipping; post, my lord, to
France;

Agree to any covenants; and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henry's faithful and anointed queen:
For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone, I say; for, till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.—
And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
If you do censure me by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sudden execution of my will.

And so, conduct me where, from company,
I may revolve and ruminate my grief. [Exit.

Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last. [Exeunt GLOSTER and EXETER.

Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd; and thus he goes,

As did the youthful Paris once to Greece,
With hope to find the like event in love,
But prosper better than the Trojan did.
Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm.

[Exit.

SCENE,—Dispersedly in various parts of ENGLAND.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Room of State in the Castle.

Flourish of trumpets: then hautboys. Enter, on one side, KING HENRY, DUKE OF GLOSTER, SALISBURY, WARWICK, and CARDINAL BEAUFORT; on the other, QUEEN MARGARET, led in by SUFFOLK; YORK, SOMERSET, BUCKINGHAM, and others, following.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As procurator to your excellence,
To marry Princess Margaret for your grace;
So, in the famous ancient city Tours,—
In presence of the Kings of France and Sicil,
The Dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretagne, and Alençon,
Seven earls, twelve barons, and twenty reverend bishops,
I have perform'd my task, and was espous'd:

And humbly now, upon my bended knee,
In sight of England and her lordly peers,
Deliver up my title in the queen's [stance]
To your most gracious hands, that are the sub-
Of that great shadow I did represent;
The happiest gift that ever marquis gave,
The fairest queen that ever king receiv'd.

K. Hen. Suffolk, anse.—Welcome, Queen Margaret:

I can express no kinder sign of love [life,
Than this kind kiss—O Lord, that lends me
Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness!
For thou hast given me, in this beauteous face,
A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

Q. Mar. Great King of England, and my gracious lord,—

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
By day, by night, waking and in my dreams,
In courtly company or at my beads,
With you, mine alder-liest sovereign,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms, such as my wit affords
And over-joy of heart doth minister. [speech,

K. Hen. Her sight did ravish; but her grace in
Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty,
Makes me from wondering fall to weeping joys;
Such is the fulness of my heart's content.—
Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love.

All. [Kneeling.] Long live Queen Margaret,
England's happiness!

Q. Mar. We thank you all. [Flourish.

Suf. My lord protector, so it please your grace,
Here are the articles of contracted peace
Between our sovereign and the French King
Charles,

For eighteen months concluded by consent.

Glo. [Reads.] *Imprimis, It is agreed between
The French King Charles and William De-la-Poole, Marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry King of England, that the said Henry shall espouse the Lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier King of Naples, Sicily, and Jerusalem; and crown her Queen of England ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.*—Item,—That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine shall be released and delivered to the king her father,—

K. Hen. Uncle, how now!

Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord;
Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no
further.

K. Hen. Uncle of Winchester, I pray read on.

Car. [Reads.] Item,—It is further agreed between them that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king her father; and she sent over of the King of England's own proper cost and charges, without having any dowry.

• K. Hen. They please us well.—Lord marquess, kneel down:

We here create thee the first Duke of Suffolk,
And girt thee with the sword.—Cousin of York,
We here discharge your grace from being regent
Of the parts of France, till term of eighteen months

Be full exquir'd.—Thanks, uncle Winchester,
Gloster, York, Buckingham, Somerset,
Salisbury, and Warwick;

We thank you all for this great favour done,
In entertainment to my princely queen.
Come, let us in, and with all speed provide
To see her coronation be perform'd.

[Exeunt KING, QUEEN, and SUFFOLK.

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,

To you Duke Humphrey must unload his grief,—
Your grief, the common grief of all the land.
What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coin, and people in the wars?
Did he so often lodge in open field,
In winter's cold and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toil his wits
To keep by policy what Henry got?

Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick,
Receiv'd deep scars in France and Normandy?
Or hath mine uncle Beaufort and myself,
With all the learned council of the realm,
Studied so long, sat in the council-house
Early and late, debating to and fro [awe
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in
And hath his highness in his infancy
Been crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes?
And shall these labours and these honours die?
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die?
O peers of England, shameful is this league!
Fatal this marriage! cancelling my fame,
Blotting your names from books of memory,
Razing the characters of your renown.
Defacing monuments of conquer'd France,
Undoing all, as all had never been!

Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse,

This peroration with such circumstance?

For France, 'tis ours, and we will keep it still.

Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it if we can;

But now it is impossible we should:

Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast
Hath given the duchy of Anjou and Maine
Unto the poor King Reignier, whose large style
Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

Sal. Now, by the death of Him that died for all,

These counties were the keys of Normandy:—
But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son!

War. For grief that they are past recovery:

For were there hope to conquer them again

My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no tears.

Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both:
These provinces these arms of mine did conquer

And are the cities that I got with wounds

Deliver'd up again with peaceful words?

Mort Dieu! [cate

York. For Suffolk's duke, may he be suffo-
That dims the honour of this warlike isle!

France should have torn and rent my very heart
Before I would have yielded to this league.

I never read but England's kings have had Large sums of gold and dowries with their wives;

And our King Henry gives away his own,
To match with her that brings no vantages.

Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before,
That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth
For costs and charges in transporting her!

She should have stay'd in France, and starv'd in France,

Before— [hot:
Car. My Lord of Gloster, now you grow too
It was the pleasure of my lord the king.

Glo. My Lord of Winchester, I know your mind;

'Tis not my speeches that you do dislike,
But 'us my presence that doth trouble ye.
Rancour will out: proud prelate, in thy face
I see thy fury: if I longer stay
We shall begin our ancient bickerings.—
Lordings, farewell; and say, when I am gone,
I prophesied France will be lost ere long.

[Exit.

Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage.

'Tis known to you he is mine enemy;
Nay, more, an enemy unto you all,
And no great friend, I fear me, to the king.
Consider, lords, he is the next of blood,
And heir-apparent to the English crown:
Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,
There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.
Look to it, lords; let not his smoothing words
Bewitch your hearts; be wise and circumspect.
What though the common people favour him,
Calling him—Humphrey, 'the good Duke of Gloster; [voice,
Clapping their hands, and crying with loud
Jesu maintain your royal excellence!
With God preserve the good Duke Humphrey!
I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,
He will be found a dangerous protector.

Buck. Why should he then protect our sovereign,

He being of age to govern of himself?—
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And altogether, with the Duke of Suffolk, We'll quickly houe Duke Humphrey from his seat. [delay;

Car. This weighty business will not brook
I'll to the Duke of Suffolk presently. [Exit.

Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's pride

And greatness of his place be grief to us,
Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal:
His insolence is more intolerable
Than all the princes in the land beside:
If Gloster be displac'd, he'll be protector.

Buck. Or thou or I, Somerset, will be protector,

Despite Duke Humphrey or the cardinal.

[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and SOMERSET.

Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows
him.

Whiles these do labour for their own prefer-
ment,

Behoves it us to labour for the realm.
I never saw but Humphrey Duke of Gloster
Did bear him like a noble gentleman.

Off have I seen the haughty cardinal,—
More like a soldier than a man o' the church,
As stout and proud as he were lord of all,—
Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself
Unlike the ruler of a commonweal.—
Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age!

Thy deeds, thy planness, and thy housekeeping,

Hath won the greatest favour of the commons,

Excepting none but good Duke Humphrey:—
And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civil discipline;
Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wert regent for our sovereign,
Have made thee fear'd and honour'd of the people:—

Join we together for the public good
In what we can, to bridle and suppress
The pride of Suffolk and the cardinal,
With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;
And, as we may, cherish Duke Humphrey's
deeds

While they do tend the profit of the land.

War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the
land

And common profit of his country! [cause.

York. And so says York, for he hath greatest

Sal. Then let's make haste away and look unto the main. [lost,—

War. Unto the main! O father, Maine is That Man which by main force Warwick did win, [last!

And would have kept so long as breath did
Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine,—

Which I will win from France, or else be slain.

[Exeunt WARWICK and SALISBURY.

York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;

Paris is lost; the state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone:
Suffolk concluded on the articles;
The peers agreed; and Henry was well pleas'd
To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.

I cannot blame them all: what is 't to them?
'Tis thine they give away, and not their own.

Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage,

And purchase friends, and give to courtézans,
Still revelling like lords till all be gone;
While as the silly owner of the goods

Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands,
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,

While all is shar'd, and all is borne away,
Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own:

So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his own lands are bargain'd for and sold.

Methinks the realms of England, France, and Ireland

Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood
As did the fatal brand of Althaea burn'd
Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.

Anjou and Maine both given unto the French!
Cold news for me, for I had hope of France,

Even as I have of fertile England's soil.
A day will come when York shall claim his own;

And therefore I will take the Nevils' parts,
And make a show of love to proud Duke

Humphrey,

And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown,
For that's the golden mark I seek to hit:

Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist,

Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown.

Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve:
Watch thou and wake, when others be asleep,

To pry into the secrets of the state;

Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love
 With his new bride and England's dear-bought
 queen,
 And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars
 Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
 With whose sweetsmell the air shall be perfum'd;
 And in my standard bear the arms of York,
 To grapple with the house of Lancaster;
 And, for ever perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,
 Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—LONDON. A Room in the DUKE OF GLOSTER'S House.

Enter GLOSTER and the DUCHESS.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn
 Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load?
 Why doth the great Duke Humphrey knit his brows,
 As frowning at the favours of the world?
 Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
 Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight?
 What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem.
 Enchas'd with all the honours of the world?
 If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face
 Until thy head be circled with the same.
 Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold:—
 What, is 't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine;
 And, having both together heav'd it up,
 We'll both together lift our heads to heaven;
 And never more abase our sight so low
 As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.

Glo. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy lord,

Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts!
 And may that thought, when I imagine ill
 Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry,
 Be my last breathing in this mortal world!
 My troublous dream this night doth make me sad.

Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it

With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.

Glo. Methought this staff, mine office-badge in court,

Was broke in twain; by whom I have forgot,
 But, as I think, it was by the cardinal;
 And on the pieces of the broken wand
 Were plac'd the heads of Edmund Duke of Somerset,

And William-De-la-Poole, first Duke of Suffolk.
 This was my dream; what it doth bode God knows.

Duch. Tut, this was nothing but an argument
 That he that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove
 Shall lose his head for his presumption.
 But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke:
 Methought I sat in seat of majesty
 In the cathedral church of Westminster,
 And in that chair where kings and queens are crown'd;

Where Henry and Dame Margaret kneel'd to me,
 And on my head did set the diadem. [right:]

Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide out-
 Presumptuous dame, ill-nurtur'd Eleanor!
 Art thou not second woman in the realm,
 And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?

Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
 Above the reach or compass of thy thought?
 And wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
 To tumble down thy husband and thyself
 From top of honour to disgrace's feet?
 Away from me, and let me hear no more!

Duch. What, what, my lord! are you so choleric

With Eleanor for telling but her dream?
 Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
 And not be check'd.

Glo. Nay, be not angry, I am pleas'd again.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness'
 pleasure

You do prepare to ride unto Saint Albans,
 Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk.
 Glo. I go.—Come, Nell,—thou wilt ride with us? [sently.]

Duch. Yes, my good lord, I'll follow pre-[Exeunt GLOSTER and Messenger.]

Follow I must; I cannot go before
 While Gloster bears this base and humble mind.
 Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
 I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks,
 And smooth my way upon their headless necks:
 And, being a woman, I will not be slack
 To play my part in fortune's pageant.—
 Where are you there, Sir John? nay, fear not,
 man,

We are alone; here's none but thee and I.

Enter HUME.

Hume. Jesus preserve your royal majesty!

Duch. What say'st thou? majesty! I am but grace. [advice,]

Hume. But, by the grace of God and Hume's
 Your grace's title shall be multiplied.

Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet contrer'd

With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch,
 With Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer?
 And will they undertake to do me good?

Hume. This they have promised,—to show your highness

A spirit rais'd from depth of under-ground,
 That shall make answer to such questions

As by your grace shall be propounded him.

Duch. It is enough; I'll think upon the questions:

When from Saint Albans we do make return
 We'll see these things effected to the full.

Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry,
 man,

With thy confederates in this weighty cause. [Exit.]

Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold;

Marry, and shall. But, how now, Sir John Hume!

Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum:
 The business asketh silent secrecy.

Dame Eleanor gives gold to bring the witch:
 Gold cannot come amiss were she a devil.

Yet have I gold flies from another coast:—

I dare not say from the rich cardinal,
 And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolk;

Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,

They, knowing Dame Eleanor's aspiring humour,
Have hired me to undermine the duchess,
And buzz these conjurations in her brain.
They say,—A crafty knave does need no broker;
Yet am I Suffolk and the cardinal's broker.
Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near
To call them both a pair of crafty knaves.
Well, so it stands; and thus, I fear, at last
Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck,
And her attainture will be Humphrey's fall:
Sort how it will, I shall have gold for all.

[Exit.

SCENE III.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter PETER and other Petitioners.

1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close: my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill.

2 Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a good man! Jesu bless him!

1 Pet. Here 'a comes, methinks, and the queen with him. I'll be the first, sure.

Enter SUFFOLK and QUEEN MARGARET.

2 Pet. Come back, fool; this is the Duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow! wouldst anything with me?

1 Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me; I took ye for my lord protector.

Q. Mar. [Glancing at the superscriptions.] To my Lord Protector! Are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them:—what is thine?

1 Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife and all, from me.

Suf. Thy wife too! that is some wrong indeed.—What's yours?—What's here! [Reads.] Against the Duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melford.—How now, sir knave!

2 Pet. Alas, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. [Presenting his petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying that the Duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

Q. Mar. What say'st thou? did the Duke of York say he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? no, forsooth: my master said that he was; and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently:—we'll hear more of your matter before the king.

[Exeunt Servants with PETER.]

Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected

Under the wings of our protector's grace,
Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

[Tears the petitions.]
Away, base cullions!—Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone.

[Exeunt Petitioners.]

Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise,

Is this the fashion in the court of England?

Is this the government of Britain's isle,

And thus the royalty of Albion's king?
What, shall King Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloster's governance?
Am I a queen in title and in style,
And must be made a subject to a duke?
I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours
Thou rann'st a tilt in honour of my love,
And stol'st away the ladies' hearts of France,
I thought King Henry had resembled thee
In courage, courtship, and proportion:
But all his mind is bent on holiness,
To number Ave-Maries on his beads:
His champions are, the prophets and apostles;
His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ;
His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves
Are brazen images of canoniz'd saints.
I would the college of the cardinals
Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the triple crown upon his head:—
That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suf. Madam, be patient: as I was cause
Your highness came to England, so will I
In England work your grace's full content.

Q. Mar. Beside the haughty protector, have we Beaufort

[ham,
The imperious churchman, Somerset, Bucking-
And grumbling York; and not the least of these
But can do more in England than the king.]

Suf. And he of these that can do most of all
Cannot do more in England than the Nevils:
Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.

Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half
so much

As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife.
She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,

[wife:
More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's
Strangers in court do take her for the queen:

She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
And in her heart she scorns our poverty:
Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her?

Contemptuous base-born callet as she is,
She vaunted 'mongst her minions t' other day
The very train of her worst wearing gown

Was better worth than all my father's lands,
Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter.

Suf. Madam, myself have lim'd a bush for her,

And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds
That she will light to listen to the lays,
And never mount to trouble you again.

So, let her rest: and, madam, list to me;
For I am bold to counsel you in this.

Although we fancy not the cardinal,
Yet must we join with him and with the lords,
Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace.

As for the Duke of York,—this late complaint
Will make but little for his benefit.

So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last,
And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Enter KING HENRY, YORK, and SOMERSET;
DUKE and DUCHESS OF GLOSTER, CAR-DINAL BEAUFORT, BUCKINGHAM, SALIS-BURY, and WARWICK.

K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which;

Or Somerset or York, all's one to me.

York. If York have ill demean'd himself in France,

Then let him be deny'd the regentship.

Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,
Let York be regent; I will yield to him. [no]

War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea or Dispute not that: York is the worthier.

Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy betters speak.

War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.

Buck. All in this presence are thy betters,
Warwick.

War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.

Sal. Peace, son!—and show some reason,
Buckingham,

Why Somerset should be preferr'd in this.

Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.

Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself
To give his censure: these are no women's matters. [grace]

Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your
To be protector of his excellence?

Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm;
And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.

Suf. Resign it then, and leave thine insolence.
Since thou wert king,—as who is king but thou?—

The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck;
The Dauphin hath prevail'd beyond the seas,
And all the peers and nobles of the realm
Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.

Car. The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags

Are lank and lean with thy extortions.

Som. Thy sumptuous buildings and thy wife's attire

Have cost a mass of public treasury.

Buck. Thy cruelty in execution

Upon offenders hath exceeded law

And left thee to the mercy of the law.

Q. Mar. Thy sale of offices and towns in
France,—

If they were known, as the suspect is great,—
Would make thee quickly hop without thy
head.

[Exit GLOSTER. The QUEEN drops her fan.]

Give me my fan: what, minion! can you not?

[Gives the DUCHESS a box on the ear.]

I cry you mercy, madam; was it you?

Duch. Was't I? yea, it was, proud French-woman!

Could I come near your beauty with my nails,
I'd set my ten commandments in your face.

K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet; 'twas against her will. [in time]

Duch. Against her will! good king, look to't She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby:

Though in this place most master wear no
breeches,

She shall not strike Dame Eleanor unreveng'd.
[Exit.]

Buck. Lord cardinal, I will follow Eleanor,
And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds:
She's tickled now; her fume needs no spurs,
She'll gallop fast enough to her destruction.

[Exit.]

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Now, lords, my choler being over-blown
With walking once about the quadrangle,
I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.

As for your spiteful false objections,
Prove them, and I he open to the law:
But God in mercy so deal with my soul
As I in duty love my king and country!
But to the matter that we have in hand:—

I say, my sovereign, York is meetest man
To be your regent in the realm of France.

Suf. Before we make election, give me leave
To show some reason, of no little force,

That York is most unmeet of any man. [meet:
York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am un-

First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride;
Next, if I be appointed for the place,

My Lord of Somerset will keep me here,
Without discharge, money, or furniture,

Till France be won into the Dauphin's hands:
Last time, I danc'd attendance on his will

Till Paris was besieg'd, famish'd, and lost.

War. That can I witness, and a fouler fact
Did never traitor in the land commit.

Suf. Peace, headstrong Warwick! [peace?]

War. Image of pride, why should I hold my

Enter Servants of SUFFOLK, bringing in HORNER and PETER.

Suf. Because here is a man accus'd of treason:
Pray God the Duke of York excuse himself!

York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor?

K. Hen. What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell me, what are these?

Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his master of high treason:

His words were these,—that Richard Duke of
York

Was rightful heir unto the English crown,

And that your majesty was an usurper.

K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words?

Hor. An't shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter: God is my witness, I am falsely accused by the villain.

Pet. By these ten bones, my lords [holding up his hands,] he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my Lord of York's armour.

York. Base dunghill villain and mechanical,
I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech.—

I do beseech your royal majesty,
Let him have all the rigour of the law.

Hor. Alas, my lord, hang me if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witness of this;
therefore I beseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

Glo. This doom, my lord, if I may judge;
Let Somerset be regent o'er the French,

Because in York this breeds suspicion;
And let these have a day appointed them

For single combat in convenient place,
For he hath witness of his servant's malice:

This is the law, and this Duke Humphrey's doom.

K. Hen. Then be it so.—My Lord of Somerset,

We make your grace regent over the French.

Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty.

Hor. And I accept the combat willingly.

Pet. Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; for God's sake, pity my case! the spite of man prevaileth against me. O Lord, have mercy upon me! I shall never be able to fight a blow: O Lord, my heart!

Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight, or else be

K. Hen. Away with them to prison; and the day

Of combat shall be the last of the next Come, Somerset, we'll see thee sent away.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The same. The DUKE OF GLOSTER'S Garden.

Enter MARGERY JOURDAIN, HUME, SOUTHWELL, and BOLINGBROKE.

Hume. Come, my masters; the duchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises.

Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided: will her ladyship behold and hear our exorcisms?

Hume. Ay, what else? fear you not her courage.

Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit: but it shall be convenient, Master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go in God's name, and leave us. [Exit HUME.] Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth,—John Southwell, read you;—and let us to our work.

Enter DUCHESS above, and presently HUME.

Duch. Well said, my masters; and welcome all.

To this gear,—the sooner the better.

Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times:

Deep night, dark night, the silent of the might, The time of night when Troy was set on fire; The time when screech-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl,

And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves,—

That time best fits the work we have in hand. Madam, sit you, and fear not: whom we raise We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

[Here they perform the ceremonies appertaining, and make the circle; BOLINGBROKE or SOUTHWELL reads, "Conjuro te," &c. It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.

Spir. Adsum.

M. Jourd. Asmath.

By the eternal God, whose name and power Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask; For, till thou speak, thou shalt not pass from hence.

Spir. Ask what thou wilt: that I had said Boling. First of the king: what shall of him become? [Reading out of a paper.

Spir. The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose;

But him outlive, and die a violent death.

[As the Spirit speaks, SOUTHWELL writes the answers.

Boling. What fates await the Duke of Suffolk?

Spir. By water shall he die and take his end.

Boling. What shall befall the Duke of Somerset?

Spir. Let him shun castles;

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains

Than where castles mounted stand.—

Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Boling. Descend to darkness and the burning lakwe!

False fiend, avoid!

[Thunder and lightning, Spirit descends.

Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM hastily, with their Guards and others.

York. Lay hands upon these traitors and their trash.—

Beldam, I think we watch'd you at an inch.—

What, madam, are you there? the king and commonweal

Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains:

My lord protector will, I doubt it not,

See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.

Duch. Not half so bad as thine to England's

king,

Injurious duke, that threatest where's no cause.

Buck. True, madam, none at all:—what call you this? [Showing her the papers.

Away with them! let them be clapp'd up close,

And kept asunder.—You, madam, shall with us.—

Stafford, take her to thee.—

We'll see your trinkets here all forthcoming.— All, away!

[Exeunt, above, DUCHESS and HUME, guarded, below, SOUTH., BOLIN.,

&c., guarded.

York. Lord Buckingham, methinks you watch'd her well:

A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon!

Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.

What have we here? [Reads.

The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose.

But him outlive, and die a violent death.

Why, this is just,

Aio, te, Æacida, Romanos vincere posse.

Well, to the rest:

Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolk?

By water shall he die and take his end.—

What shall betide the Duke of Somerset?

Let him shun castles;

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains

Than where castles mounted stand.

Come, come, my lords;

These oracles are hardly attain'd,

And hardly understood. [Albans,

The king is now in progress toward Saint

With him the husband of this lovely lady:

Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry them,—

A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.

Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my

Lord of York,

To be the post, in hope of his reward.

York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—

Who's within there, ho!

Enter a Servant.

Invite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwick
To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away!
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Saint Albans.

Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, GLOSTER, CARDINAL, and SUFFOLK, with Falconers hollang.

Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,
I saw not better sport these seven years' day:
Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high;
And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.
K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,

And what a pitch she flew above the rest!—
To see how God in all his creatures works!
Yea, man and birds are fain of climbing high.

Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty,
My lord protector's hawks do tower so well;
They know their master loves to be aloft,
And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.

Glo. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Car. I thought as much; he would be above the clouds. [that?]

Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal,—how think you by
Were it not good your grace could fly to heaven?

K. Hen. The treasury of everlasting joy!
Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts

Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart;
Pernicious protector, dangerous peer, [weal!
That smooth'st it so with king and common-

Glo. What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown peremptory?

Tantæne animis cœlestibus iræ? [malice
Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such
With such holiness can you do it? [comes

Suf. No malice, sir; no more than well be-
So good a quarrel and so bad a peer.

Glo. As who, my lord?
Suf. Why, as you, my lord,

An't like your lordly lord-protectorship.

Glo. Why, Suffolk, England knows thine insolence.

Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloster.

K. Hen. I pry'thee, peace,
Good queen, and whet not on these furious
peers;

For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.

Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make,
Against this proud protector, with my sword!

Glo. Faith, holy uncle, would 'twere come to that! [Aside to CAR.]

Car. Marry, when thou dar'st.

[Aside to GLO.]
Glo. Make up no factious numbers for the matter;

In thine own person answer thy abuse.
[Aside to CAR.]

Car. Ay, where thou dar'st not peep: an if thou dar'st,

This evening on the east side of the grove.
[Aside to GLO.]

K. Hen. How now, my lords!

Car. Believe me, cousin Gloster,
Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,
We had had more sport.—Come with thy two-hand sword. [Aside to GLO.]

Glo. True, uncle.

Car. Are ye advis'd?—the east side of the grove? [Aside to GLO.]

Glo. Cardinal, I am with you.

[Aside to CAR.]

K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloster!
Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my
lord.—

Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your crown for this,

Or all my fence shall fail. [Aside to CAR.]

Car. Medice teipsum;
Protector, see to't well, protect yourself.

[Aside to GLO.]

K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs, lords.

How irksome is this music to my heart!
When such strings jar, what hope of harmony!
I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

*Enter a Townsman of Saint Albans, crying
"A Miracle!"*

Glo. What means this noise?
Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?

Towns. A miracle! a miracle!

Suf. Come to the king, and tell him what miracle. [shrine]

Towns. Forsooth, a blind man at St. Albans'
Within this half hour hath receiv'd his sight;
A man that ne'er saw in his life before.

K. Hen. Now, God be prais'd that to believing souls

Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of St. Albans and his brethren; and SIMPCOX, borne between two persons in a chair, his Wife and a multitude following.

Car. Here come the townsmen on procession
To present your highness with the man.

K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,

Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.

Glo. Stand by, my masters:—bring him near
the king;

His highness' pleasure is to talk with him.

K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

Waat, hast thou been long blind and now restor'd?

Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace.

Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.

Suf. What woman is this?

Wife. His wife, an't like your worship.

Glo. Hadst thou been his mother, thou couldst have better told.

K. Hen. Where wert thou born?

Simp. At Berwick in the north, an't like your grace.

K. Hen. Poor soul, God's goodness hath been great to thee:

Let never day nor night unallow'd pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, cam'st thou here by chance,
Or of devotion, to this holy shrine? [call'd Simp. God knows, of pure devotion, being
A hundred times and oftener, in my sleep,
By good Saint Alban; who said, Simpcox,
come,—

Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.
Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft

Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

Car. What, art thou lame?

Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!

Suf. How cam'st thou so?

Simp. A fall off a tree.

Wife. A plum-tree, master.

Glo. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O, born so, master.

Glo. What, and wouldst climb a tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth. [very dear.

Wife. Too true; and bought his clumbring

Glo. Mass, thou lov'dst plums well that wouldst venture so. [some damsons,

Simp. Alas, good master, my wife desir'd
And made me clumb, with danger of my life.

Glo. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve.— [them:—

Let me see thine eyes:—wink now;—now open
In my opinion yet thou see'st not well.

Simp. Yes, master, clear as day, I thank God and Saint Alban.

Glo. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this cloak of?

Simp. Red, master; red as blood.

Glo. Why, that's well said. What colour is my gown of?

Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black as jet.

K. Hen. Why then, thou know'st what colour jet is of?

Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see.
Glo. But cloaks and gowns, before this day, a many.

Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.

Glo. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name?

Simp. Alas, master, I know not.

Glo. What's his name?

Simp. I know not.

Glo. Nor his?

Simp. No, indeed, master.

Glo. What's thine own name? [master.

Simp. Saunder Simpcox, an if it please you,

Glo. Then, Saunder, sit there, the lyingest knave in Christendom. If thou hadst been born blind, thou mightst as well have known all our names as thus to name the several colours;
we do wear. Sight may distinguish of colours;
but suddenly to nominate them all, it is impossible.—My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle; and would ye not think his cunning to be great that could restore this cripple to his legs again?

Simp. O master, that ye could!

Glo. My masters of Saint Albans, have you not beadies in your town, and things called whips?

May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.

Glo. Then send for one presently.

May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight. [Exit an Attendant.

Glo. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by.
[A stool brought out.] Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool and run away. [alone:

Simp. Alas, master, I am not able to stand
You go about to torture me in vain.

Re-enter Attendant, with the Beadle.

Glo. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs.—Sirrah beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.

Bead. I will, my lord.—Come on, sirrah; off with your doublet quickly.

Simp. Alas, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle has hit him once, he leaps over the stool and runs away; and the people follow and cry "A Miracle!"

K. Hen. O God, seest thou this, and bear'st so long? [run.

Q. Mar. It made me laugh to see the villain
Glo. Follow the knave, and take this drab away.

Wife. Alas, sir, we did it for pure need.

Glo. Let them be whipped through every market town, till they come to Berwick, whence they came. [Exeunt Mayor, Beadle, Wife, &c.

Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle
to-day.

Suf. True; made the lame to leap and fly
away.

Glo. But you have done more miracles than I;
You made in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham? [fold.

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to un-
A sort of naughty persons, lowly bent,—
Under the countenance and confederacy
Of Lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,
The ringleader and head of all this rout,—
Have practis'd dangerously against your state,
Dealing with witches and with conjurers:
Whom we have apprehended in the fact;
Raising up wicked spirits from under ground,
Demanding of King Henry's life and death,
And other of your highness' privy council,
As more at large your grace shall understand.

Car. And so, my lord protector, by this means
Your lady is forthcoming yet at London.
This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge;

'Tis like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.
[Aside to GLOSTER.

Glo. Ambitious churchman, leave to afflict
my heart:

Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers;
And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,
Or to the meanest groom. [wicked ones,

K. Hen. O God, what mischiefs work the Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!

Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;

And look thyself be faultless, thou wert best.

Glo. Madam, for myself to heaven I do appeal,

How I have lov'd my king and commonweal:

And for my wife I know not how it stands:

Sorry I am to hear what I have heard:

Noble she is; but if she have forgot Honour and virtue, and convers'd with such
As, like to pitch, defile nobility,
I banish her my bed and company,
And give her, as a prey, to law and shame,
That hath dishonour'd Gloster's honest name

K. Hen. Well, for this night we will repose us here:

To-morrow toward London back again,
To look into this business thoroughly,
And call these foul offenders to their answers;
And poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—LONDON. THE DUKE OF YORK'S Garden.

Enter YORK, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.

York. Now, my good Lords of Salisbury and Warwick,

Our simple supper ended, give me leave,
In this close walk, to satisfy myself,
In craving your opinion of my title,
Which is infallible, to England's crown.

Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full.

War. Sweet York, begin: and if they claim be good,

The Nevils are thy subjects to command.

York. Then thus:—

Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons;
The first, Edward the Black Prince, Prince of Wales,

The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel Duke of Clarence; next to whom
Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster;
The fifth was Edmund Langley, Duke of York;
The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloster;

William of Windsor was the seventh and last.
Edward the Black Prince died before his father;
And left behind him Richard, his only son,
Who, after Edward the Third's death, reign'd
as king,

Till Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Lancaster,
The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth,
Seiz'd on the realm, depos'd the rightful king,
Sent his poor queen to France, from whence
she came,

And him to Pomfret,—where, as all you know,
Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.

War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.

York. Which now they hold by force, and not by right;

For Richard, the first son's heir, being dead,
The issue of the next son should have reign'd.

Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir. [from whose line]

York. The third son, Duke of Clarence,—
I claim the crown,—had issue Philippe, a daughter, [March.]

Who married Edmund Mortimer, Earl of Edmund had issue, Roger Earl of March;

Roger had issue, Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor.

Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Boling-
broke,

As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king,

Who kept him in captivity till he died.
But, to the rest.

York. His eldest sister, Anne,
My mother, being heir unto the crown,
Married Richard Earl of Cambridge, who was son

To Edmund Langley, Edward the Third's fifth
By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir
To Roger Earl of March, who was the son
Of Edmund Mortimer; who married Philippe,
Sole daughter unto Lionel Duke of Clarence:
It fails not yet, but flourishes in thee,
Succeed before the younger, I am king.

War. What plain proceedings is more plain than this? [Gaunt,

Henry doth claim the crown from John of
The fourth son, York claims it from the third.
Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:
It fails not yet, but flourishes in thee,
And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.—
Then, father Salisbury, kneel we together;
And in this private plot be we the first
That shall salute our rightful sovereign
With honour of his birthright to the crown.

Both. Long live our sovereign Richard,
England's king!

York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your king [stain'd

Till I be crown'd, and that my sword be
With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster;
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy.

Do you as I do in these dangerous days:

Wink at the Duke of Suffolk's insolence,
At Beaufort's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
At Buckingham, and all the crew of them,
Till they have snar'd the shepherd of the flock,
That virtuous prince, the good Duke Humphrey:

'Tis that they seek; and they, in seeking that,
Shall find their deaths, if York can prophesy.

Sal. My lord, break we off, we know your mind at full. [Warwick

War. My heart assures me that the Earl of Shall one day make the Duke of York a king.

York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself,—
Richard shall live to make the Earl of Warwick
The greatest man in England but the king.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—LONDON. A Hall of Justice.

Trumpets sounded. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, GLOSTER, YORK, SUFFOLK, and SALISBURY; the DUCHESS OF GLOSTER, MARGERY JOURDAIN, SOUTH-WELL, HUME, and BOLINGBROKE, under guard.

K. Hen. Stand forth, Dame Eleanor Cob-ham, Gloster's wife:

In sight of God and us, your guilt is great:
Receive the sentence of the law, for sins
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death.—
You four, from hence to prison back again;

[To JOURDAIN, &c.
From thence unto the place of execution:
The witch in Smithfield shall be burn'd to ashes
And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.—

You, madam, for you are more nobly born,

Despoiled of your honour in your life,
Shall, after three days' open penance done,
Live in your country here, in banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man.

Duch. Welcome is banishment; welcome were my death.

Glo. Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath
I cannot justify whom the law condemns.—
[Exeunt the DUCHESS and the other

Prisoners, guarded.

Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground!—
I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease.

K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey Duke of Gloster:
ere thou go,

Give up thy staff: Henry will to himself
Protector be; and God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet:
And go in peace, Humphrey,—no less belov'd
Than when thou wert protector to thy king.

Q. Mar. I see no reason why a king of years
Should be to be protected like a child.—
God and King Henry govern England's helm!
Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.

Glo. My staff! here, noble Henry, is my staff:
As willingly do I the same resign
As ere thy father Henry made it mine;
And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it
As others would ambitiously receive it.
Farewell, good king; when I am dead and gone,
May honourable peace attend thy throne!

[Exit.

Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen;

And Humphrey Duke of Gloster scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a main; two pulls at once,—

His lady banish'd and a limb lopp'd off:
This staff of honour raught, there let it stand
Where it best fits to be,—in Henry's hand.

Suf. Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;

Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days.

York. Lords, let him go.—Please it your majesty,

This is the day appointed for the combat;
And ready are the appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight.

Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord; for purposely therefore

Left I the court, to see this quarrel tried.

K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all things fit:

Here let them end it; and God defend the right!
York. I never saw a fellow worse bested,
Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,
The servant of this armourer, my lords.

Enter, on one side, HORNER and his Neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk; and he enters bearing his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it, a drum before him; at the other side, PETER, with a drum and a similar staff; accompanied by Prentices drinking to him.

1 Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack; and fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough.

2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of charneco.

3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour; drink, and fear not your man.

Hor. Let it come, I' ffaith, and I'll pledge you all; and a fig for Peter!

1 Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee: and be not afraid.

2 Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master: fight for credit of the prentices.

Peter. I thank you all: drink, and pray for me, I pray you; for I think I have taken my last draught in this world.—Here, Robin, an if I die,
I give thee my apron:—and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer:—and here, Tom, take all the money that I have.—O Lord bless me, I pray
God! for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much fence already.

Sal. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blows.—Sirrah, what's thy name?

Peter. Peter, forsooth.

Sal. Peter! what more?

Peter. Thump.

Sal. Thump! then see thou thump thy master
well.

Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave and myself an honest man: and touching the Duke of York, I will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen:
and therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow!

York. Despatch:—this knave's tongue begins to double.—

Sounds, trumpets, alarum to the combatants!
[Alarum. They fight, and PETER strikes down HORNER.

Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason.

York. Take away his weapon.—Fellow, thank

God, and the good wine in thy master's way.

Peter. O God, have I overcome mine enemy in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevailed in right!

[Sight:

K. Hen. Go, take hence that traitor from our
For by his death we do perceive his guilt:
And God in justice hath reveal'd to us
The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,
Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.—

Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Street.

Enter GLOSTER and Servants, in mourning cloaks.

Glo. Thus sometimes hath the brightest day
a cloud;

And after summer evermore succeeds
Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold;
So cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.—
Sirs, what o'clock?

Serv. Ten, my lord.

Glo. Ten in the hour that was appointed me
To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess:
Uneath may she endure the flinty streets,
To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook

The abject people gazing on thy face,
With envious looks, laughing at thy shame,
That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.

But, soft! I think she comes; and I'll prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the DUCHESS OF GLOSTER in a white sheet, with papers pinned upon her back, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand; SIR JOHN STANLEY, a Sheriff, and Officers.

Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff. [by.]

Glo. No, stir not for your lives; let her pass Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame? [gaze!]

Now thou dost penance too. Look how they See how the giddy multitude do point, [me!]
And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on Ah, Gloster, hide thee from their hateful looks,
And, in thy closet pent up, rue my shame
And ban mine enemies,—both mine and thine!

Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief.

Duch. Ah, Gloster, teach me to forget myself!
For whilst I think I am thy married wife
And thou a prince, protector of this land,
Methinks I should not thus be led along,
Mail'd up in shame, with papers on my back,
And follow'd with a rabble that rejoice
To see my tears and hear my deep-fet groans.
The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;
And when I start the envious people laugh,
And bid me be advised how I tread.

Ah, Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke?
Trow'st thou that e'er I'll look upon the world,
Or count them happy that enjoy the sun?
No; dark shall be my light and night my day;
To think upon my pomp shall be my hell.
Sometime I'll say, I am Duke Humphrey's wife,
And he a prince, and ruler of the land:
Yet so he rul'd, and such a prince he was,
As he stood by whilst I, his forlorn duchess,
Was made a wonder and a pointing-stock
To every idle rascal follower.

But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame;
Nor stir at nothing, till the axe of death
Hang over thee as sure it shortly will;
For Suffolk,—he that can do all in all
With her that hateth thee and hates us all,—
And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,

Have all him'd bushes to betray thy wings,
And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle
thee:

But fear not thou, until thy foot be snar'd,
Nor never seek prevention of thy foes. [awry;]

Glo. Ah, Nell, forbear! thou aimest all
I must offend before I be attained:

And had I twenty times so many foes,
And each of them had twenty times their power,
All these could not procure me any scathe,
So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.
Wouldst have me rescue thee from this reproach?
Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,
But in danger for the breach of law.

Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell:
I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's Parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month. [before!]

Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein
This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there,

[Exit Herald.]

My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master sheriff,
Let not her penance exceed the king's commission. [mission stays;]

Sher. An't please your grace, here my com-
And Sir John Stanley is appointed now

To take her with him to the Isle of Man. [here?]

Glo. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady

Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.

Glo. Entreat her not the worse in that I pray
You use her well: the world may laugh again;
And I may live to do you kindness, if

You do it her: and so, Sir John, farewell.

Duch. What, gone, my lord, and bid me not farewell!

Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and Servants.]

Duch. Art thou gone too? all comfort go with thee!

For none abides with me: my joy is death,—
Death, at whose name I oft have been afraid,
Because I wish'd this world's eternity.—

Stanley, I pry'thee go, and take me hence;

I care not whither, for I beg no favour,

Only convey me where thou art commanded.

Stan. Why, madam, that is to the Isle of Man;

There to be us'd according to your state.

Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach,—

And shall I, then, be us'd reproachfully?

Stan. Like to a duchess and Duke Humphrey's lady;

According to that state you shall be us'd.

Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare,—

Although thou hast been conduct of my shame.

Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.

Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is dis-charg'd.—

Come, Stanley, shall we go? [this sheet,

Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off

And go we to attire you for our journey.

Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet:

No, it will hang upon my richest robes,

And show itself, attire me how I can.

Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. —The Abbey at Bury.

Flourish. Enter to the Parliament KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, CARDINAL BEAUFORT, SUFFOLK, YORK, BUCKINGHAM, and others.

K. Hen. I muse my Lord of Gloster is not
come:

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,

Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

Q. Mar. Can you not see? or will you not observe

The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?
With what a majesty he bears himself;
How insolent of late he is become, [self?
How proud, how peremptory, and unlike him—
We know the time since he was mild and affable;
And if we did but glance a far-off look
Immediately he was upon his knee,
That all the court admir'd him for submission:
But meet him now, and be it in the morn,
When every one will give the time of day,
He knits his brow, and shows an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs.
Small curs are not regarded when they grin;
But great men tremble when the lion roars,—
And Humphrey is no little man in England.
First note that he is near you in descent;
And should you fall he as the next will mount.
Me seemeth, then, it is no policy,—
Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,
And his advantage following your decease,—
That he should come about your royal person,
Or be admitted to your highness' council.
By flattery hath he won the commons' hearts;
And when he please to make commotion,
'Tis to be fear'd they all will follow him.
Now 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted; [garden,

Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the
And choke the herbs for want of husbandry.
The reverent care I bear unto my lord
Made me collect these dangers in the duke.
If it be fond, call it a woman's fear;
Which fear, if better reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe, and say I wrong'd the duke.
My Lord of Suffolk,—Buckingham,—and
York,—

Reprove my allegation if you can;
Or else conclude my words effectual. [duke;
Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this
And had I first been put to speak my mind,
I think I should have told your grace's tale.
The duchess, by his subornation,
Upon my life, began her devilish practices:
Or, if he were not privy to those faults,
Yet, by reputing of his high descent,—
As, next the king, he was successive heir,
And such high vaunts of his nobility,—
Did instigate the bedlam brainsick duchess
By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall.
Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep;
And in his simple show he harbours treason.
The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb
No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man
Unsound'd yet, and full of deep deceit.

Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,
Devise strange deaths for small offences done?

York. And did he not, in his protectorship,
Levy great sums of money through the realm
For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?
By means whereof the towns each day revolted.

Buck. Tut, these are petty faults to faults unknown, [Humphrey.

Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke
K. Hen. My lords, at once—the care you have of us,

To mow down thorns that would annoy our feet,

Is worthy praise: but shall I speak my conscience?

Our kinsman Gloster is as innocent
From meaning treason to our royal person
As is the sucking lamb or harmless dove:
The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given
To dream on evil or to work my downfall.

Q. Mar. Ah, what's more dangerous than this fond affiance?

Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's disposed as the hateful raven:
Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,
For he's inclin'd as is the ravenous wolf.
Who cannot steal a shape that means deceit?
Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter SOMERSET.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!
K. Hen. Welcome, Lord Somerset. What news from France?

Som. That all your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.

K. Hen. Cold news, Lord Somerset: but God's will be done! [France

York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of
As firmly as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
And caterpillars eat my leaves away:
But I will remedy this gear ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave. [Aside.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. All happiness unto my lord the king!
Pardon, my liege, that I have stay'd so long.

Suf. Nay, Gloster, know that thou art come too soon,

Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art:
I do arrest thee of high treason here. [blush

Glo. Well, Suffolk, thou shalt not see me
Nor change my countenance for this arrest:
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.
The purest spring is not so free from mud
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign:
Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?

York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France.

And, being protector, stay'd the soldiers' pay;
By means whereof his highness hath lost France.

Glo. Is it but thought so? what are they that think it?

I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay,
Nor ever had one penny bribe from France.
So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,— Ay, night by night,—in studying good for England!

That do it that e'er I wrested from the king,
Or any great I hoarded to my use,
Be brought against me at my trial-day!
No; many a pound of mine own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I dispursed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution. [much.

Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so
Glo. I say no more than truth, so help me
God!

York. In your protectorship you did devise Strange tortures for offenders, never heard of,
That England was defam'd by tyranny.

Glo. Why, 'tis well known that, whiles I was protector,
 Pity was all the fault that was in me;
 For I should melt at an offender's tears,
 And lowly words were ransom for their fault.
 Unless it were a bloody murderer, [gers,
 Or foul felonious thief that fleec'd poor passen-
 I never gave them condign punishment:
 Murder, indeed, that bloody sin, I tortur'd
 Above the felon or what trespass else.
Suf. My lord, these faults are easy, quickly
 answer'd:

But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,
 Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.
 I do arrest you in his highness' name;
 And here commit you to my lord cardinal
 To keep, until your further time of trial. [hope

K. Hen. My Lord of Gloster, 'tis my special
 That you will clear yourself from all suspect:
 My conscience tells me you are innocent. [ous!

Glo. Ah, gracious lord, these days are danger-
 Virtue is chok'd with foul ambition,
 And charity chas'd hence by rancour's hand;
 Foul subornation is predominant,
 And equity exil'd your highness' land.
 I know their plot is to have my life;
 And if my death might make this island happy,
 And prove the period of their tyranny,
 I would expend it with all willingness:

But mine is made the prologue to their play;
 For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
 Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.
 Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,

And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;
 Sharp Buckingham unburdens with his tongue
 The envious load that lies upon his heart;
 And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
 Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,
 By false accuse doth level at my life:—

And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,
 Causeless have laid disgraces on my head,
 And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
 My liefast liege to be mine enemy:—
 Ay, all of you have laid your heads together,—
 Myself had notice of your conventicles,—
 And all to make away my guiltless life.

I shall not want false witness to condemn me.
 Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt:
 The ancient proverb will be well effected,—
 A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.

Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable:
 If those that care to keep your royal person
 From treason's secret knife and traitors' rage
 Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,
 And the offender granted scope of speech,
 'Twill make them cool in zeal unto your grace.

Suf. Hath he not twit our sovereign lady
 here

With ignominious words, though clerkly couch'd,
 As if she had suborned some to swear
 False allegations to o'erthrow his state?

Q. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide. [deed;—

Glo. Far truer spoke than meant: I lose, in-Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me false!
 And well such losers may have leave to speak.

Buck. He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all day:—

Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner.

Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.

Glo. Ah, thus King Henry throws away his crutch

Before his legs be firm to bear his body!
 Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
 And wolves are gnawing who shall gnaw thee first.

Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were!
 For, good King Henry, thy decay I fear.

[Exeunt Attendants with GLOSTER.

K. Hen. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth best

Do or undo, as if ourself were here.

Q. Mar. What, will your highness leave the Parliament? [with grief,

K. Hen. Ay, Margaret; my heart is drown'd
 Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes;
 My body round engirt with misery,—
 For what's more miserable than discontent?—

Ah, uncle Humphrey, in thy face I see
 The map of honour, truth, and loyalty!

And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come
 That e'er I prov'd thee false or fear'd thy faith.

What lowering star now envies thy estate,
 That these great lords, and Margaret our queen.

Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?
 Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man
 wrong:

And as the butcher takes away the calf,
 And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strays,

Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house;
 Even so, remorseless, have they borne him hence:

And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
 Looking the way her harmless young one went,

And can do nought but wail her darling's loss;
 Even so myself bewails good Gloster's case

With sad unhelpful tears; and with dimm'd eyes
 Look after him, and cannot do him good,—

So mighty are his vowed enemies.
 His fortunes I will weep; and 'twixt each groan,
 Say, Who's a traitor? Gloster he is none. [Exit.

Q. Mar. Free lords, cold snow melts with the sun's hot beams.

Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,
 Too full of foolish pity; and Gloster's show

Beguilds him, as the mournful crocodile
 With sorrow snares relenting passengers;

Or as the snake, roll'd in a flowering bank,
 With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a
 child,

That for the beauty thinks it excellent.
 Believe me lords, were none more wise than I,—

And yet herein I judge my own wit good,—
 This Gloster should be quickly rid the world,

To rid us from the fear we have of him.
Car. That he should die is worthy policy;

But yet we want a colour for his death:
 'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of law.

Suf. But, in my mind, that were no policy:
 The king will labour still to save his life;

The commons haply rise to save his life;
 And yet we have but trivial argument,

More than mistrust, that shows him worthy death.
York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.

Suf. Ah, York, no man alive so fair as I!
York. 'Tis York that hath more reason for his death.— [Suffolk,—

But, my lord cardinal, and you, my Lord of

Say as you think, and speak it from your souls,— Wer't not all one an empty eagle were set
 To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
 As place Duke Humphrey for the king's protector?
 [death.]

Q. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of Suf. Madam, 'tis true; and wer't not madness, then,

To make the fox surveyor of the fold?
 Who, being accus'd a crafty murderer,
 His guilt should be but idly posted over
 Because his purpose is not executed.
 No; let him die, in that he is a fox,
 By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock,
 Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood,—
 As Humphrey, prov'd by reasons, to my liege.
 And do not stand on quilllets how to slay him:
 Be it by guns, by snares, by subtlety,
 Sleeping or waking, 'tis no matter how,
 So he be dead; for that is good deceit
 Which mates him first that first intends deceit.

Q. Mar. Thrice-noble Suffolk, 'tis resolutely spoke.

Suf. Not resolute, except so much were done;
 For things are often spoke and seldom meant:
 But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
 Seeing the deed is meritorious,
 And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,—
 Say but the word, and I will be his priest.

Car. But I would have him dead, my Lord of Suffolk,

Ere you can take due orders for a priest:
 Say you consent, and censure well the deed,
 And I'll provide his executioner,—
 I tender so the safety of my liege.

Suf. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.

Q. Mar. And so say I. [It,
 York. And I: and now we three have spoke
 It skills not greatly who impugns our doom.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Great lords, from Ireland am I come
 again,

To signify that rebels there are up,
 And put the Englishmen unto the sword:
 Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime,
 Before the wound do grow incurable;
 For, being green, there is great hope of help.

Car. A breach that craves a quick expedient stop!

What counsel give you in this weighty cause?
 York. That Somerset besent as regent thither:
 'Tis meet that lucky ruler be employ'd;
 Witness the fortune he hath had in France.

Som. If York, with all his far-fet policy,
 Had been the regent there instead of me,
 He never would have stay'd in France so long.

York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done:
 I rather would have lost my life betimes
 Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
 By staying there so long till all were lost.
 Show me one scar character'd on thy skin:
 Men's flesh preserv'd so whole do seldom win.

Q. Mar. Nay, then, this spark will prove a raging fire

If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with:—
 No more, good York;—sweet Somerset, be still:—

Thy fortune, York, hadst thou been regent there, Might happily have prov'd far worse than his.

York. What, worse than naught? nay, then,
 a shame take all!

Som. And in the number, thee that wishest shame!

Car. My Lord of York, try what your fortune is.

The uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,
 And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
 To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
 Collected choicely, from each county some,
 And try your hap against the Irishmen?

York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.

Suf. Why, our authority is his consent;
 And what we do establish he confirms:
 Then, noble York, take thou this task in hand.

York. I am content: provide me soldiers,
 lords,

Whiles I take order for mine own affairs.

Suf. A charge, Lord York, that I will see perform'd. [phrey.]

But now return we to the false Duke Humphrey.
 Car. No more of him; for I will deal with him,

That henceforth he shall trouble us no more.

And so break off; the day is almost spent:
 Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.

York. My Lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days

At Bristol I expect my soldiers;

For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.

Suf. I'll see it truly done, my Lord of York.
 [Exeunt all but YORK.]

York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful thoughts,

And change misdoubt to resolution:

Be that thou hop'st to be; or what thou art
 Resign to death,—it is not worth the enjoying:
 Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,

And find no harbour in a royal heart.

Faster than spring-time showers comes thought on thought;

And not a thought but thinks on dignity.

My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
 Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.

Well, nobles, well, 'tis politicly done,

To send me packing with an host of men:

I fear me you but warm the starved snake,

Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.

'Twas men I lack'd, and you will give them me:

I take it kindly; yet be well assur'd

You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands.

Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,

I will stir up in England some black storm

Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven or hell;

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage

Until the golden circuit on my head,

Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,

Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.

And for a minister of my intent

I have seduc'd a headstrong Kentishman,

John Cade of Ashford,

To make commotion, as full well he can,

Under the title of John Mortimer.

In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade

Oppose himself against a troop of kerns,

And fought so long till that his thighs with darts;
 Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porpentine;
 And in the end being rescu'd, I have seen him
 Caper upright like a wild Morisco,
 Shaking the bloody darts as he his bells.
 Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kern,
 Hath he conversed with the enemy,
 And, undiscovered, come to me again.
 And given me notice of their villanies.
 Thus devil here shall be my substitute;
 For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
 In face, in gait, in speech, he doth resemble:
 By this I shall perceive the commons' mind,
 How they affect the house and claim of York.
 Say he be taken, rack'd, and tortured,
 I know no pain they can inflict upon him
 Will make him say I mov'd him to those arms.
 Say that he thrive,—as 'tis great like he will,—
 Why, then, from Ireland come I with my strength,
 And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd;
 For Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
 And Henry put apart, the next for me. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—BURY. A Room in the Palace.

Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

1 Mur. Run to my Lord of Suffolk; let him know
 We have despatch'd the duke, as he commanded.

2 Mur. O that it were to do!—What have we done?
 Didst ever hear a man so penitent?

1 Mur. Here comes my lord.

Enter SUFFOLK.

Suf. Now, sirs, have you despatch'd this thing?

1 Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead.

Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house;

I will reward you for this venturous deed.
 The king and all the peers are here at hand:—
 Have you laid fair the bed? are all things well,
 According as I gave directions?

1 Mur. 'Tis, my good lord.

Suf. Away! be gone. [Exeunt Murderers,

Trumpets sounded. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, CARDINAL BEAUFORT, SOMERSET, Lords, and others.

K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight;

Say we intend to try his grace to-day,
 If he be guilty, as 'tis published.

Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord.

[Exit.]

K. Hen. Lords, take your places; and, I pray you all,

Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloster
 Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
 He be approv'd in practice culpable.

Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail
 That faultless may condemn a nobleman!

Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion!

K. Hen. I thank thee, Margaret; these words content me much.—

Re-enter SUFFOLK.

How now! why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?

[Suffolk?]

Where is our uncle? what's the matter,
 Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloster is dead.

Q. Mar. Marry, God forbid! [to-night
 Car. God's secret judgment:—I did dream
 The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.]

[The KING swoons.]

Q. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords!
 the king is dead. [noise.]

Som. Rear up his body; wring him by the
 Q. Mar. Run, go, help, help!—O Henry, ope thine eyes! [patient.]

Suf. He doth revive again:—madam, be
 K. Hen. O heavenly God!

Q. Mar. How fares my gracious lord?

Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort! [fort me?]

K. Hen. What, doth my Lord of Suffolk come?
 Came he right now to sing a raven's note,
 Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers;
 And thinks he that the chirping of a wren,
 By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
 Can chase away the first conceived sound?
 Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd words:
 Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say;
 Their touch affrights me, as a serpent's sting.

Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!
 Upon thy eye-balls murderous tyranny
 Sits in grim majesty, to fright the world.
 Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wound-
 ing:—

Yet do not go away:—come, basilisk,
 And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight;
 For in the shade of death I shall find joy,—
 In life but double death, now Gloster's dead.

Q. Mar. Why do you rate my Lord of Suffolk thus?

Although the duke was enemy to him,
 Yet he, most Christian-like laments his death:
 And for myself,—foe as he was to me,—
 Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,
 Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
 I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
 Look pale as primrose with blood-drinking sighs,
 And all to have the noble duke alive.

What know I how the world may deem of me?
 For it is known we were but hollow friends:
 It may be judg'd I made the duke away;
 So shall my name with slander's tongue be wounded,

And princes' courts be fill'd with my reproach.
 This get I by his death: ah me, unhappy!
 To be a queen and crown'd with infamy!

K. Hen. Ah, woe is me for Gloster, wretched man! [he is.]

Q. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than What, dost thou turn away, and hide thy face?
 I am no loathsome leper,—look on me.

What, art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?
 Be poisonous too, and kill thy forlorn queen.

Is all thy comfort shut in Gloster's tomb?
 Why, then, Dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy:

Erect his statue, and worship it,
 And make my image but an alehouse sign.
 Was I for this high wreck'd upon the sea,

And twice by awkward wind from England's bank

Drove back again unto my native clime?
What boded this but well-forewarning wind
Did seem to say,—Seek not a scorpion's nest,
Nor set no footing on this unkind shore?
What did I then but curs'd the gentle gusts,
And he that loos'd them forth their brazen caves:
And bid them blow towards England's blessed
Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock?
Yet Aeolus would not be a murderer,
But left that hateful office unto thee:
The pretty-vaulting sea refus'd to drown me;
Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown'd on shore, [ness:

With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkind—
The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret.
As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,
When from the shore the tempest beat us back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm;
And when the dusky sky began to robe
My earnest-gaping sight of thy land's view,
I took a costly jewel from my neck,—
A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,—
And threw it towards thy land:—the sea re-ceiv'd it;

And so I wish'd thy body might my heart:
And even with this I lost far England's view,
And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart,
And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles,
For losing ken of Albion's wished coast.
How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue,—
The agent of thy foul inconstancy,—
To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did
When he to madding Dido would unfold
His father's acts, commenc'd in burning Troy!
Am I not witch'd like her? or thou not false like him?

Ah me, I can no more! die, Margaret!
For Henry weeps that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter WARWICK and SALIS-BURY. The Commons press to the door.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
That good Duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd

By Suffolk and the Cardinal Beaufort's means.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down,
And care not who they sting in his revenge.
Myself have calmed their spleenful mutiny
Until they hear the order of his death.

K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too true;

But how he died God knows, not Henry:
Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,
And comment then upon his sudden death.

War. That I shall do, my liege.—Stay, Salisbury,
With the rude multitude till I return.

[WAR. goes into an inner room; SAL. retires to the Commons at the door.

K. Hen. O Thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts,—
My thoughts that labour to persuade my soul

Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life!

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee.
Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips
With twenty thousand kisses, and to drain
Upon his face an ocean of salt tears;
To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,
And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling:
But all in vain are these mean obsequies;
And to survey his dead and earthly image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater?
[The folding doors of an inner Chamber are thrown open, and GLOSTER is discovered dead in his bed; WARWICK and others standing by it.

War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body.

K. Hen. That is to see how deep my grave is made;

For with his soul fled all my worldly solace;
For seeing him, I see my life in death.

War. As surely as my soul intends to live
With that dread King that took our state upon
him

To free us from his Father's wrathful curse,
I do believe that violent hands were laid
Upon the life of this thrice-famed duke.

Suf. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tongue!

What instance gives Lord Warwick for his vow?
War. See how the blood is settled in his face!
Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the labouring heart;
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy;
Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er returneth

To blush and beautify the cheek again.

But see, his face is black and full of blood;
His eye-balls further out than when he liv'd,
Staring full ghastly like a strangled man:
His hair uprear'd, his nostrils stretch'd with struggling;

His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd
And tugg'd for life, and was by strength sub-du'd:

Look, on the sheets his hair, you see, is sticking;
His well-proportioned beard made rough and rugged,

Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd.
It cannot be but he was murder'd here;
The least of all these signs were probable.

Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death?

Myself and Beaufort had him in protection;
And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.

War. But both of you were vow'd Duke
Humphrey's foes;

And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep:
'Tis like you would not feast him like a friend;
And 'tis well seen he found an enemy.

Q. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen

As guilty of Duke Humphrey's timeless death.
War. Who finds the heifer dead and bleeding fresh,

And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter?

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak?
Even so suspicious is this tragedy.

Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk?—
where's your knife?

Is Beaufort termed a kite?—where are his talons?

Suf. I wear no knife to slaughter sleeping men;

But here's the avenging sword, rusted with ease,
That shall be scoured in his rancorous heart
That slanders me with murder's crimson badge:—

Say, if thou dar'st, proud Lord of Warwickshire,
That I am faulty in Duke Humphrey's death.

[Exeunt CAR., SOM., and others.]

War. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him?

Q. Mar. He dares not calm his contumelious spirit,

Nor cease to be an arrogant controller,
Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

War. Madam, be still,—with reverence may I say;

For every word you speak in his behalf
Is slander to your royal dignity.

Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour!
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,

Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock

Was grafted with crab-tree slip; whose fruit thou art,

And never of the Nevils' noble race. [thee,

War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers
And I should rob the deathsmen of his fee,

Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,

I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,

And say it was thy mother that thou meant'st,
That thou thyself was born in bastardy;

And, after all this fearful homage done,
Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell,

Pernicious blood-sucker of sleeping men!
Suf. Thou shalt be waking while I shed thy blood,

If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.
War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence:

Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,
And do some service to Duke Humphrey's ghost.

[Exeunt SUFFOLK and WARWICK.]

K. Hen. What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted!

Thrice is he armed that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,

Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.
[A noise within.]

Q. Mar. What noise is this?

Re-enter SUFFOLK and WARWICK, with their weapons drawn.

K. Hen. Why, how now, lords! your wrathful weapons drawn

Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?—
Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here?

Suf. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Bury,

Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Sal. [To the Commons at the door.] Sirs, stand apart; the king shall know your mind.— [He comes forward.]

Dread lord, the commons send you word by me,
Unless false Suffolk straight be done to death,

Or banished fair England's territories,
They will by violence tear him from your palace,

And torture him with grievous lingering death.
They say, by him the good Duke Humphrey died;

They say, in him they fear your highness' death;
And mere instinct of love and loyalty,—

Free from a stubborn opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,—

Makes them thus forward in his banishment.
They say, in care of your most royal person,

That if your highness should intend to sleep,
And charge that no man should disturb your rest,

In pain of your dislike, or pain of death;
Yet, notwithstanding such a strait edict,

Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,
That shily glided towards your majesty,

It were but necessary you were wak'd;
Lest, being suffered in that harmful slumber,

The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal:

And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, wher' you will or no,

From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is;
With whose envenomed and fatal sting

Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,
They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, my Lord of Salisbury!

Suf. 'Tis like the commons, rude unpolish'd hands,

Could send such message to their sovereign:
But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,

To show how quaint an orator you are:
But all the honour Salisbury hath won

Is, that he was the lord ambassador
Sent from a sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king, or we will all break in!

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,

I thank them for their tender loving care;
And had I not been cited so by them,

Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;
For, sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy

Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means:
And therefore,—by His majesty I swear,

Whose far unworthy deputy I am,—
He shall not breathe infection in this air

But three days longer, on the pain of death.
[Exit SALISBURY.]

Q. Mar. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk!

K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle
No more, I say: if thou dost plead for him,

Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.
Had I but said, I would have kept my word;

But when I swear, it is irrevocable.—
If after three days' space thou here be'st found

On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom for thy life.—

Come, Warwick, come, good Warwick, go with me;

I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Exeunt K. HEN., WAR., Lords, &c.]

Q. Mar. Mischance and sorrow go along with you!

Heart's discontent and sour affliction

Be playfellows to keep you company!

There's two of you; the devil make a third!

And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these execrations,

And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.

Q. Mar. Fie, coward woman and soft-hearted wretch!

Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemies?

Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should

I curse them? [groan,

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's

I would invent as bitter-searching terms,

As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear,

Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,

With full as many signs of deadly hate

As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave:

My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words;

Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;

Mine hair be fix'd on end, as one distract;

Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:

And even now my burden'd heart would break,

Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!

Gall, worse than gall, the damnest that they taste!

Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees!

Their chiefest prospect murdering basilisks!

Their softest touch as smart as lizard's stings!

Their music frightful as the serpent's hiss;

And boding screech-owls make the concert full!

All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself; [glass,

And these dread curses,—like the sun 'gainst

Or like an overcharged gun,—recoil,

And turn the farce of them upon thyself.

Suf. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?

Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,

Well could I curse away a winter's night,

Though standing naked on a mountain top,

Where biting cold would never let grass grow,

And think it but a minute spent in sport.

Q. Mar. O, let me entreat thee, cease! Give me thy hand,

That I may dew it with my mournful tears;

Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place.

To wash away my woeful monuments.

O, could this kiss be printed in thy hand,

[Kisses his hand.

That thou might'st think upon these by the seal,

Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee!

So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;

'Tis but surmis'd whilst thou art standing by,

As one that surfeits thinking on a want.

I will repeat thee, or, be well assur'd,

Adventure to be banished myself:

And banished I am, if but from thee.

Go; speak not to me; even now be gone.—

O, go not yet!—Even thus two friends condemn'd [leaves,

Embrace, and a kiss, and take ten thousand

Loather a hundred times to part than die.

Yet now, farewell; and farewell life with thee!

Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished,—

Once by the king and three times thrice by thee.

'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou hence;

A wilderness is populous enough,

So Suffolk had thy heavenly company:

For where thou art, there is the world itself,

With every several pleasure in the world;

And where thou art not, desolation.

I can no more:—live thou to joy thy life;

Myself to joy in naught but that thou liv'st.

Enter VAUX.

Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I pry'thee?

Vaux. To signify unto his majesty

That Cardinal Beaufort is at point of death;

For suddenly a grievous sickness took him, [air,

That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.

Sometime he talks as if Duke Humphrey's ghost

Were by his side; sometime he calls the king,

And whispers to his pillow, as to him,

The secrets of his overcharged soul:

And I am sent to tell his majesty

That even now he cries aloud for him. [king.

Q. Mar. Go tell this heavy message to the [Exit VAUX.

Ah me! what is this world! what news are these!

But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss,

Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?

Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,

And with the southern clouds contend in tears,—

Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows? [coming;—

Now get thee hence: the king, thou know'st, is

If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

Suf. If I depart from thee I cannot live;

And in thy sight to die, what were it else

But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?

Here could I breathe my soul into the air,

As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe

Dying with mother's dug between its lips:

Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,

And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth;

So shouldst thou either turn my flying soul,

Or I should breathe it so into thy body,

And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.

To die by thee were but to die in jest;

From thee to die were torture more than death:

O, let me stay, befall what may befall!

Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful corrosive,

It is applied to a deathful wound. [thee;

To France, sweet Suffolk: let me hear from

For whereso'er thou art in this world's globe

I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.

Suf. I go.

Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.

Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woeful'st cask

That ever did contain a thing of worth.

Even as a splitted bark, so sunder we;

This way fall I to death.

Q. Mar. This way for me. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—LONDON. CARDINAL BEAUFORT'S Bedchamber.

Enter KING HENRY, SALISBURY, WARWICK, and others. The CARDINAL in bed; Attendants with him.

K. Hen. How fares my lord? speak, Beaufort, to thy sovereign.

Car. If thou be'st death I'll give thee England's treasure,

Enough to purchase such another island,
So thou wilt let me live and feel no pain.

K. Hen. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life
Where death's approach is seen so terrible!

War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.

Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.
Died he not in his bed? where should he die?

Can I make men live, wher' they will or no?
O, torture me no more! I will confess.—

Alive again? then show me where he is:
I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.—

He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.—
Comb down his hair; look, look! it stands upright,

Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul!—

Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary
Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

K. Hen. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!

O, beat away the busy meddling fiend
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair!

War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin!

Sal. Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably.

K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!

Lord Cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,

Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.—
He dies, and makes no sign.—O God, forgive
him!

War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.

K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all.—

Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close;
And let us all to meditation. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—KENT. The Sea-shore near Dover

Firing heard at sea. Then enter, from a boat, a Captain, a Master, a Master's Mate, WALTER WHITMORE, and others; with them SUFFOLK, disguised, and other Gentlemen, prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day

Is crept into the bosom of the sea;
And now loud-howling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragic melancholy night;

Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws

Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air.
Therefore bring forth the soldiers of our prize;
For, whilst our pinnacle anchors in the Downs,

Here shall they make their ransom on the sand,
Or with their blood stain this discolour'd shore.—

Master, this prisoner freely give I thee;—
And thou that art his mate, make boot of this;—

The other [pointing to SUFFOLK], Walter
Whitmore is thy share. [know.]

1 Genl. What is my ransom, master? let me Mast. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head. [yours.]

Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes Cap. What, think you much to pay two thousand crowns,

And bear the name and port of gentlemen?
Cut both the villains' throats;—for die you shall:—

The lives of those which we have lost in fight
Cannot be counterpois'd with such a petty sum.

1 Genl. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life. [straight.]

2 Genl. And so will I, and write home for it Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,

And therefore, to revenge it, shalt thou die;
[To SUFFOLK.]

And so should these, if I might have my will.
Cap. Be not so rash; take ransom, let him live.

Suf. Look on my George,—I am a gentleman;
Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.

Whit. And so am I; my name is Walter Whitmore. [affright?]

How now! why start'st thou? what, doth death
Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me that by Water I should die:

Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded;
Thy name is Gaultier, being rightly sounded.

Whit. Gaultier or Walter, which it is I care
not:

Never yet did base dishonour blur our name
But with our sword we wip'd away the blot;

Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge,
Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defac'd,
And I proclaim'd a coward through the world!

[Lays hold on SUFFOLK.]

Suf. Stay Whitmore; for thy prisoner is a
prince,

The Duke of Suffolk, William De-la-Poole.

Whit. The Duke of Suffolk muffled up in rags!
Suf. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke:

Jove sometime went disguis'd, and why not I?
Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt be. [blood.]

Suf. Obscure and lowly swain, King Henry's
The honourable blood of Lancaster,

Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.
Hast thou not kiss'd thy hand and held my stirrup?

Bareheaded plodded by my foot-cloth mule,
And thought thee happy when I shook my
head?

How often hast thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,

When I have feasted with Queen Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;

Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride:

How in our voiding-lobby hast thou stood.
And duly waited for my coming forth?
This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf,
And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue.

Whit. Speak, captain, shall I stab the forlorn swain? [me.]

Cap. First let my words stab him, as he hath

Suf. Base slave, thy words are blunt, and so art thou. [boat's side]

Cap. Convey him hence, and on our long-strike off his head.

Suf. Thou dar'st not, for thy own.

Cap. Yes, Poole.

Suf. Poole!

Cap. Poole! Sir Poole! lord!

Ay, kennel, puddle, sink; whose filth and dirt Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth For swallowing the treasure of the realm:

Thy lips, that kiss'd the queen, shall sweep the ground; [phrey's death,

And thou, that smil'dst at good Duke Hum- Against the senseless winds shalt grin in vain,

Who, in contempt, shall hiss at thee again:

And wedded be thou to the hags of hell, For daring to affy a mighty lord

Unto the daughter of a worthless king, Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,

And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd

With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.

By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France;

The false revolting Normans thorough thee

Disdain to call us lord; and Picardy

Hath slain their governors, surpris'd our forts,

And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home.

The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all,—

Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,—

As hating thee, are rising up in arms: [crown

And now the house of York,—thrust from the

By shameful murder of a guiltless king

And lofty proud encroaching tyranny,—

Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colours

Advance our half-fac'd sun, striving to shine,

Under the which is writ Invitis nubibus.

The commons here in Kent are up in arms:

And, to conclude, reproach and beggary

Is crept into the palace of our king,

And o' by thee.—Away! convey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a god, to shoot forth

thunder

Upon these paltry, servile, abject drudges!

Small things make base men proud; this villain

here,

Being captain of a pinnace, threatens more

Than Bargulus the strong Illyrian pirate.

Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob beehives:

It is impossible that I should die

By such a lowly vassal as thyself.

Thy words move rage and not remorse in me:

I go of message from the queen to France;

I charge thee, wait me safely cross the Channel.

Cap. Walter,—

Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must wait thee to thy death. [I fear.]

Suf. Gelidus timor occupat artus:—'tis thee

Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear before I leave thee.

What, are ye daunted now? now will ye stoop?

1 Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him, speak him fair. [rough,

Suf. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour.

Far be it we should honour such as these

With humble suit; no, rather let my head

Stoop to the block than these knees bow to any,

Save to the God of heaven and to my king;

And sooner dance upon a bloody pole

Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom.

True nobility is exempt from fear:—

More can I bear than you dare execute.

Cap. Hail him away, and let him talk no more. [can,

Suf. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye

That this my death may never be forgot!—

Great men oft die by vile bezonians:

A Roman sworder and banditto slave

Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutus' bastard hand

Stabb'd Julius Caesar; savage islanders

Pompey the Great; and Suffolk dies by pirates.

[Exit Suf., with Whit. and others.]

Cap. And as for these, whose ransom we have set,

It is our pleasure one of them depart:—

Therefore come you with us, and let him go.

[Exeunt all but the first Gentleman.]

Re-enter WHITMORE with SUFFOLK'S body.

Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,

Until the queen his mistress bury it. [Exit.]

1 Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle!

His body will I bear unto the king:

If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;

So will the queen, that, living, held him dear.

[Exit with the body.]

SCENE II.—Blackheath.

Enter GEORGE BEVIS and JOHN HOLLAND.

Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a lath; they have been up these two days. [now, then,

John. They have the more need to sleep

Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.

John. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare

Well, I say it was never merry world in England since gentlemen came up.

Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicraftsmen.

John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.

Geo. Nay, more, the king's council are no good workmen.

John. True; and yet it is said,—Labour in thy vocation; which is as much to say as,—Let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

Geo. Thou hast hit it; for there's no better sign of a brave mind than a hard hand.

John. I see them! I see them! There's

Best's son the tanner of Wingham,—

Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies to make dog's leather of.

John. And Dick the butcher,—

Geo. There is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

John. And Smith the weaver,—

Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

John. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drum. Enter CADE, DICK the Butcher,
SMITH the Weaver, and others in great number.

Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father,—

Dick. Or, rather, of stealing a cade of herrings. [Aside.]

Cade. For our enemies shall fall before us,— inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes.—Command silence.

Dick. Silence!

Cade. My father was a Mortimer,—

Dick. He was an honest man and a good bricklayer. [Aside.]

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,—

Dick. I knew her well; she was a midwife.
[Aside.]

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies,—

Dick. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many laces. [Aside.]

Smith. But now of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. [Aside.]

Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable; and there was he born under a hedge.— for his father had never a house but the cage.
[Aside.]

Cade. Valiant I am.

Smith. 'A must needs; for beggary is valiant.
[Aside.]

Cade. I am able to endure much.

Dick. No question of that; for I have seen him whipped three market days together. [Aside.]

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. He need not fear the sword; for his coat is of proof. [Aside.]

Dick. But methinks he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt i' the hand for stealing of sheep. [Aside.]

Cade. Be brave, then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be in England seven halfpenny loaves sold for a penny: the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it felony to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common; and in Cheapside shall my palfrey go to grass: and when I am king,—as king I will be,—

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I thank you, good people:—there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord. [Lawyers.]

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchmen, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say the bee stings; but I say 'tis the bee's wax; for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since.—How now! who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read and cast account.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. Has a book in his pocket with red letters in't.

Cade. Nay, then, he is a conjurer.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations and write court-hand.

Cade. I am sorry for 't: the man is a proper man, on mine honour: unless I find him guilty, he shall not die.—Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: what is thy name?

Clerk. Emmanuel.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters: 'twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone.—Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him! he's a villain and a traitor.

Cade. Away with him, I say! hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.

[Exeunt some with the Clerk.]

Enter MICHAEL.

Mich. Where's our general?

Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly! Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: he is but a knight, is 'a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently. [Kneels.] Rise up, Sir John Mortimer. [Rises.] Now have at him!

Enter SIR HUMPHREY STAFFORD and
WILLIAM his Brother, with drum and Forces.

Staf. Rebellious hinds, the filth and scum of Kent,

Mark'd for the gallows, lay your weapons down;
Home to your cottages, forsake this groom:—
The king is merciful if you revolt. [Blood
W. Staf. But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to
If you go forward: therefore yield or die.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not:

It is to you, good people, that I speak,
O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign;

For I am rightful heir unto the crown.
Staf. Villain, thy father was a plasterer;

And thou thyself a sheerman,—art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

W. Staf. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this:—Edmund Mortimer,
Earl of March, [he not?]

Married the Duke of Clarence's daughter,—did Staf. Ay, sir.

Cade. By her he had two children at one birth.

W. Staf. That's false.

Cade. Ay, there's the question: but I say
The elder of them being put to nurse,
Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away;
And, ignorant of his birth and parentage,
Became a bricklayer when he came to age:
His son am I; deny it if you can.

Dick. Nay, 'tis too true; therefore he shall be king.

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore deny it not. [words,

Staf. And will you credit these base drudge's
That speaks he knows not what? [gone.

All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye

W. Staf. Jack Cade, the Duke of York hath taught you this.

Cade. He lies, for I invented it myself.
[Aside.]—Go to, surrah, tell the king from me, that, for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.

Dick. And furthermore, we'll have the Lord
Say's head, for selling the dukedom of Maine.

Cade. And good reason; for thereby is England maimed, and fain to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you that that Lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an eunuch: and more than that, he can speak French; and therefore he is a traitor.

Staf. O gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade. Nay, answer if you can:—the Frenchmen are our enemies; go to, then, I ask but this,
—can he that speaks with the tongue of an enemy be a good counsellor, or no? [head.

All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his

W. Staf. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevail,

Assail them with the army of the king. [town

Staf. Herald, away; and throughout every Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade;
That those which fly before the battle ends
May, even in their wives' and children's sight,
Be hang'd up for example at their doors:—

And you that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Exeunt the two STAFFORDS and Forces.

Cade. And you that love the commons follow
me.—

Now show yourselves men; 'tis for liberty.
We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:
Spare none but such as go in clouted shoon;
For they are thrifty honest men, and such As would—but that they dare not—take our parts. [wards us.

Dick. They are all in order, and march to Cade. But then are we in order when we are most out of order. Come, march forward.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another part of BLACKHEATH.

Alarums. The two parties enter and fight, and both the STAFFORDS are slain.

Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

Dick. Here, sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behavedst thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house:

therefore thus will I reward thee,—the Lent shall be as long again as it is; and thou shalt have a license to kill for a hundred lacking one, a week.

Dick. I desire no more.

Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deservest no less. This monument of the victory will I bear [putting on part of SIR H. STAFFORD'S armour]; and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's heels till I do come to London, where we will have the mayor's sword borne before us.

Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good,
break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.

Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee.—Come, let's march towards London. [Exeunt!

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, reading a supplication;
the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM and LORD SAY with him: at a distance, QUEEN MARGARET mourning over SUFFOLK'S head.

Q. Mar. Oft have I heard that grief softens
the mind,

And makes it fearful and degenerate;
Think therefore on revenge, and cease to weep.
But who can cease to weep, and look on this?
Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast:
But where's the body that I should embrace?

Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebel's supplication?

K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat;

For God forbid so many simple souls
Should perish by the sword! And I myself,
Rather than bloody war shall cut them short,
Will parley with Jack Cade their general:—
But stay, I'll read it over once again.

Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely face

Rul'd, like a wandering planet, over me,
And could it not enforce them to relent
That were unworthy to behold the same?

K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have thy head. [his.

Say. Ay, but I hope your highness shall have

K. Hen. How now, madam!

Still lamenting and mourning for Suffolk's
death?

I fear, my love, if that I had been dead, [me.
Thou wouldst not have mourn'd so much for

Q. Mar. No, my love, I should not mourn, but die for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

K. Hen. How now! what news? why com'st thou in such haste? [lord;

Mess. The rebels are in Southwark; fly, my Jack Cade proclaims himself Lord Mortimer,
Descended from the Duke of Clarence' house;
And calls your grace usurper openly,
And vows to crown himself in Westminster.

His army is a ragged multitude
Of hinds and peasants, rude and merciless:
Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death
Hath given them heart and courage to proceed:
All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,
They call false caterpillars, and intend their
death.

K. Hen. O graceless men! they know not what they do. [worth
Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Killingworth a power be rais'd to put them down.

Q. Mar. Ah! were the Duke of Suffolk now alive,

These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.

K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee; Therefore away with us to Killingworth.

Say. So might your grace's person be in danger;

The sight of me is odious in their eyes;
 And therefore in this city will I stay,
 And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter a second Messenger.

2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London Bridge;

The citizens fly and forsake their houses;
 The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
 Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear
 To spoil the city and your royal court.

Buck. Then linger not, my lord; away, take horse.

K. Hen. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will succour us. [deceas'd.

Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is
K. Hen. Farewell, my lord [to LORD SAY]: trust not the Kentish rebels.

Buck. Trust nobody, for fear you be betray'd.
Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,

And therefore am I bold and resolute.

Exeunt.

SCENE V.—LONDON. The Tower.

Enter LORD SCALES and others, on the Walls. Then enter certain Citizens, below.

Scales. How now! is Jack Cade slain?

1 Cit. No, my lord, not likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: the lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such aid as I can spare, you shall command;

But I am troubled here with them myself,—
 The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower.
 But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
 And thither I will send you Matthew Gough;
 Fight for your king, your country, and your lives;

And so, farewell, for I must hence again.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—LONDON. Cannon Street.

Enter JACK CADE and his followers. He strikes his staff on London stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London stone, I charge and command that, of the city's cost, the pissing-conduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now henceforward it shall be treason for any that calls me other than Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!

Cade. Knock him down there.

[They kill him.]

Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call you Jack Cade more; I think he hath a very fair warning.

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then, let's go fight with them: but first, go and set London Bridge on fire; and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—LONDON. Smithfield.

Alarums. Enter, on one side, CADE and his Company; on the other, Citizens, and the KING'S Forces, headed by MATTHEW GOUGH. They fight; the Citizens are routed, and MATTHEW GOUGH is slain.

Cade. So, sirs:—now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of court; down with them all.

Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.

Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.

Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.

John. Mass, 'twill be sore law then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 'tis not whole yet. [Aside.]

Smith. Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese. [Aside.]

Cade. I have thought upon it, it shall be so. Away, burn all the records of the realm: my mouth shall be the Parliament of England.

John. Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out. [Aside.]

Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here's the Lord Say, which sold the towns in France; he that made us pay one-and-twenty fifteens, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter GEORGE BEVIS, with the LORD SAY.

Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times.—Ah, thou say, thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty for giving up of Normandy unto Monsieur Basimecu, the Dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee by these presence, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school: and whereas, before, our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face that thou hast men about thee that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them; when, indeed, only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride in a foot-cloth, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent,—

Dick. What say you of Kent?

Say. Nothing but this,—'tis bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him, away with him! he speaks Latin.

Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you will.

Kent, in the Commentaries Caesar writ,
Is term'd the civillest place of all this isle:
Sweet is the country, because full of riches;
The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy;
Which makes me hope you are not void of pity.
I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy;
Yet, to recover them, would lose my life.
Justice with favour have I always done;
Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never.

When have I aught exacted at your hands,
But to maintain the king, the realm, and you?
Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks,
Because my book prefer'd me to the king.
And seeing ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.

Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits,
You cannot but forbear to murder me:
This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings
For your behoof,—[the field?

Cade. Tut, when struck'st thou one blow in

Say. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I struck

Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.
Geo. O monstrous coward! what, to come behind folks? [your good?

Say. These cheeks are pale for watching for Cade. Give him a box o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again. [causes

Say. Long sitting to determine poor men's Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall have a hempen candle, then, and the help of hatchet.

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

Say. The palsy, and not fear, provokes me.

Cade. Nay, he nods at us, as who should say, I'll be even with you: I'll see if his head will stand steadier on a pole, or no. Take him away, and behead him.

Say. Tell me wherein have I offended most? Have I affected wealth or honour,—speak? Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?

Is my apparel sumptuous to behold? Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death? These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding, [thoughts.

This breast from harbouring foul deceitful O let me live!

Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words; but I'll bridle it: he shall die, an it be but for pleading so well for his life. [Aside.] Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue;

he speaks not o' God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently; and then break into his son-in-law's house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done. [your prayers,

Say. Ah, countrymen! if when you make God should be so obdurate as yourselves, How would it fare with your departed souls? And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye. [Exeunt some with LORD SAY.

The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute; there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead ere they have it: men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command that our wives be as free as heart can wish or tongue can tell.

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheap-side, and take up commodities upon our bills?

Cade. Marry, presently.

All. O brave!

Re-enter Rebels, with the heads of LORD SAY and his Son-in-law.

Cade. But is not this braver?—Let them kiss one another, for they loved well when they were alive. Now, part them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night: for with these borne before us, instead of maces, will we ride through the streets; and at every corner have them kiss.—Away! [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Southwark.

Alarum. Enter CADE and all his Rabblement.

Cade. Up Fish Street! down Saint Magnus' corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames!—[A parley sounded, then a retreat.] What noise is this I hear? Dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill?

Enter BUCKINGHAM and LORD CLIFFORD, with Forces.

Buck. Ay, here they be that dare and will disturb thee: [king Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the Unto the commons whom thou hast misled; And here pronounce free pardon to them all That will forsake thee and go home in peace.

Cliff. What say ye, countrymen? will ye relent,

And yield to mercy whilst 'tis offer'd you; Or let a rebel lead you to your deaths?

Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon,

Fling up his cap, and say God save his majesty! Who hateth him, and honours not his father, Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake, Shake he his weapon at us and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Cade. What, Buckingham and Clifford, are ye so brave?—And you, base peasants, do ye believe him? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark? I thought ye would never have given out these arms till you had recovered your ancient freedom: but you are all recreants and dastards, and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your backs with burdens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces: for me, I will make shift for one; and so, God's curse light upon you all!

All. We'll follow Cade, we'll follow Cade
Clif. Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth,
That thus you do exclaim you'll go with him?
Will he conduct you through the heart of

France,
And make the meanest of you earls and dukes?

Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to;
Nor knows he how to live, but by the spoil,
Unless by robbing of your friends and us.
Were't not a shame, that whilst you live at jar,
The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
Should make a start o'er seas and vanquish you?

Metinks already in this civil broil
I see them lording it in London streets,
Crying Villaco! unto all they meet.
Better ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry
Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy. [lost;

To France, to France, and get what you have
Spare England, for it is your native coast:
Henry hath money, you are strong and manly;
God on our side, doubt not victory.

All. A Clifford! a Clifford! we'll follow the king and Clifford.

Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro as this multitude? The same of Henry the Fifth hales them to an hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together to surprise me: my sword make way for me, for here is no staying. [Aside.]—In despite of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you! and heavens and honour be witness that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels. [Exit.]

Buck. What! is he fled? go some and follow him;

And he that brings his head unto the king
Shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.—

[Exeunt some of them.]

Follow me, soldiers: we'll devise a mean
To reconcile you all unto the king. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Killingworth Castle.

Trumpets sounded. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, and SOMERSET, on the terrace of the Castle.

K. Hen. Was ever king that joy'd an earthly throne,
And could command no more content than I?
No sooner was I crept out of my cradle
But I was made a king, at nine months old:
Was never subject long'd to be a king
As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and LORD CLIFFORD.

Buck. Health and glad tidings to your majesty!
K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor Cade surpris'd?

Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter, below, a number of CADE'S Followers, with halters about their necks.

Clif. He is fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield;

And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death.

K. Hen. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gates,

To entertain my vows of thanks and praise!
Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,
And show'd how well you love your prince and country:

Continue still in this so good a mind,
And Henry, though he be unfortunate,
Assure yourselves, will never be unkind:
And so, with thanks and pardon to you all,
I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Please it your grace to be advertised
The Duke of York is newly come from Ireland;
And with a puissant and a mighty power
Of Gallowglasses and stout kerns
Is marching hitherward in proud array:
And still proclaimeth, as he comes along,
His arms are only to remove from thee
The Duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

K. Hen. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and York distress'd;

Like to a ship that, having 'scap'd a tempest,
Is straitway calmd, and boarded with a pirate:
But now is Cade driven back, his men dispers'd;
And now is York in arms to second him.—

I pray thee, Buckingham, go thou and meet him;
And ask him what's the reason of these arms.
Tell him I'll send Duke Edmund to the Tower;—
And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him.

Som. My lord,
I'll yield myself to prison willingly,
Or unto death, to do my country good.

K. Hen. In any case be not too rough in terms; [language.]

For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language.
Buck. I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal

As all things shall redound unto your good.

K. Hen. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better;

For yet may England curse my wretched reign.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—KENT. IDEN'S Garden.

Enter CADE.

Cade. Fie on ambition! fie on myself, that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These five days have I hid me in these woods, and durst not peep out, for all the country is laid for me; but now am I so hungry that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick wall have I climbed into this garden, to see if I can eat grass or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And I think this word sallet was born to do me good: for many a time, but for a sallet, my brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill; and many a time, when I have been dry, and bravely marching, it hath served me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.

Enter IDEN, with Servants behind.

Iden. Lord, who would live turmoiled in the court,

And may enjoy such quiet walks as these? This small inheritance my father left me Contenteth me, and's worth a monarchy. I seek not to wax great by others' waning, Or gather wealth I care not with what envy: Sufficeth that I have maintains my state, And sends the poor well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. [Aside.] Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get a thousand crowns of the king by carrying my head to him! but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why, rude companion, whatso'er thou be, I know thee not; why, then, should I betray Is't not enough to break into my garden, And like a thief to come to rob my grounds, Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner, But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms?

Cade. Brave thee! ay, by the best blood that ever was broached, and beard thee too. Look on me well: I have eat no meat these five days; yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door nail, I pray God I may never eat grass more.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England stands,

That Alexander Idon, an esquire of Kent, Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man. Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes to mine, See if thou canst outface me with thy looks: Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser; Thy hand is but a finger to my fist; Thy leg a stick compared with this truncheon; My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;

And if mine arm be heaved in the air, Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth. As for words, whose greatness answers words, Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion that ever I heard.—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the burley-boned clown in chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove, on my knees, thou mayest be turned to hobnails. [They fight, CADE falls.] O, I am slain! famine and no other hath slain me: let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed, And hang thee o'er my tomb when I am dead: Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point; But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat, To emblaze the honour that thy master got.

Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory. Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man; and exhort all the world to be cowards,—for I, that never feared any, am vanquished by famine, not by valour. [Dies.]

Iden. How much thou wrongst me, heaven be my judge. [thee!]

Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare And as I thrust thy body in with my sword, So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell. Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave, And there cut off thy most ungracious head; Which I will bear in triumph to the king, Leaving thy trunk for crows to feed upon.

[Exeunt, dragging out the body.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Fields between Dartford and Blackheath.

The KING's Camp on one side. On the other, enter YORK attended, with drum and colours: his Forces at some distance.

York. From Ireland thus comes York to claim his right, And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head: Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, clear and bright;

To entertain great England's lawful king. Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee dear?

Let them obey that know not how to rule; This hand was made to handle naught but gold. I cannot give due action to my words Except a sword or sceptre balance it: A sceptre shall it have,—have I a soul,— On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?

The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.

Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well. [Aside.]

York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dead liege,

To know the reason of these arms in peace; Or why thou, being a subject as I am, Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn, Shouldst raise so great a power without his leave,

Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

York. Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:

O, I could hew up rocks and fight with flint, I am so angry at these abject terms; And now, like Ajax Telamonius, On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury!

I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts:
But I must make fair weather yet awhile.
Till Henry be more weak and I more strong.
[Aside.]

Buckingham, I prythee, pardon me,
That I have given no answer all this while;
My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.
The cause why I have brought this army hither
Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
Seditious to his grace and to the state. [part:
Buck. That is too much presumption on thy
But if thy arms be to no other end,
The king hath yielded unto thy demand;
The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner?

Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.

York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss thy powers.—

Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves;
Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,
You shall have pay and everything you wish.—
And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
Command my eldest son, nay, all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love;
I'll send them all as willing as I live:
Lands, goods, horse, armour, anything I have,
Is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I commend this kind submission:
We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter KING HENRY, attended.

K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm?

York. In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness.

K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring? [hence,

York. To heave the traitor Somerset from
And fight against that monstrous rebel Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter IDEN, with CADE'S head.

Iden. If one so rude and of so mean condition
May pass into the presence of a king,
Lo, I present your grace a traitor's head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

K. Hen. The head of Cade!—Great God, how just art thou!—

O, let me view his visage, being dead,
That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.— [him?

Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew
Iden. I was, an't like your majesty.

K. Hen. How art thou call'd? and what is thy degree?

Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name;
A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.

Buck. So please it you, my lord, 'twere not amiss

He were created knight for his good service.

K. Hen. Iden, kneel down. [He kneels.]
Rise up a knight.

We give thee for reward a thousand marks;
And will that thou henceforth attend on us.

Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty,
And never live but true unto his liege!

K. Hen. See, Buckingham! Somerset comes with the queen:
Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET and SOMERSET.

Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,
But boldly stand and front him to the face.

York. How now! is Somerset at liberty?
Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd
thoughts,

And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?— [me,
False king! why hast thou broken faith with Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse?
King did I call thee? no, thou art not king;
Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.

That head of thine doth not become a crown;
Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,
And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.
That gold must round engirt these brows of mine,
Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear,
Is able with the change to kill and cure.
Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,
And with the same to act controlling laws.
Give place: by heaven, thou shalt rule no
more

O'er him whom heaven created for thy ruler.

Som. O monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee,
York,

Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown:
Obey, audacious traitor; kneel for grace.

York. Wouldst have me kneel? first let me ask of these,

If they can brook I bow a knee to man.—
Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail:

[Exit Atten.

I know, ere they will have me go to ward,
They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement.

Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come
To say if that the bastard boys of York
Shall be the surety for their traitor father.

[Exit an Attendant.

York. O blood-bespotted Neapolitan,
Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourgel!
The sons of York, thy betters in their birth,
Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those
That for my surety will refuse the boys!

See where they come: I'll warrant they'll make it good.

Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford to deny their [bail.

Enter EDWARD and RICHARD PLANTAGENET, with Forces, at one side; at the other, with Forces also, LORD CLIFFORD and his Son.

Clif. Health and all happiness to my lord the king! [Kneels.

York. I thank thee, Clifford: say, what news
with thee?

Nay, do not fright us with an angry look:
We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again;
For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee. [take;

Clif. This is my king, York, I do not mis-
But thou mistak'st me much to think I do:—
To Bedlam with him! is the man grown mad?

K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour

Makes him oppose himself against his king.

Clif. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower, And chop away that factious pate of his.

Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey; His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.

York. Will you not, sons?

Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.

Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall. [here!]

Clif. Why, what a brood of traitors have we

York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so:

I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor.—

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,

That with the very shaking of their chains

They may astonish these fell-lurking curs:

Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.

Drums. Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY, with Forces.

Clif. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,

And manacle the bear-ward in their chains, If thou dar'st bring them to the bating-place.

Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur

Run back and bite, because he was withheld;

Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,

Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs and cried:

And such a piece of service will you do,

If you oppose yourselves to match Lord Warwick.

Clif. Hence, heap of wrath, long indigested lump,

As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!

York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anon.

Clif. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn yourselves. [to bow?—]

K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot

Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair,

Thou mad misleader of thy bransick son!—

What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,

And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?—

O, where is faith? O, where is loyalty?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,

Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?

Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,

And shame thine honourable age with blood?

Why art thou old, and want'st experience?

Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?

For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,

That bows unto the grave with mickle age.

Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself

The title of this most renowned duke;

And in my conscience do repute his grace

The rightful heir to England's royal seat.

K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?

Sal. I have. [for such an oath?]

K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven

Sal. It is great sin to swear unto a sin;

But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow

To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,

To force a spotless virgin's chastity,

To reave the orphan of his patrimony,

To wring the widow from her custom'd right;

And have no other reason for this wrong

But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

Q. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself. [thou hast,

York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends

I am resolv'd for death or dignity. [true.

Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove

War. You were best to go to bed and dream

again,

To keep thee from the tempest of the field.

Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm

Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;

And that I'll write upon thy burgonet,

Might I but know thee by thy household badge.

War. Now, by my father's badge, old Nevil's crest,

The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,

Thus day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,—

As on a mountain-top the cedar shows,

That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,—

Even to afighnt thee with the view thereof.

Clif. And from thy burgonet I'll rend thy bear,

And tread it under foot with all contempt,

Despite the bear-ward that protects the bear.

Y. Clif. And so to arms, victorious father,

To quell the rebels and their complices. [spite,

Rich. Fie! charity, for shame! speak not in

For you shall sup with Jesu Christ to-night.

Y. Clif. Foul stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell.

Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II.—Sant Albans.

Alarums; excursions. Enter WARWICK.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls!

And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,

Now,—when the angry trumpet sounds alarum,

And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,—

Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!

Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,

Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter YORK.

How now, my noble lord! what, all a-foot?

York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;

But match to match I have encounter'd him,

And made a prey for carrion kites and crows

Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well.

Enter LORD CLIFFORD.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come

York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase,

For I myself must hunt this deer to death.

War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou fight'st.—

As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,

It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. [Exit.

Clif. What see'st thou in me, York? why dost thou pause? [love,

York. With thy brave bearing should I be in

But that thou art so fast mine enemy.

Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem,

But that 'tis shown ignobly and in treason.

York. So let it help me now against thy sword,
 As I in justice and true right express it!
 Clif. My soul and body on the action both!
 York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly.
 Clif. La fin couronne les œuvres.
[They fight, and CLIFFORD falls and dies.]
 York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.
 Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will!
[Exit.]

Enter YOUNG CLIFFORD.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout;
 Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
 Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell,
 Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
 Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
 Hot coals of vengeance!—Let no soldier fly:
 He that is truly dedicate to war
 Hath no self-love; nor he that loves himself
 Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
 The name of valour.—O, let the vile world end.
[Seeing his father's body.]

And the premised flames of the last day
 Knit earth and heaven together!
 Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
 Particularities and petty sounds
 To cease!—Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,
 To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve
 The silver livery of advised age,
 And in thy reverence and thy chair-days thus
 To die in ruffian battle?—Even at this sight
 My heart is turn'd to stone, and while 'tis mine
 It shall be stony. York not our old men spares:
 No more will I their babes: tears virginal
 Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
 And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaim's,
 Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.
 Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:
 Meet I an infant of the house of York,
 Into as many gobbets will I cut it
 As wild Medea young Absyrtus did:
 In cruelty will I seek out my fame.—
 Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house:

[Taking up the body.]
 As did Æneas old Anchises bear,
 So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
 But then Æneas bare a living load,
 Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine. [Exit.]

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET and SOMERSET, fighting, and SOMERSET is killed.

Rich. So, lie thou there;—
 For underneath an alehouse' paltry sign,
 The Castle in Saint Albans, Somerset
 Hath made the wizard famous in his death.—
 Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still:
 Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.]

Alarums: excursions. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, and others, retreating.

Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow; for shame, away!

K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay.

Q. Mar. What are you made of? you'll nor fight nor fly:

Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
 To give the enemy way; and to secure us
 By what we can, which can no more but fly.
[Alarum afar off.]
 If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom
 Of all our fortunes: but if we haply scape,—
 As well we may, if not through your neglect,—
 We shall to London get: where you are lov'd;
 And where this breach, now in our fortunes
 made,
 May readily be stopp'd.

Re-enter YOUNG CLIFFORD.

Y. Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief set,
 I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly:
 But fly you must; uncurable discomfit
 Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.
 Away, for your relief! and we will live
 To see their day, and them our fortune give:
 Away, my lord, away! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Fields near Saint Albans.

Alarum: retreat. Flourish: then enter YORK, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, WARWICK, and Soldiers, with drum and colours.

York. Of Salisbury, who can report of him,—
 That winter lion, who in rage forgets
 Aged contusions and all brush of time,
 And, like a gallant in the brow of youth,
 Repairs him with occasion? This happy day
 Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
 If Salisbury be lost.

Rich. My noble father,
 Three times to-day I help him to his horse,
 Three times bestrid him, thrice I led him off,
 Persuaded him from any further act: [him;
 But still, where danger was, still there I met
 And like rich hangings in a homely house,
 So was his will in his old feeble body.
 But, noble as he is, look where he comes,

Enter SALISBURY.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day;
 By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you,
 Richard:
 God knows how long it is I have to live;
 And it hath pleas'd him that three times to-day
 You have defended me from imminent death.—
 Well, lords, we have not got that which we have:

'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
 Being opposites of such repairing nature.

York. I know our safety is to follow them;
 For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,
 To call a present court of Parliament.

Let us pursue him ere the writs go forth:—

What says Lord Warwick? shall we after them?
 War. After them! nay, before them, if we can.

Now, by my hands, lords, 'twas a glorious day:
 Saint Albans battle, won by famous York,
 Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.— [all:
 Sound drums and trumpets;—and to London
 And more such days as these to us befall!
[Exeunt.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—LONDON. The Parliament House.

Drums. Some Soldiers of YORK'S Party break in. Then enter the DUKE OF YORK, EDWARD, RICHARD, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, WARWICK, and others, with white roses in their hats.

War. I wonder how the king escap'd our hands.

York. While we pursu'd the horsemen of the north,
He slyly stole away, and ~~all his men~~
Whereat the great Lord of Northumb
Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat,
Cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself,
Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all a-breast, Charg'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in,
Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.
Edw. Lord Stafford's father, Duke of Buckingham,

Is either slain or wounded dangerous;
I cleft his beaver with a downright blow:
That this is true, father, behold his blood.

[Showing his bloody sword.]

Mont. And, brother, here's the Earl of Wiltshire's blood,

[To YORK, showing his.]

Whom I encounter'd as the battles join'd.

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.

[Throwing down SOMERSET'S head.]

York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons.—

But, is your grace dead, my Lord of Somerset?

Norfolk. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt.

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henry's
head.

War. And so do I.—Victorious Prince of
York,

Before I see thee seated in that throne
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,

I vow by heaven these eyes shall never close.

This is the palace of the fearful king,

And this the regal seat: possess it, York;

For this is thine, and not King Henry's heirs'.

York. Assist me, then, sweet Warwick, and I will;

For hither we have broken in by force. [die.]

Norfolk. We'll all assist you; he that flies shall York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk:—stay by me, my lords;—

And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night.

War. And when the king comes, offer him
no violence,

Unless he seek to thrust you out per force.

[The Soldiers retire.]

York. The queen this day here holds her parliament,

But little thinks we shall be of her council:

By words or blows here let us win our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house. [call'd.]

War. The bloody parliament shall this be
Unless Plantagenet, Duke of York, be king,

And bashful Henry depos'd, whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute;

I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,

The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dares stir a wing if Warwick shake his bells.

I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares:— Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English
crown.

[*WARWICK leads YORK to the throne,
who seats himself.*]

Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, CLIFFORD
NORTHUMBERLAND, WESTMORELAND, EX-ETER, and others, with red roses in their hats.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits,

Even in the chair of state! belike he means,—

Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer,—

To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king.—

Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father;

And thine, Lord Clifford; and you both have vow'd revenge

On him, his sons, his favourites, and his friends.

North. If I be not, heavens be reveng'd on
me!

Cliff. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.

West. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him down:

My heart for anger burns; I cannot brook it.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle Earl of Westmoreland.

Cliff. Patience is for poltroons, and such as he:

He durst not sit there had your father liv'd.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament

Let us assail the family of York. [so.]

North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin: be it

K. Hen. Ah, know you not the city favours
them,

And they have troops of soldiers at their beck?

Exe. But when the duke is slain they'll quickly fly.

K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament house!

Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats

Shall be the war that Henry means to use.

[They advance to the DUKE.]

Thou factious Duke of York, descend my
throne,

And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet;

I am thy sovereign.

York. I am thine.

Exe. For shame, come down: he made thee
Duke of York. [was.]

York. It was my inheritance, as the earldom

Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.

War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown

In following this usurping Henry.

Cliff. Whom should he follow but his natural
king?

War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard
Duke of York.

K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?

York. It must and shall be so: content thyself.

War. Be Duke of Lancaster; let him be king.

West. He is both king and Duke of Lancaster;
And that the Lord of Westmoreland shall maintain. [forget.]

War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You That we are those which chas'd you from the field,

And slew your fathers, and with colours spread
March'd through the city to the palace-gates.

North. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;

And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue
it.

West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons,

Thy kinsmen, and thy friends, I'll have more lives

Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.

Cliff. Urge it no more: lest that, instead of words,

I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger
As shall revenge his death before I stir.

War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats! [crown?

York. Will you we show our title to the
If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.

K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?

Thy father was, as thou art, Duke of York;
Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, Earl of March:

I am the son of Henry the Fifth,
Who made the Dauphin and the French to
stoop,

And seiz'd upon their towns and provinces.

War. Talk not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.

K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I:
When I was crown'd I was but nine months old.

Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks, you lose.—

Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head.

Edw. Sweet father, do so; set it on your head.

Mont. Good brother [to YORK], as thou lov'st and honour'st arms,

Let's fight it out, and not stand cavilling thus.

Rich. Sound drums and trumpets and the king will fly.

York. Sons, peace!

K. Hen. Peace thou! and give King Henry leave to speak. [lords;

War. Plantagenet shall speak first: hear him,
And be you silent and attentive too,
For he that interrupts him shall not live.

K. Hen. Think'st thou that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire and my father sat?

No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;

Ay, and their colours,—often borne in France,
And now in England to our heart's great sorrow,— [lords?

Shall be my winding-sheet.—Why faint you,
My title's good, and better far than his.

War. But prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be
king.

K. Hen. Henry the Fourth by conquest got
the crown.

York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.

K. Hen. I know not what to say; my title's weak. [Aside.

Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?

York. What then?

K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king;
For Richard, in the view of many lords,
Resign'd the crown to Henry the Fourth,
Whose heir my father was, and I am his.

York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,

And made him to resign his crown perforce.

War. Suppose, my lords, he did it uncon-strain'd,

Think you 'twere prejudicial to his crown?

Exe. No; for he could not so resign his crown
But that the next heir should succeed and reign.

K. Hen. Art thou against us, Duke of Exeter?

Exe. His is the right, and therefore pardon
me.

York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?

Exe. My conscience tells me he is lawful
king.

K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him. [Aside.

North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,

Think not that Henry shall be so depos'd.

War. Depos'd he shall be, in despite of all.

North. Thou art deceiv'd: 'tis not thy southern power,

Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,—

Can set the duke up in despite of me.

Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!

K. Hen. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart! [crown.—

York. Henry of Lancaster, resign thy
What matter you, or what conspire you, lords?

War. Do right unto this princely Duke of
York;

Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And o'er the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.

[He stamps, and the Soldiers show themselves.

K. Hen. My Lord of Warick, hear me but one word;—

Let me for this my life-time reign as king.

York. Confirm the crown to me and to mine heirs,

And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou liv'st.

K. Hen. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease. [son?

Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your War. What good is this to England and himself!

West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry?

Clif. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us!

West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.

North. Nor I.

Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news. [king,

West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate
In whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.

North. Be thou a prey unto the house of
York,

And die in bands, for this unmanly deed!

Clif. In dreadful war mayst thou be over-
come,

Or live in peace, abandon'd and despis'd!

[Exeunt NORTH., CLIF., and WEST.

War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not. [not yield.

Exe. They seek revenge, and therefore will
K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!

War. Why should you sigh, my lord!

K. Hen. Not for myself, Lord Warwick, but my son,

Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.

But be it as it may:—I here entail
The crown to thee and to thine heirs for ever!

Conditionally, that here thou take an oath
To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,

To honour me as thy king and sovereign,
And neither by treason nor hostility

To seek to put me down and reign thyself.

York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform. [Coming from the throne.]

War. Long live King Henry!—Plantagenet, embrace him.

K. Hen. And long live thou, and these thy forward sons!

York. Now York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Exe. Accurs'd be he that seeks to make them foes!

[Sennet. The Lords come forward.]

York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle.

War. And I'll keep London with my soldiers.

Norfolk. And I to Norfolk with my followers.

Mont. And I unto the sea, from whence I came.

[Exeunt YORK and his Sons, WAR., NORF., MONT., Soldiers, and Attendants.]

K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow to the court.

Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray her anger:

I'll steal away. [Going.]

K. Hen. Exeter, so will I. [Going.]

Enter QUEEN MARGARET and the PRINCE OF WALES.

Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me; I will follow thee. [stay.]

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will

Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremes?

Ah, wretched man! would I had died a maid, And never seen thee, never born thee son, Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnatural a father! Hath he deserv'd to lose his birthright thus? Hadst thou but lov'd him half so well as I, Or felt that pain which I did for him once, Or nourish'd him as I did with my blood,— Thou wouldest have left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather than made that savage duke thine heir, And disinherited thine only son.

Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me: If you be king, why should not I succeed?

K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet son:—

The Earl of Warwick and the duke enforc'd me.

Q. Mar. Enforc'd thee! art thou king, and wilt be forc'd? [wretch!]

I shame to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me; And given unto the house of York such head As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance. To entail him and his heirs unto the crown, What is it, but to make thy sepulchre, And creep into it far before thy time?

Warwick is chancellor and the lord of Calais; Stern Falconbridge commands the narrow seas; The duke is made protector of the realm; And yet shalt thou be safe? such safety finds The trembling lamb environed with wolves. Had I been there, which am a silly woman, The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes

Before I would have granted to that act. But thou prefer'st thy life before thine honour: And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,

Until that act of parliament be repeal'd,

Whereby my son is disinherited.

The northern lords that have forsworn thy colours

Will follow mine, if once they see them spread; And spread they shall be,—to thy foul disgrace,

And utter ruin of the house of York.

Thus do I leave thee.—Come, son, let's away; Our army is ready; come, we'll after them.

K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak.

Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already; get thee gone. [with me?]

K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay

Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.

Prince. When I return with victory from the field

I'll see your grace: till then I'll follow her.

Q. Mar. Come, son, away; we may not linger thus. [Exeunt QUEEN MARGARET and the PRINCE.]

K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me and to her son

Hath made her break out into terms of rage!

Revenge'd may she be on that hateful duke,

Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,

Will cost my crown, and like an empty eagle

Tire on the flesh of me and of my son!

The loss of those three lords torments my heart:

I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair:—

Come, cousin, you shall be the messenger.

Exe. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire.

Enter EDWARD, RICHARD, and MONTAGUE.

Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.

Edw. No, I can better play the orator.

Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter YORK.

York. Why, how now, sons and brother! at a strife?

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

Edw. No quarrel, but a slight contention.

York. About what?

Rich. About that which concerns your grace and us,—

The crown of England, father, which is yours.

York. Mine, boy? not till King Henry be dead. [death.]

Rich. Your right depends not on his life or

Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now: [breathe.]

By giving the house of Lancaster leave to

It will outrun you, father, in the end. [reign.]

York. I took an oath that he should quietly

Edw. But, for a kingdom, any oath may be broken: [year.]

I would break a thousand oaths to reign one

Rich. No; God forbid your grace should be forsworn.

York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.

Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak.

York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible.

Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took

Before a true and lawful magistrate,
That hath authority over him that swears:
Henry had none, but did usurp the place;
Then, seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,
Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.
Therefore, to arms. And, father, do but think
How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown;
Within whose circuit is Elysium,
And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.
Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest
Until the white rose that I wear be dy'd
Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart.

York. Richard, enough; I will be king, or die.—

Brother thou shalt to London presently,
And whet on Warwick to this enterprise.—
Thou, Richard, shalt to the Duke of Norfolk,
And tell him privily of our intent,—
You, Edward, shall unto my Lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise:
In them I trust; for they are soldiers,
Witty, courteous, liberal, full of spirit.—
While you are thus employ'd, what resteth
more,
But that I seek occasion how to rise,
And yet the king not privy to my drift,
Nor any of the house of Lancaster?

Enter a Messenger.

But, stay: what news? Why com'st thou in such post? [and lords]

Mess. The queen with all the northern earls
Intend here to besiege you in your castle:
She is hard by with twenty thousand men;
And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.

York. Ay, with my sword. What! think'st thou that we fear them?—

Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me;—
My brother Montague shall post to London:
Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we have left protectors of the king,
With powerful policy strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry nor his oaths.

Mont. Brother, I go; I'll win them, fear it not:

And thus most humbly I do take my leave. [Exit.]

Enter SIR JOHN and SIR HUGH MORTIMER.

York. Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles!

You are come to Sandal in a happy hour;
The army of the queen mean to besiege us.

Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the field.

York. What, with five thousand men?

Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need:

A woman's general; what should we fear?
[A march afar off.]

Edw. I hear their drums: let's set our men in order,

And issue forth, and bid them battle straight.

York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be great,

I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.
Many a battle have I won in France,

Whenas the enemy hath been ten to one:
Why should I not now have the like success?
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Plains near Sandal Castle.

Alarum. Enter RUTLAND and his Tutor.

Rut. Ah, whither shall I fly to 'scape their hands?

Ah, tutor, look where bloody Clifford comes!

Enter CLIFFORD and Soldiers.

Clif. Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life.

As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father,—he shall die.

Tut. And I, my lord, will bear him company.

Clif. Soldiers, away with him! [child,]

Tut. Ah, Clifford, murder not this innocent
Lest thou be hated both of God and man.

[Exit, forced off by Soldiers.]

Clif. How now! is he dead already? or is it fear

That makes him close his eyes?—I'll open them.

Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch

That trembles under his devouring paws;
And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey,

And so he comes, to rend his limbs asunder.—
Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword,

And not with such a cruel threat'ning look!
Sweet Clifford, hear me speak before I die!—

I am too mean a subject for thy wrath:
Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.

Clif. In vain thou speak'st, poor boy; my father's blood [enter.]

Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should
Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again:

He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.

Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives and thine

Were not revenge sufficient for me;
No, if I digg'd up thy forefather's graves,

And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire nor ease my heart.

The sight of any of the house of York
Is as a fury to torment my soul;

And till I root out their accursed line
And leave not one alive, I live in hell.

Therefore,— [Lifting his hand.]

Rut. O let me pray before I take my death!
To thee I pray; sweet Clifford, pity me!

Clif. Such pity as my rapier's point affords.
Rut. I never did thee harm: why wilt thou slay me?

Clif. Thy father hath.
Rut. But 'twas ere I was born.

Thou hast one son,—for his sake pity me;
Lest in revenge thereof,—sith God is just,—

He be as miserably slain as I.
Ah, let me live in prison all my days;

And when I give occasion of offence
Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.

Clif. No cause!
Thy father slew my father; therefore, die.

[CLIFFORD stabs him.]

Rut. Dii faciant, laudis summa sit ista tuæ!
[Dies.]

Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet!
And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade
Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood,
Congeal'd with this, do make me wipe off both.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Plains near Sandal Castle.

Alarum. Enter YORK.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field:
My uncles both are slain in rescuing me;
And all my followers to the eager foe
Turn back, and fly, like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hunger-starved wolves.
My sons,—God knows what hath bechanced them.
But this I know,—they have demean'd them—
Like men born to renown by life or death.
Three times did Richard make a lane to me;
And thrice cried, Courage, father! fight it out!
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With purple falchion, painted to the hilt
In blood of those that had encounter'd him:
And when the hardest warriors did retire,
Richard cried, Charge! and give no foot of ground!

And cried, A crown, or else a glorious tomb!
A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!
With this we charg'd again: but, out, alas!
We bodg'd again; as I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.
[A short alarum within.]
Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue;
And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury:
And were I strong, I would not shun their fury:
The sands are number'd that make up my life;
Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERLAND, and Soldiers.

Come, bloody Clifford.—rough Northumberland,—

I dare your quenchless fury to more rage:
I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clif. Ay, to such mercy as his ruthless arm,
With downright payment, show'd unto my father.

Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noontide prick.

York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth

A bird that will revenge upon you all:
And in that hope I throw mine eyes to heaven,
Scorning whate'er you can afflict me with.

Why come you not? what! multitudes, and fear?
Clif. So cowards fight when they can fly no further;

So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons;
So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers.

York. O Clifford, but bethink thee once again,

And in thy thought o'errun my former time;
And, if thou canst, for blushing, view this face,

And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice

Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word,

But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one.

[Draws.]

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes

I would prolong awhile the traitor's life.—

Wrath makes him deaf:—speak thou, Northumberland.

North. Hold, Clifford! do not honour him so

To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart:

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,

For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,

When he might spurn him with his foot away?

It is war's prize to take all 'vantages;

And ten to one is no impeachment of valour.

[They lay hands on YORK, who struggles.]

Clif. Ay, ay, so strives the woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the cony struggle in the net.

[YORK is taken prisoner.]

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty;

So true men yield, with robbers so o'ermatch'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

[thumberland.]

Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and North—
Come, make him stand upon this molehill here,
That taught at mountains with outstretched arms,

Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.—

What, was it you that would be England's king?

Was't you that revell'd in our parliament,

And made a preaching of your high descent?

Where are your mess of sons to back you now?

The wanton Edward and the lusty George?

And where's that valiant crook-back prodigy,

Dicky your boy, that with his grumbling voice

Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?

Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?

Look, York: I stain'd this napkin with the blood

That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point,

Made issue from the bosom of the boy;

And if thine eyes can water for his death,

I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.

Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,

I should lament thy miserable state.

I pry'thee, grieve, to make me merry, York.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails

That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?

Why art thou patient, man? thou shouldst be mad;

And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.

Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.

Thou wouldst be fce'd, I see, to make me sport;

York cannot speak unless he wear a crown.—

A crown for York!—and, lords, bow low to him;—

Hold you his hands whilst I do set it on.

[Putting a paper crown on his head.]

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!

Ay, this is he that took King Henry's chair;

And this is he was his adopted heir.—

But how is it that great Plantagenet

Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?
As I bethink me, you should not be king Till our King Henry had shook hands with death.

And will you pale your head in Henry's glory,
And rob his temples of the diadem
Now in his life, against your holy oath!
O, 'tis a fault too, too unpardonable!—
Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his
head;

And whilst we breathe take time to do him
Cliff. That is my office, for my father's sake.
Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he makes.

York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France,

Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's
How ill-seeming is it in thy sex
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull,
Upon their woes whom fortune captivates!
But that thy face is, visard-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would assay, proud queen, to make thee blush:
To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,

Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils, and Jerusalem:
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?
It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen;
Unless the adage must be verified,—

That beggars mounted run their horse to death.
'Tis beauty that doth oft make women proud;
But, God he knows, thy share thereof is small:
'Tis virtue that doth make them most admir'd;
The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at:
'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable:
Thou art as opposite to every good
As the antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septentrion.
O tiger's heart wrapp'd in a woman's hide!
How couldst thou drain the life-blood of the child,

To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible:
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.

Bidd'st thou me rage? why, now thou hast thy wish:

Wouldst have me weep? why, now thou hast thy [will:
For raging wind blows up incessant showers,
And when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies;
And every drop cries vengeance for his death
'Gainst thee, fell Clifford, and thee, false French-
woman.

North. Beshrew me, but his passions move
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.

York. That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood:

But thou are more inhuman, more inexorable,—
O, ten times more,—than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thou dipp'dst in blood of my sweet
boy,

And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this:

[He gives back the handkerchief.]

And if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say, Alas, it was a piteous deed!—

There, take the crown, and, with the crown, my curse; [Giving back the paper crown.]

And in thy need such comfort come to thee
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!—

Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world:
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!

North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,

I should not for my life but weep with him,
To see how inly sorrow gripes his soul.

Q. Mar. What, weeping-ripe, my Lord
Northumberland?

Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.

Cliff. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's death. [Stabbing him.]

Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king. [Stabbing him.]

York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee. [Dies.]

Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gates;

So York may overlook the town of York.
[Flourish. Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A plain near Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire.

Drums. Enter EDWARD and RICHARD, with their Forces, marching.

Edw. I wonder how our princely father
'scap'd,

Or whether he be 'scap'd away or no
From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit:
Had he been ta'en we should have heard the news; [news;
Had he been slain we should have heard the
Or had he 'scap'd, methinks we should have heard

The happy tidings of his good escape.—
How fares my brother? why is he so sad?

Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become.

I saw him in the battle range about;
And watch'd him how he singled Clifford forth.

Methought he bore him in the thickest troop
As doth a lion in a herd of neat;

Or as a bear, encompass'd round with dogs,—
Who having pinch'd a few, and made them cry,

The rest stand all aloof and bark at him.
So far'd our father with his enemies;

So fled his enemies my warlike father:
Methinks 'tis prize enough to be his son.—

See how the morning ope's her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun!

How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a younker prancing to his love!

Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?

Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect
sun;

Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.
See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable:
Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun.
In this the heaven figures some event.

Edw. 'Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never heard of.

I think it cites us, brother, to the field,—
That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our meeds,
Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together,

And overshine the earth, as this the world.
Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns.

Rich. Nay, bear three daughters:—by your leave I speak it,
You love the breeder better than the male.

Enter a Messenger.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Mess. Ah, one that was a woeful looker-on Whenas the noble Duke of York was slain,
Your princely father and my loving lord!

Edw. O, speak no more! for I have heard too much.

Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it all.

Mess. Environed he was with many foes;
And stood against them as the hope of Troy
Against the Greeks that would have enter'd
Troy.

But Hercules himself must yield to odds;
And many strokes, though with a little axe,
Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford, and the queen,—
Who crown'd the gracious duke in high despite,—

Laugh'd in his face; and when with grief he
The ruthless queen gave him to dry his cheeks
A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slain:

And after many scorns, many foul taunts,
They took his head, and on the gates of York
They set the same; and there it doth remain,
The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.

Edw. Sweet Duke of York, our prop to lean upon,—

Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay!—
O Clifford, boisterous Clifford, thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry;
And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,
For hand to hand he would have vanquish'd
thee!

Now my soul's palace is become a prison:
Ah, would she break from hence, that this my body

Might in the ground be closed up in rest!
For never henceforth shall I joy again,
Never, O never shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep; for all my body's moisture

Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burden;

For self-same wind that I should speak withal
Is kindling coals, that fire all my breast,
And burn me up with flames, that tears would quench.

To weep is to make less the depth of grief:
Tears, then, for babes; blows and revenge for
me!

Richard, I bear thy name; I'll vengeance thy death,
Or die renowned by attempting it.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left
with thee;

His dukedom and his chair with me is left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,

Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun:
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom
say:

Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter WARWICK and MONTAGUE with Forces.

War. How now, fair lords! What fare?
what news abroad? [recount]

Rich. Great Lord of Warwick, if we should Our baleful news, and at each word's deliverance

Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,
The words would add more anguish than the wounds.

O valiant lord, the Duke of York is slain!

Edw. O Warwick, Warwick! that Plantagenet

Which held thee dearly as his soul's redemption

Is by the stern Lord Clifford done to death.

War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news in tears;

And now, to add more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things since then befall'n.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,
Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,

Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run,
Were brought me of your loss and his depart.
I, then in London, keeper of the king,
Must'rd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends.
And very well appointed, as I thought,
March'd towards Saint Albans to intercept the
queen,

Bearing the king in my behalf along;
For by my scouts I was advis'd
That she was coming with a full intent
To dash our late decree in parliament
Touching King Henry's oath and your succession.

Short tale to make,—we at St. Albans met,
Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely
fought:

But whether 'twas the coldness of the king,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen,
That robb'd my soldiers of their heated spleen;
Or whether 'twas report of her success;
Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigour,
Who thunders to his captives, Blood and death,
I cannot judge: but, to conclude with truth,
Their weapons like to lightning came and went;

Our soldiers,—like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,—

Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.
I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause,
With promise of high pay and great rewards:
But all in vain; they had no heart to fight,
And we in them no hope to win the day;
So that we fled; the king unto the queen;
Lord George, your brother, Norfolk, and myself,

In haste, post-haste, are come to join with you;
For in the marches here we heard you were Making another head to fight again.

Edw. Where is the Duke of Norfolk, gentle
Warwick? [land?

And when came George from Burgundy to Eng-War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers;

And for your brother, he was lately sent
From your kind aunt, Duchess of Burgundy,
With aid of soldiers to this needful war.

Rich. 'Twas odds, belike, when valiant Warwick fled:

Off have I heard his praises in pursuit,
But ne'er till now his scandal of retire.

War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou hear; [mine

For thou shalt know this strong right hand of
Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,
And wring the awful sceptre from his fist,
Were he as famous and as bold in war
As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.

Rich. I know it well, Lord Warwick; blame me not:

'Tis love I bear thy glories makes me speak.
But in this troublous time what's to be done?
Shall we go throw away our coats of steel,
And wrap our bodies in black mourning-gowns,
Numbering our Ave-Maries with our beads?
Or shall we on the helmets of our foes
Tell our devotion with revengeful arms?
If for the last, say Ay, and to it, lords.

War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you out;

And therefore comes my brother Montague.
Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,
With Clifford and the haught Northumberland,
And of their feather many more proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.
He swore consent to your succession,
His oath enrolled in the parliament;
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his oath and what beside
May make against the house of Lancaster.
Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong:
Now if the help of Norfolk and myself,
With all the friends that thou, brave Earl of March,

Amongst the loving Welshmen canst procure,
Will but amount to five-and-twenty thousand,
Why, Via! to London will we march again;
And once again bestride our foaming steeds,
And once again cry, Charge upon our foes!
But never once again turn back and fly.

Rich. Ay, now methinks I hear great Warwick speak:

Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day
That cries Retire, if Warwick bid him stay.

Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean; [hour!—

And when thou fail'st,—as God forbid the
Must Edward fall, which peril heaven foretend!

War. No longer Earl of March, but Duke of York:

The next degree is England's royal throne;
For King of England shalt thou be proclaim'd
In every borough as we pass along;
And he that throws not up his cap for joy,
Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—
Stay we no longer, dreaming of renown,
But sound the trumpets and about our task.

Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel,—

As thou hast shown it flinty by thy deeds,—
I come to pierce it,—or to give thee mine.

Edw. Then strike up drums:—God and Saint
George for us!

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now! what news?

Mess. The Duke of Norfolk sends you word
by me,

The queen is coming with a puissant host;
And craves your company for speedy counsel.

War. Why, then it sorts, brave warriors:
let's away. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before York.

Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MAR-GARET, the PRINCE OF WALES, CLIFFORD, and NORTHUMBERLAND, with Forces.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Yonder's the head of that arch-enemy
That sought to be encompass'd with your crown:
Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord?

K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their wreck:—

To see this sight, it irks my very soul.—
Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly have I infrin'd my vow.

Chf. My gracious liege, this too much lenity
And harmful pity must be laid aside.
To whom do lions cast their gentle looks?
Not to the beast that would usurp their den.
Whose hand is that the forest bear doth lick?
Not his that spoils her young before her face.
Who scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting?
Not he that sets his foot upon her back.
The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on,
And doves will peck in safeguard of their brood.
Ambitious York did level at thy crown,
Thou smiling while he knit his angry brows:
He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
And raise his issue, like a loving sire;
Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son,
Didst yield consent to disinherit him,
Which argu'd thee a most unloving father.
Unreasonable creatures feed their young;
And though man's face be fearful to their eyes,
Yet, in protection of their tender ones,
Who hath not seen them,—even with those
wings

Which sometime they have us'd with fearful flight,— [nest,

Make war with him that climb'd unto their Offering their own lives in their young's defence?

For shame, my liege, make them your precedent!

Were it not pity that this goodly boy
Should lose his birthright by his father's fault,
And long hereafter say unto his child,
What my great-grandfather and grandsire got
My careless father fondly gave away?
Ah, what a shame were this! Look on the boy;
And let his manly face, which promiseth
Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart
To hold thine own, and leave thine own with
him.

K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the Infering arguments of mighty force.

But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear
That things ill got had ever had success?
And happy always was it for that son
Whose father for his hoarding went to hell?
I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind;
And would my father had left me no more!
For all the rest is held at such a rate
As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep
Than in possession any jot of pleasure.—
Ah, cousin York! would thy best friends did know

How it doth grieve me that thy head is here!

Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits: our foes are nigh,

And this soft courage makes your followers faint.

You promis'd knighthood to our forward son:
Unsheathe your sword, and dub him presently.—
Edward, kneel down.

K. Edw. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;
And learn this lesson,—draw thy sword in right.

Prince. My gracious father, by your kingly
leave,

I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,
And in that quarrel use it to the death.

Clif. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness:
For with a band of thirty thousand men
Comes Warwick, backing of the Duke of York;
And in the towns, as they do march along,
Proclaims him king, and many fly to him:
Darraign your battle, for they are at hand.

Clif. I would your highness would depart the field:

The queen hath best success when you are Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortune.

K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore I'll stay.

North. Be it with resolution, then, to fight.
Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble
lords,

And hearten those that fight in your defence:
Unsheathe your sword, good father; cry, Saint George!

March. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD
WARWICK, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now, perjur'd Henry! wilt thou kneel for grace,
And set thy diadem upon my head;
Or bide the mortal fortune of the field?

Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy!

Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms

Before thy sovereign and thy lawful king?

Edw. I am his king, and he should bow his knee;

I was adopted heir by his consent:
Since when, his oath is broke; for, as I hear,
You, that are king, though he do wear the
crown,

Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me and put his own son in.

Clif. And reason too:

Who should succeed the father but the son?

Rich. Are you there, butcher!—O, I cannot speak! [thee,

Clif. Ay, crook-back, here I stand to answer
Or any he the proudest of thy sort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd young Rutland, was it not?

Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.
Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight.

War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield
Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongu'd Warwick! dare you speak?

When you and I met at Saint Albans last,
Your legs did better service than your hands.

War. Then 'twas my turn to fly, and now
'tis thine. [fled.

Clif. You said so much before, and yet you War. 'Twas not your valour, Clifford, drove me thence. [you stay.

North. No, nor your manhood that durst make Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently.—

Break off the parley; for scarce I can refrain
The execution of my big-sworn heart

Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.

Clif. I slew thy father,—call'st thou him a child? [coward,

Rich. Ay, like a dastard and a treacherous
As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland;
But ere sunset I'll make thee curse the deed.

K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak. [thy lips.

Q. Mar. Defy them, then, or else hold close

K. Hen. I prythee give no limits to my
tongue:

I am a king, and privileg'd to speak.

Clif. My liege, the wound that bred this meeting here

Cannot be cur'd by words; therefore be still.

Rich. Then, executioner, unsheathe thy sword:

By him that made us all, I am resolv'd
That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.

Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have my right, or no?

A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day
That ne'er shall dine unless thou yield the crown. [head;

War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy
For York in justice puts his armour on.

Prince. If that be right which Warwick says is right,

There is no wrong, but everything is right.

Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother
stands;

For, well I wot, thou hast thy mother's tongue.

Q. Mar. But thou art neither like thy sire nor dam;

But like a foul misshapen stigmatic,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
As venom toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.

Rich. Iron of Naples hid with English gilt,
Whose father bears the title of a king,—
As if a channel should be call'd the sea,— Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art
extraught,

To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?

Edw. A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns,

To make this shameless callet know herself.—
Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,
Although thy husband may be Menelaus;
And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd
By that false woman as this king by thee.
His father rell'd in the heart of France,
And tam'd the king, and made the dauphin
stoop;

And had he match'd according to his state,
He might have kept that glory to this day;
But when he took a beggar to his bed,
And grac'd thy poor sire with his bridal-day,
Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for
him

[France,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home.
For what hath broach'd this tumult but thy pride?

Hadst thou been meek, our title still had slept;
And we, in pity of the gentle king,
Had shipp'd our claim until another age.

Geo. But when we saw our sunshine made thy spring,

And that thy summer bred us no increase,
We set the axe to thy usurping root; [selves,
And through the edge hath something hit our—
Yet, know thou, since we have begun to strike,
We'll never leave till we have hewn thee down,
Or bath'd thy growing with our heated bloods.

Edw. And in this resolution I defy thee;
Not willing any longer conference,
Since thou deniest the gentle king to speak.—
Sound trumpets!—let our bloody colours wave!—

And either victory or else a grave.

Q. Mar. Stay, Edward.

Edw. No, wrangling woman, we'll no longer
stay:

These words will cost ten thousand lives this day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle between Towton and Saxton, in Yorkshire.

Alarums: excursions. Enter WARWICK.

War. Forspent with toil, as runners with a race,

I lay me down a little while to breathe;
For strokes receiv'd and many blows repaid
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,

And, spite of spite, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter EDWARD, running.

Edw. Smile, gentle heaven! or strike, un-gentle death!

For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.

War. How now, my lord! what hap? what hope of good?

Enter GEORGE.

Geo. Our hap is loss, our hope but sad despair;
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us:

What counsel give you, whither shall we fly?

Edw. Bootless is flight,—they follow us with wings;

And weak we are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter RICHARD.

Rich. Ah, Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn thyself?

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,

Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance;

And in the very pangs of death he cried,
Like to a dismal clangor heard from far,
Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!
So, underneath the belly of his steeds,
That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.

War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:

I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
Wailing our losses, whiles the foe doth rage;
And look upon, as if the tragedy

Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors?
Here on my knee I vow to God above
I'll never pause again, never stand still,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine
Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Edw. O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine;

And in this vow do chain my soul to thine!—
And ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou setter-up and plucker-down of kungs,— Beseeching thee, if with thy will it stands
That to my foes this body must be prey,
Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
And give sweet passage to my sinful soul!—
Now, lords, take leave until we meet again,
Where'er it be, in heaven or in earth.

Rich. Brother, give me thy hand;—and,
gentle Warwick,

Let me embrace thee in my weary arms:
I, that did never weep, now melt with woe
That winter should cut off our spring-time so.

War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords,
farewell.

Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops,
And give them leave to fly that will not stay;
And call them pillars that will stand to us;
And if we thrive, promise them such rewards
As victors wear at the Olympian games:
This may plant courage in their quailing breasts;
For yet is hope of life and victory.—
Forslow no longer, make we hence again.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Excursions. Enter RICHARD and CLIFFORD.

Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee
alone:

Suppose this arm is for the Duke of York,
And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,
Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.

Clif. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:

This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York;
And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;

And here's the heart that triumphs in their death,

And cheers these hands that slew thy sire and brother

To execute the like upon thyself;

And so, have at thee!

(They fight. WAR. enters; CLIF. flies.)

Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase;

For I myself will hunt this wolf to death.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter KING HENRY.

K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning's war,

When dying clouds contend with growing light,
What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
Can neither call it perfect day nor night.

Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea
Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind;
Now sways it that way, like the selfsame sea
Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind:

Sometime the flood prevails, and then the wind;
Now one the better, then another best;

Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror nor conquered:

So is the equal poise of this fell war.
Here on this molehill will I sit me down.

To whom God will, there be the victory!
For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,

Have chid me from the battle; swearing both
They prosper best of all when I am thence.

Would I were dead! if God's good will were so;
For what is in this world but grief and woe?

O God! methinks it were a happy life
To be no better than a homely swain;

To sit upon a hill, as I do now,
To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,

Thereby to see the minutes how they run,—
How many make the hour full complete;

How many hours bring about the day;
How many days will finish up the year;

How many years a mortal man may live.
When this is known, then to divide the times,—

So many hours must I tend my flock;
So many hours must I take my rest;

So many hours must I contemplate;
So many hours must I sport myself;

So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will yeau;

So many years ere I shall shear the fleece:
So minutes, hours, days, months, and years,

Pass'd over to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.

Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely!

Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade
To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep,

Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy
To kings that fear subjects' treachery?

O, yes, it doth; a thousand-fold it doth.
And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds,

His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade,

All which secure and sweetly he enjoys,
Is far beyond a prince's delicacies,

His vands sparkling in a golden cup,
His body couched in a curious bed,

When care, mistrust, and treason wait on him.

Alarum. Enter a Son that has killed his Father, bringing in the dead body.

Son. Ill blows the wind that profits nobody,
This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight.

May be possessed with some store of crowns;
And I, that haply take them from him now,

May yet ere night yield both my life and them
To some man else, as this dead man doth me.—

Who's this?—O God! it is my father's face,
Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd.

O heavy times, begetting such events!
From London by the king was I press'd forth:

My father, being the Earl of Warwick's man,
Came on the part of York, press'd by his master;

And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life,
Have by my hands of life bereaved him.—

Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did!—
And pardon, father, for I knew not thee!—

My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks;
And no more words till they have flow'd their fill.

K. Hen. O piteous spectacle! O bloody times!
Whilst lions war, and battle for their dens,

Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity.—
Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee tear for tear;

And let our hearts and eyes, like civil war,
Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grief.

Enter a Father that has killed his Son, with the body in his arms.

Fath. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;

For I have bought it with an hundred blows.—
But let me see: is this our foeman's face?

Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son!
Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee, [arise,

Throw up thine eye! see, see what showers
Blown with the windy tempest of my heart,

Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!—

O pity, God, this miserable age!—
What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,

Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural,
This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!—

O boy, thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late!

K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than common grief! [deeds!—

O that my death would stay these ruthless
O pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!—

The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses:

The one his purple blood right well resembles;
The other his pale cheeks, methinks, presenteth:

Wither one rose, and let the other flourish;
If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.

Son. How will my mother for a father's death
Take on with me, and ne'er be satisfied! [son Fath. How will my wife for slaughter of my Shed seas of tears, and ne'er be satisfied!

K. Hen. How will the country for these woeful chances

Misthink the king, and not be satisfied!

Son. Was ever son so rued a father's death?

Fath. Was ever father so bemoan'd his son?

K. Hen. Was ever king so griev'd for subjects' woe?

Much is your sorrow; mine ten times so much.

Son. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill. [Exit with the body.

Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet;

My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,—
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go;

My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;

And so obsequious will thy father be,

E'en for the loss of thee, having no more,

As Priam was for all his valiant sons. [will,

I'll bear thee hence; and let them fight that

For I have murder'd where I should not kill.

[Exit with the body.

K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overgone with care,

Hence sits a king more woeful than you are.

Alarums: excursions. Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE OF WALES, and EXETER.

Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,

And Warwick rages like a chafed bull:

Away! for death hold us in pursuit.

O. Mar. Mount you, my lord; towards Berwick post again:

Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds

Having the fearful flying hare in sight,

With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,

And bloody steel grasp'd in their reful hands,

Are at our backs; and therefore hence amain.

Exe. Away! for vengeance comes along with them:

Nay, stay not to expostulate,—make speed;

Or else come after: I'll away before.

K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exeter:

Not that I fear to stay, but love to go

Whither the queen intends. Forward; away! [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another part of the Field.

A loud Alarum. Enter CLIFFORD, wounded.

Clif. Here burns my candle out,—ay, here it dies,

Which, whiles it lasted, gave King Henry light.

O Lancaster, I fear thy overthrow

More than my body's parting with my soul!

My love and fear gliv'd many friends to thee;

And, now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt.

Impairing Henry, strengthening misprudent York,

The common people swarm like summer flies;

And whither fly the gnats but to the sun?

And who shines now but Henry's enemies?

O Phoebus, hadst thou never given consent

That Phaeton should check thy fiery steeds,
Thy burning car never had scorched the earth!
And, Henry, hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,

Or as thy father and his father did,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies;
I and ten thousand in this luckless realm

Had left no mourning widows for our death;

And thou this day hadst kept thy chair in peace.

For what doth cherish weeds but gentle air?

And what makes robbers bold but too much lenity? [wounds;]

Bootless are complaints, and cureless are my

No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:

The foe is merciless, and will not pity;

For at their hands I have deserv'd no pity.

The air hath got into my deadly wounds,

And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.

Come, York and Richard, Warwick and the rest;

I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms,—split my breast. [He faints.

Alarum and retreat. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD, MONTAGUE, WARWICK, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now breathe we, lords: good fortune bids us pause, [looks.—]

And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful

Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen,

That led calm Henry, though he were a king,

As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,

Command an argosy to stem the waves.

But think you, lords, that Clifford fled with
them?

War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape;

For, though before his face I speak the words,

Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave:

And, whereso'er he is, he's surely dead.

[CLIFFORD groans, and dies.

Edw. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave? [departing.]

Rich. A deadly groan, like life and death's

Edw. See who it is; and, now the battle's ended,

If friend or foe, let him be gently us'd.

Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford;

Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch

In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,

But set his murdering knife unto the root

From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,—

I mean pur princely father, Duke of York.

War. From off the gates of York fetch down
the head,

Your father's head, which Clifford placed there:

Instead whereof let this supply the room:

Measure for measure must be answered.

Edw. Bring forth that fatal screech-owl to our house,

That nothing sung but death to us and ours:

Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,

And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.

[Soldiers bring the body forward.

War. I think his understanding is bereft.—

Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to
thee?—

Dark cloudy death o'ershades his beams of life,
And he nor sees nor hears us what we say.

Rich. O, would he did! and so, perhaps, he doth:

'Tis but his policy to counterfeit,
Because he would avoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gave our father.

Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.

Rich. Clifford, ask mercy and obtain no grace.

Edw. Clifford, repent in bootless penitence.

War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.

Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults. [York.]

Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to

Edw. Thou pitiedst Rutland, I will pity thee.

Geo. Where's Captain Margaret, to fence you now?

War. They mock thee, Clifford: swear as thou wast wont. [goes hard]

Rich. What, not an oath? nay, then the world
When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath.—

I know by that he's dead; and, by my soul,
If this right hand would buy two hours' life,
That I in all despite might rail at him,
Thus hand should chop it off, and with the issuing blood

Stifle the villain whose unstaunched thirst
York and young Rutland could not satisfy.

War. Ay, but he's dead: off with the traitor's head,

And rear it in the place your father's stands.—
And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned England's royal king.
From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to
France,

And ask the Lady Bona for thy queen:
So shalt thou sinew both these lands together;
And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread

The scatter'd foe that hopes to rise again;
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet look to have them buzz to offend thine ears.
First will I see the coronation;
And then to Brittany I'll cross the sea,

To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.

Edw. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be;

For in thy shoulder do I build my seat,
And never will I undertake the thing
Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.—
Richard, I will create thee Duke of Gloster;
—And George, of Clarence;—Warwick, as ourself,

Shall do and undo as him pleaseth best.

Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence, George of Gloster;

For Gloster's dukedom is too ominous.

War. Tut, that's a foolish observation:

Richard, be Duke of Gloster. Now to London,
To see these honours in possession. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Chase in the North of England.

Enter two Keepers, with cross-bows in their hands.

1 Keep. Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves;

For through this laund anon the deer will come;
And in this covert will we make our stand,
Culling the principal of all the deer. [shoot.]

2 Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may

1 Keep. That cannot be, the noise of thy cross-bow

Will scare the herd, and so my shot is lost.
Here stand we both, and aim we at the best:
And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befell me on a day

In this self-place where now we mean to stand.

2 Keep. Here comes a man, let's stay till he be past.

Enter KING HENRY, disguised, with a prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,

To greet mine own land with my wishful sight.

No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine;

Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee,

Thy balm wash'd off wherewith thou wast anointed:

No bending knee will call thee Cæsar now,

No humble suitors press to speak for right,

No, not a man comes for redress of thee;

For how can I help them, and not myself?

1 Keep. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's fee.

This is the quondam kang; let's seize upon him.

K. Hen. Let me embrace these sour adversities:

For wise men say it is the wisest course.

2 Keep. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon him. [more.]

1 Keep. Forbear awhile; we'll hear a little

K. Hen. My queen and son are gone to France for aid;

And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick

Is thither gone, to crave the French king's sister

To wife for Edward: if this news be true,

Poor queen and son, your labour is but lost;

For Warwick is a subtle orator,

And Louis a prince soon won with moving words.

By this account, then, Margaret may win him;

For she's a woman to be pitied much:

Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;

Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;

The tiger will be mild while she doth mourn;

And Nero will be tainted with remorse,

To hear and see her plaints, her brinish tears.

Ay, but she's come to beg, Warwick, to give:

She, on his left side, craving aid for Henry;

He, on his right, asking a wife for Edward.

She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;

He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;

That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more; [wrong,

Whiles Warwick tells his title, smooths the Inferreth arguments of mighty strength,

And in conclusion wins the king from her,

With promise of his sister, and what else,

To strengthen and support King Edward's

place.

O Margaret, thus 'twill be; and thou, poor soul,

Art then forsaken, as thou wast forlorn!

2 Keep. Say, what art thou, that talk'st of kings and queens?

K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was born to:

A man at least, for less I should not be;
And men may talk of kings, and why not I?

2 Keep. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king. [enough.]

K. Hen. Why, so I am—in mind; and that's

2 Keep. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crown? [head;]

K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my
Not deck'd with diamonds and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen: my crown is call'd content,—
A crown it is that seldom kings enjoy.

2 Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with content,

Your crown content and you must be contented
To go along with us; for, as we think,
You are the king King Edward hath depos'd;
And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,
Will apprehend you as his enemy.

K. Hen. But did you never swear, and break an oath? [now.]

2 Keep. No, never such an oath; nor will not

K. Hen. Where did you dwell when I was King of England? [remain.]

2 Keep. Here in this country, where we now

K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old;

My father and my grandfather were kings;
And you were sworn true subjects unto me:
And tell me, then, have you not broke your oaths?

1 Keep. No;

For we were subjects but while you were king.

K. Hen. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe a man?

Ah, simple men, you know not what you swear!
Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greater gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men.
But do not break your oaths; for of that sin
My mild entreaty shall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the king shall be commanded;

And be you kings; command, and I'll obey.

1 Keep. We are true subjects to the king, King Edward.

K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry,
If he were seated as King Edward is.

1 Keep. We charge you, in God's name and in the king's,

To go with us unto the officers.

K. Hen. In God's name, lead; your king's name be obey'd:

And what God will, that let your king perform;
And what he will, I humbly yield unto. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, CLARENCE, and LADY GREY.

K. Edw. Brother of Gloster, at Saint Albans' field

This lady's husband, Sir John Grey, was slain,
His lands then seiz'd on by the conqueror:
Her suit is now to repossess those lands;

Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because in quarrel of the house of York
The worthy gentleman did lose his life. [suit;]

Glo. Your highness shall do well to grant her
It were dishonour to deny it her. [a pause.]

K. Edw. It were no less; but yet I'll make
Glo. Yea, is it so?

I see the lady hath a thing to grant,
Before the king will grant her humble suit.

[Aside to CLARENCE.]
Clar. He knows the game: how true he keeps the wind! [Aside to GLOSTER.]

Glo. Silence! [Aside to CLARENCE.]

K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit;

And come some other time to know our mind.

L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:

May it please your highness to resolve me now;
And what your pleasure is shall satisfy me.

Glo. Ay, widow? then I warrant you all your lands,

As if what pleases him shall pleasure you.

Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow. [Aside.]

Clar. I fear her not, unless she chance to fall.

[Aside to GLOSTER.]
Glo. God forbid that! for he'll take vantages.

[Aside to CLARENCE.]

K. Edw. How many children hast thou, widow? tell me.

Clar. I think he means to beg a child of her. [Aside to GLOSTER.]

Glo. Nay, whip me, then; he'll rather give her two. [Aside to CLARENCE.]

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glo. You shall have four if you'll be ruled by him. [Aside.]

K. Edw. 'Twere pity they should lose their father's lands. [then.]

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it,
K. Edw. Lords, give us leave: I'll try this widow's wit. [have leave.]

Glo. Ay, good leave have you; for you will Till youth take leave, and leave you to the crutch.

[Aside, and retires with CLARENCE.]

K. Edw. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?

L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edw. And would you not do much to do them good? [some harm.]

L. Grey. To do them good I would sustain

K. Edw. Then get your husband's lands, to do them good.

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.

K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got. [ness' service.]

L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your high-

K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me if I give them? [to do.]

L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me

K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon. [do it.]

L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot

K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to ask. [commands.]

L. Grey. Why, then, I will do what your grace

Glo. He plies her hard; and much rain wears the marble. [Aside to CLARENCE.]

Clar. As red as fire! nay, then her wax must melt. [Aside to GLOSTER.]
L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?
K. Edw. An easy task; 'tis but to love a king.
L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject.
K. Edw. Why, then, thy husband's lands I freely give thee. [thanks.]
L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand
Glo. The match is made; she seals it with a curtsy. [Aside.]
K. Edw. But stay thee,—'tis the fruits of love I mean. [liege.]
L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving
K. Edw. Ay, but, I fear me, in another sense.
What love, thinkst thou, I sue so much to get?
L. Grey. My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
That love which virtue begs and virtue grants.
K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.
L. Grey. Why, then, you mean not as I thought you did. [my mind.]
K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive
L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive
Your highness aims at, if I aim aright. [thee.]
K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I am to lie with
L. Grey. To tell you plain, I had rather lie in prison.
K. Edw. Why, then, thou shalt not have thy husband's lands. [my dower;]
L. Grey. Why, then, mine honesty shall be For by that loss I will not purchase them.
K. Edw. Therein thou wrong'st thy children mightily.
L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both them and me.
But, mighty lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the sadness of my suit:
Please you dismiss me, either with ay or no.
K. Edw. Ay, if thou wilt say ay to my request;
No, if thou dost say no to my demand.
L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.
Glo. The widow likes him not, she knits her brows. [Aside to CLARENCE.]
Clar. He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom. [Aside to GLOSTER.]
K. Edw. Her looks do argue her replete with modesty;
Her words do show her wit incomparable;
All her perfections challenge sovereignty:
One way or other, she is for a king;
And she shall be my love, or else my queen.— [Aside.]
Say that King Edward take thee for his queen?
L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious lord.
I am a subject fit to jest withal,
But far unfit to be a sovereign.
K. Edw. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee
I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that is to enjoy thee for my love.
L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto:
I know I am too mean to be your queen,
And yet too good to be your concubine.

K. Edw. You cavil, widow: I did mean my queen.
L. Grey. 'Twill grieve your grace my sons should call you father.
K. Edw. No more than when my daughters call thee mother.
Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children;
And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor,
Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing
To be the father unto many sons.
Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.
Glo. The ghostly father now hath done his shrift. [Aside to CLARENCE.]
Clar. When he was made a shriver, 'twas for shift. [Aside to GLOSTER.]
K. Edw. Brothers, you muse what chat we two have had. [very sad.]
Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks
K. Edw. You'd think it strange if I should marry her.
Clar. To whom, my lord?
K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself.
Glo. That would be ten days' wonder at the least.
Clar. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
Glo. By so much is the wonder in extremes.
K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you both
Her suit is granted for her husband's lands.

Enter a Nobleman.

Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken,
And brought your prisoner to your palace gate.
K. Edw. See that he be convey'd unto the Tower:—
And go we, brothers, to the man that took him,
To question of his apprehension.—
Widow, go you along:—lords, use her honourable.
[Exeunt KING EDWARD, LADY GREY
CLARENCE, and Nobleman.
Glo. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.—
Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,
That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring!
To cross me from the golden time I look for!
And yet, between my soul's desire and me,—
The lustful Edward's title buried,—
Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,
And all the unlook'd-for issue of their bodies,
To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:
A cold premeditation for my purpose!
Why, then, I do but dream on sovereignty;
Like one that stands upon a promontory,
And spies a far-off shore where he would t.
Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;
And chides the sea that sunders him from thence Saying he'll lade it dry to have his way:
So do I wish the crown, being so far off;
And so I chide the means that keep me from it:
And so I say I'll cut the causes off,
Flattering me with impossibilities.— [much,]
My eye's too quick, my heart o'erweens too
Unless my hand and strength could equal them. [Richard;]
Well, say there is no kingdom, then, for

What other pleasure can the world afford?
I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
And deck my body in gay ornaments,
And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.

O miserable thought! and more unlikely
Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns!
Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb:
And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,
To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body;
To shape my legs of an unequal size;
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd bear-whelp
That carries no impression like the dam.
And am I, then, a man to be belov'd?
O monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought!
Then, since this earth affords no joy to me
But to command, to check, to o'erbear such
As are of better person than myself,
I'll make my heaven to dream upon the crown,
And whiles I live to account this world but hell,
Until my misshap'd trunk that bears this head
Be round empaled with a glorious crown.
And yet I know not how to get the crown,
For many lives stand between me and home:
And I,—like one lost in a thorny wood,
That rents the thorns, and is rent with the thorns,

Seeking a way, and straying from the way;
Not knowing how to find the open air,
But toiling desperately to find it out,—
Torment myself to catch the English crown:
And from that torment I will free myself,
Or hew my way out with a bloody axe.
Why, I can smile, and murder whiles I smile;
And cry content to that which grieves my heart;
And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,
And frame my face to all occasions.
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;
I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
I'll play the orator as well as Nestor;
Deceive more sily than Ulysses could;
And, like a Sinon, take another Troy:
I can add colours to theameleon;
Change shapes with Proteus for advantages;
And set the murderous Machiavel to school.
Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
Tut, were it further off, I'll pluck it down!

[Exit.

SCENE III.—FRANCE. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter LOUIS, the French King, and LADY BONA, attended; the KING takes his state. Then enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD her Son, and the EARL OF OXFORD.

K. Lou. Fair Queen of England, worthy Margaret, [Rising.

Sit down with us: it ill befits thy state
And birth, that thou shouldst stand while Louis doth sit. [Margaret

Q. Mar. No, mighty King of France: now
Must strike her sail, and learn awhile to serve
Where kings command. I was, I must confess,
Great Albion's queen in former golden days:
But now mischance hath trod my title down,

And with dishonour laid me on the ground;
Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. Lou. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?

Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears, [in cares.
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd

K. Lou. Whate'er it be, be thou still like thyself,

And sit thee by our side: yield not thy neck.

[Seats her by him.

To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
Still ride in triumph over all mischance.

Be plain, Queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief.

Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping thoughts,

And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to
speak.

Now, therefore, be it known to noble Louis
That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
Is, of a king, become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn;
While proud ambitious Edward Duke of York
Usurps the regal title and the seat
Of England's true-anointed lawful king.
This is the cause that I, poor Margaret,—
With this my son, Prince Edward, Henry's heir,—

Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
And if thou fail us, all our hope is done:
Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
Our people and our peers are both misled,
Our treasure seiz'd, our soldiers put to flight,
And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.

K. Lou. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,

While we bethink a means to break it off.

Q. Mar. The more we stay the stronger grows our foe. [cour thee.

K. Lou. The more I stay the more I'll suc-

Q. Mar. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:—

And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow!

Enter WARWICK, attended.

K. Lou. What's he approacheth boldly to our presence?

Q. Mar. Our Earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest friend.

K. Lou. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France?

[Descending from his state. Q. MAR. rises.

Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;

For this is he that moves both wind and tide.
War. From worthy Edward, King of Albion,

My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
I come, in kindness and unfeigned love,—

First, to do greetings to thy royal person;
And then to crave a league of amity;

And lastly, to confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous Lady Bona, thy fair sister,

To England's king in lawful marriage. [done.

Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry's hope is War. And, gracious madam [to BONA], in our king's behalf,

I am commanded, with your leave and favour,
Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue.

Q. Mar. King Louis,—and Lady Bona,— hear me speak,

Before you answer Warwick. His demand Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest
love,

But from deceit bred by necessity;
For how can tyrants safely govern home
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
To prove him tyrant, this reason may suffice,—
That Henry liveth still; but were he dead, Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henry's son. [marriage

Look therefore, Louis, that by this league and Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonour;
For though usurpers sway the rule awhile,
Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth
wrongs.

War. Injurious Margaret!

Prince. And why not queen?

War. Because thy father Henry did usurp;
And thou no more art prince than she is queen.

Oxf. Then Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt,

Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;
And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,
Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth,
Who by his prowess conquered all France:
From these our Henry lineally descends.

War. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth
discourse,

You told not how Henry the Sixth hath lost
All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten?
Methinks these peers of France should smile at that.

But for the rest,—you tell a pedigree
Of threescore and two years; a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.

Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege,

Whom thou obey'st thirty and six years,
And not bewray thy treason with a blush?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the
right,

Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?
For shame! leave Henry, and call Edward king.

Oxf. Call him my king by whose injurious doom

My elder brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere, Was done to death? and more than so, my
father,

Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years,
When nature brought him to the door of death?
No, Warwick, no; while life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.

War. And I the house of York.

K. Lou. Queen Margaret, Prince Edward,
and Oxford,

Vouchsafe, at our request, to stand aside
While I use further conference with Warwick.

Q. Mar. Heavens grant that Warwick's words bewitch him not!

[Retiring with the PRINCE and OXF.]

K. Lou. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,

Is Edward your true king? for I were loth

To link with him that were not lawful chosen.

War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour. [eye?

K. Lou. But is he gracious in the people's

War. The more that Henry was unfortunate.

K. Lou. Then further,—all dissembling set
aside,—

Tell me for truth the measure of his love
Unto our sister Bona.

War. Such it seems

As may beseech a monarch like himself.

Myself have often heard him say, and swear,

That this love was an eternal plant,

Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground,

The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's
sun;

Exempt from envy, but not from disdain,

Unless the Lady Bona quit his pain. [solve.

K. Lou. Now, sister, let us hear your firm re-

Bona. Your grant or your denial shall be mine:—

Yet I confess [to WAR.] that often ere this day,

When I have heard your king's desert recounted,

Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

K. Lou. Then, Warwick, thus,—Our sister shall be Edward's;

And now forthwith shall articles be drawn

Touching the jointure that your king must make

Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd.—

Draw near, Queen Margaret, and be a witness

That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English

Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick! it was thy device

By this alliance to make void my suit:

Before thy coming, Louis was Henry's friend.

K. Lou. And still is friend to him and Margaret:

But if your title to the crown be weak,—

As may appear by Edward's good success,—

Then 'tis but reason that I be releas'd

From giving aid which late I promised.

Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand

That your estate requires and mine can yield.

War. Henry now lives in Scotland at his ease,

Where having nothing, nothing can he lose.

And as for you yourself, our quondam queen,

You have a father able to maintain you;

And better 'twere you troubled him than
France.

Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless
Warwick,—

Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings!

I will not hence till, with my talk and tears,

Both full of truth, I made King Louis behold

Thy sly conveyance, and thy lord's false love;

For both of you are birds of self-same feather.

[A horn sounded within.]

K. Lou. Warwick, this is some post to us or
thee.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord ambassador, these letters are for you,

Sent from your brother, Marquis Montague:—
These from our king unto your majesty:—

And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not.

[To MAR. They all read their letters.

Oxf. I like it well that our fair queen and mistress [his.

Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at Prince. Nay, mark how Louis stamps, as he were nettled:

I hope all's for the best.

K. Lou. Warwick, what are thy news?—and yours, fair queen? [hop'd joys.

Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unwar. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent. [Lady Grey?

K. Lou. What, has your king married the And now, to soothe your forgery and his, Sends me a paper to persuade me patience? Is thus the alliance that he seeks with France? Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner?

Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before: This proveth Edward's love and Warwick's honesty. [heaven,

War. King Louis, I here protest, in sight of And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss, That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's,—

No more my king, for he dishonours me But most himself, if he could see his shame.

Did I forget that by the house of York

My father came untimely to his death?

Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece?

Did I impale him with the regal crown?

Did I put Henry from his native right?

And am I guerdon'd at the last with shame?

Shame on himself! for my desert is honour:

And, to repair my honour lost for him,

I here renounce him, and return to Henry.—

My noble queen, let former grudges pass,

And henceforth I am thy true servitor:

I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bona,

And replant Henry in his former state.

Q. Mar. Warwick, these words have turn'd my hate to love;

And I forgive and quite forget old faults,

And joy that thou becom'st King Henry's friend.

War. So much his friend, ay, his unfeigned friend,

That if King Louis vouchsafe to furnish us

With some few bands of chosen soldiers,

I'll undertake to land them on our coast,

And force the tyrant from his seat by war.

'Tis not his new-made bride shall succor him:

And as for Clarence,—as my letters tell me,—

He's very likely now to fall from him,

For matching more for wanton lust than honour,

Or than for strength and safety of our country.

Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be reveng'd

But by thy help to this distressed queen?

Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry live,

Unless thou rescue him from foul despair?

Bona. My quarrel and this English queen's are one. [yours.

War. And mine, fair Lady Bona, joins with

K. Lou. And mine with hers, and thine, and Margaret's.

Therefore, at last, I firmly am resolv'd

You shall have aid.

Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all at once. [in post,

K. Lou. Then, England's messenger, return And tell false Edward, thy supposed king, That Louis of France is sending over masquers To revel it with him and his new bride:

Thou see'st what's past,—go fear thy king withal.

Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,

I'll wear the willow-garland for his sake.

Q. Mar. Tell him, my mourning-weeds are laid aside,

And I am ready to put armour on.

War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong;

And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long.

There's thy reward: be gone. [Exit Mess.

K. Lou. But, Warwick,

Thou and Oxford, with five thousand men,

Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle;

And, as occasion serves, this noble queen

And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.

Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt,—

What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?

War. This shall assure my constant loyalty,—

That if our queen and this young prince agree

I'll join mine eldest daughter, and my joy,

To him forthwith in holy wedlock-bands.

Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion.—

Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous, Therefore delay not,—give thy hand to Warwick;

And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,

That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.

Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it;

And here to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

[He gives his hand to WARWICK.

K. Lou. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied,

And thou, Lord Bourbon, our high-admiral,

Shall waft them over with our royal fleet.—

I long till Edward fall by war's mischance,

For mocking marriage with a dame of France.

[Exeunt all but WARWICK.

War. I come from Edward as ambassador, But I return his sworn and mortal foe:

Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,

But dreadful war shall answer his demand.

Had he none else to make a stale but me?

Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.

I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,

And I'll be chief to bring him down again:

Not that I pity Henry's misery,

But seek revenge on Edward's mockery.

[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter GLOSTER, CLARENCE SOMERSET, MONTAGUE, and others.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you

Of this new marriage with the Lady Grey?

Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?

Clar. Alas, you know, 'tis far from hence to France;
How could he stay till Warwick made return?
Som. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the king.
Glo. And his well-chosen bride.
Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD, attended; LADY GREY, as Queen; PEMBROKE, STAFFORD, HASTINGS, and others.

K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice,
That you stand pensive, as half malcontent?
Clar. As well as Louis of France or the Earl of Warwick;
Which are so weak of courage and in judgment That they'll take no offence at our abuse.

K. Edw. Suppose they take offence without a cause, [Edward,
They are but Louis and Warwick: I am Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will. [King]

Glo. And shall have your will, because our Yet hasty marriage seldom proveth well.

K. Edw. Yea, brother Richard, are you offended too?

Glo. Not I:
No, God forbid that I should wish them sever'd Whom God hath join'd together; ay, and 'twere pity

To sunder them that yoke so well together.

K. Edw. Setting your scorns and your mislike aside,

Tell me some reason why the Lady Grey Should not become my wife and England's queen:—

And you too, Somerset and Montague, Speak freely what you think. [Louis]

Clar. Then this is mine opinion,—that King Becomes your enemy for mocking him About the marriage of the Lady Bona.

Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge,
Is now dishonoured by this new marriage.

K. Edw. What if both Louis and Warwick be appeas'd

By such invention as I can devise?

Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance [wealth

Would more have strengthen'd this our common- 'Gainst foreign storms than any home-bred marriage. [itself]

Hast. Why, knows not Montague that of England is safe, if true within itself?

Mont. But the safer when 'tis back'd with France.

Hast. 'Tis better using France than trusting France:

Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas Which he hath given for fence impregnable, And with their helps only defend ourselves; In them and in ourselves our safety lies.

Clar. For this one speech Lord Hastings well deserves

To have the heir of the Lord Hungerford.

K. Edw. Ay, what of that? it was my will and grant;

And for this once my will shall stand for law.

Glo. And yet methinks your grace hath not done well,

To give the heir and daughter of Lord Scales Unto the brother of your loving bride; She better would have fitted me or Clarence: But in your bride you bury brotherhood.

Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir

Of the Lord Bonville on your new wife's son, And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.

K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee.

Clar. In choosing for yourself you show'd your judgment,

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave To play the broker in mine own behalf;

And to that end I shortly mind to leave you.

K. Edw. Leave me or tarry, Edward will be king,

And not be tied unto his brother's will.

Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleas'd his majesty

To raise my state to title of a queen, Do me but right, and you must all confess

That I was not ignoble of descent;

And meaner than myself have had like fortune.

But as this title honours me and mine,

So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,

Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.

K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns:

What danger or what sorrows can befall thee,

So long as Edward is thy constant friend

And their true sovereign, whom they must obey?

Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,

Unless they seek for hatred at my hands;

Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,

And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.

Glo. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more. [Aside.]

Enter a Messenger.

K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters or what news

From France? [words

Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters; and few

But such as I, without your special pardon,

Dare not relate.

K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore,

in brief, [them]

Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess

What answer makes King Louis unto our letters?

Mess. At my depart, these were his very

words:

Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king,

That Louis of France is sending over masquers

To revel it with him and his new bride.

K. Edw. Is Louis so brave? belike he thinks me Henry.

But what said Lady Bona to my marriage?

Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain:

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,

I'll wear the willow-garland for his sake.

K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less; [queen]

She had the wrong. But what said Henry's

For I have heard that she was there in place.

*Mess. Tell him, quoth she, my mourning-weeds are done,
And I am ready to put armour on.* [zon.

K. Edw. Belike she minds to play the Amazon what said Warwick to these injuries?

Mess. He, more incensed against your majesty than all the rest, discharg'd me with these words:

*Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong;
And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long.*

K. Edw. Ha! durst the traitor breathe out so proud words?

*Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd:
They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption.*

But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret?

Mess. Ay, gracious sovereign; they are so link'd in friendship

That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

Clar. Belike the elder; Clarence will have the younger.

*Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,
For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter;
That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage
I may not prove inferior to yourself.—
You that love me and Warwick, follow me.*

[Exit, and SOMERSET follows.

Glo. Not I:
My thoughts aim at a further matter; I
Stay not for the love of Edward, but the crown.

[Aside.

K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick!

*Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen;
And haste is needful in this desperate case.—
Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf
Go levy men, and make prepare for war;
They are already, or quickly will be landed:
Myself in person will straight follow you.*

[Exit PEM. and STAF.

*But ere I go, Hastings and Montague,
Resolve my doubt. You twain, of all the rest,
Are near to Warwick by blood and by alliance:
Tell me if you love Warwick more than me?
If it be so, then both depart to him;*

*I rather wish you foes than hollow friends:
But if you mind to hold your true obedience,
Give me assurance with some friendly vow,
That I may never have you in suspect.* [true!

Mont. So God help Montague as he proves Hast. And Hastings as he favours Edward's cause!

[by us?

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand
Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you.

K. Edw. Why, so! then am I sure of victory.
Now therefore let us hence; and lose no hour
Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Plain in Warwickshire.

Enter WARWICK and OXFORD, with French and other Forces.

War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well;

The common people by numbers swarm to us.—

But see where Somerset and Clarence come!

Enter CLARENCE and SOMERSET.

*Speak suddenly, my lords,—are we all friends?
Clar.* Fear not that, my lord.

War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto [Warwick;—

*And welcome, Somerset.—I hold it cowardice
To rest mistrustful where a noble heart
Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love
Else might I think that Clarence, Edward's brother,*

*Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings:
But welcome, sweet Clarence; my daughter shall be thine.*

*And now, what rests but, in night's coverture,
Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd,
His soldiers lurking in the towns about,
And but attended by a simple guard,*

*We may surprise and take him at our pleasure?
Our scouts have found the adventure very easy:
That as Ulysses and stout Diomed*

With sleight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents,

And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds, [mantle,

*So we, well cover'd with the night's black
At unawares may beat down Edward's guard
And seize himself; I say not, slaughter him,
For I intend but only to surprise him.*

*You that will follow me to this attempt,
Applaud the name of Henry with your leader.*

[They all cry "Henry!"

*Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort:
For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint George!* [Exit.

SCENE III.—EDWARD'S Camp, near Warwick.

Enter certain Watchmen, before the KING's tent.

1 Watch. Come on, my masters, each man take his stand:

The king by this has set him down to sleep.

2 Watch. What, will he not to bed?

1 Watch. Why, no: for he hath made a solemn vow

*Never to lie and take his natural rest
Till Warwick or himself be quite suppress'd.*

2 Watch. To-morrow then, belike, shall be the day,

If Warwick be so near as men report.

3 Watch. But say, I pray, what nobleman is that

That with the king here resteth in his tent?

1 Watch. 'Tis the Lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend.

[the king

3 Watch. O, is it so? But why commands that his chief followers lodge in towns about him,

While he himself keeps in the cold field?

2 Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because more dangerous.

[ness;

3 Watch. Ay, but give me worship and quiet—I like it better than a dangerous honour.

If Warwick knew in what estate he stands,

'Tis to be doubted he would waken him.

1 Watch. Unless our halberds did shut up his passage.

[tent,

2 Watch. Ay, wherefore else guard we his royal

But to defend his person from night-foes?

Enter WARWICK, CLARENCE, OXFORD,
SOMERSET, and Forces.

War. This is his tent; and see where stand his guard.
Courage, my masters! honour now or never!
But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.
1 Watch. Who goes there?
2 Watch. Stay, or thou diest.
[WARWICK and the rest cry all—"Warwick!
Warwick!" and set upon the Guard, who fly, crying, "Arm! Arm!" WARWICK and the rest following them.

The drum beating and trumpets sounding, re-enter WARWICK and the rest, bringing the KING out in his gown, sitting in a chair;
GLOSTER and HASTINGS are seen flying.

Som. What are they that fly there?

War. Richard and Hastings: let them go;
here is the duke.

K. Edu. The duke! Why, Warwick, when we parted last
Thou call'dst me king?

War. Ay, but the case is alter'd:
When you disgrac'd me in my embassy,
Then I degraded you from being king,
And come now to create you Duke of York.
Alas, how should you govern any kingdom,
That know not how to use ambassadors;
Nor how to be contented with one wife;
Nor how to use your brothers brotherly;
Nor how to study for the people's welfare;
Nor how to shroud yourself from enemies?

K. Edu. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here too?

Nay, then I see that Edward needs must
down.—

Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,
Of thee thyself and all thy complices,
Edward will always bear himself as king:
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

War. Then, for his mind, be Edward England's king: [Takes off his crown.]

But Henry now shall wear the English crown
And be true king indeed; thou but the shadow.—

My Lord of Somerset, at my request,
See that forthwith Duke Edward be convey'd Unto my brother, Archbishop of York.
When I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows,

I'll follow you, and tell what answer
Louis and the Lady Bona send to him.—
Now, for awhile farewell, good Duke of York.

K. Edu. What fates impose, that men must needs abide;

It boots not to resist both wind and tide.

[Exit, led out; SOM. with him.]

Oxf. What now remains, my lords, for us to do,

But march to London with our soldiers?

War. Ay, that's the first thing that we have to do;

To free King Henry from imprisonment,
And see him seated in the regal throne.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH and RIVERS.

Riv. Madam, what makes you in this sudden change? [learn]

Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to What late misfortune is befall'n King Edward?

Riv. What, loss of some pitch'd battle against Warwick?

Q. Eliz. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

Riv. Then, is my sovereign slain?

Q. Eliz. Ay, almost slain, for he is taken prisoner;

Either betray'd by falsehood of his guard,
Or by his foe surpris'd at unawares:

And, as I further have to understand,
Is new committed to the Bishop of York,

Fell Warwick's brother, and by that our foe.

Riv. These news, I must confess, are full of grief;

Yet, gracious madam, bear it as you may:

Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.

Q. Eliz. Till then, fair hope must hinder life's decay.

And I the rather wean me from despair,
For love of Edward's offspring in my womb:

This is it that makes me bridle passion,
And bear with mildness my misfortune's cross:

Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear,
And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs,

Lest with my sighs or tears I blast or drown
King Edward's fruit, true heir to the English

crown.

Riv. But, madam, where is Warwick, then, become?

Q. Eliz. I am inform'd that he comes towards London.

To set the crown once more on Henry's head:
Guess thou the rest; King Edward's friends must down.

But to prevent the tyrant's violence,—
For trust not him that hath once broken faith,—

I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary,
To save at least the heir of Edward's right:

There shall I rest secure from force and fraud.
Come, therefore, let us fly while we may fly:

If Warwick take us, we are sure to die.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—A Park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.

Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, SIR WILLIAM
STANLEY, and others.

Glo. Now, my Lord Hastings and Sir
William Stanley,

Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither
Into this chieftest thicket of the park. [brother,

Thus stands the case: you know our king, my is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands

He hath good usage and great liberty;
And often, but attended with weak guard,

Comes hunting this way, to disport himself.
I have advertis'd him by secret means

That if about this hour he make this way,
Under the colour of his usual game, [men,

He shall here find his friends, with horse and
To set him free from his captivity.

Enter KING EDWARD and a Huntsman.

Hunt. This way, my lord; for this way lies the game. [huntsmen stand.—

K. Edw. Nay, this way, man: see where the Now, brother of Gloster, Lord Hastings, and the rest, Stand you thus close to steal the bishop's deer?

Glo. Brother, the time and case requireth haste:

Your horse stands ready at the park-corner.

K. Edw. But whither shall we then?

Hast. To Lynn, my lord; and ship from thence to Flanders. [my meaning.

Glo. Well guess'd, believe me; for that was

K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness. [talk.

Glo. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to K. Edw. Huntsmen, what say'st thou? wilt thou go along?

Hunt. Better do so than tarry and be hang'd.

Glo. Come then, away; let's ha' no more ado.

K. Edw. Bishop, farewell: shield thee from Warwick's frown;

And pray that I may repossess the crown.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Room in the Tower.

Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, WARWICK SOMERSET, YOUNG RICHMOND, OXFORD MONTAGUE, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Master Lieutenant, now that God and friends

Have shaken Edward from the regal seat,
And turn'd my captive state to liberty,
My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys,—
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Lieut. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;

But if an humble prayer may prevail,
I then crave pardon of your majesty.

K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well-using me?

Nay, be thou sure I'll well requite thy kindness,
For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure;
Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds
Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,
At last, by notes of household harmony,
They quite forget their loss of liberty.—

But, Warwick, after God, thou sett'st me free,
And chiefly therefore I thank God and thee;
He was the author, thou the instrument.

Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,
By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me,
And that the people of this blessed land
May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars,—
Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,

I here resign my government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous;

And now may seem as wise as virtuous
By spying and avoiding fortune's malice,
For few men rightly temper with the stars:
Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace
For choosing me when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,

To whom the heavens, in thy nativity,
Adjudget an olive-branch and laurel-crown,
As likely to be blest in peace and war;
And therefore I yield thee my free consent.

War. And I choose Clarence only for protector.

K. Hen. Warwick and Clarence, give me both your hands:

Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,

That no dissension hinder government:

I make you both protectors of this land;

While I myself will lead a private life,

And in devotion spend my latter days,

To sin's rebuke and my Creator's praise.

War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's will? [sent;

Clar. That he consents if Warwick yield con-
For on thy fortune I repose myself.

War. Why, then, though loth, yet must I be content:

We'll yoke together, like a double shadow

To Henry's body, and supply his place;

I mean, in bearing weight of government,

While he enjoys the honour and his ease.

And Clarence, now then it is more than needful

Forthwith that Edward be pronounc'd a traitor,

And all his lands and goods be confiscate.

Clar. What else? and that succession be determin'd. [part.

War. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his

K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,

Let me entreat,—for I command no more,—

That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,

Be sent for, to return from France with speed;

For till I see them here, by doubtful fear

My joy of liberty is half eclips'd.

Clar. It shall be done, my sovereign, with all speed. [is that,

K. Hen. My Lord of Somerset, what youth

Of whom you seem to have so tender care?

Som. My liege, it is young Henry, Earl of Richmond.

K. Hen. Come hither, England's hope.—If secret powers

[Lays his hand on his head.

Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,

This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss.

His looks are full of peaceful majesty;

His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,

His hand to wield a sceptre; and himself

Likely in time to bless a regal throne.

Make much of him, my lords; for this is he Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Messenger.

War. What news, my friend? [brother,

Mess. That Edward is escaped from your
And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.

War. Unsavoury news! but how made he escape? [Gloster

Mess. He was convey'd by Richard Duke of

And the Lord Hastings, who attended him

In secret ambush on the forest-side,

And from the bishop's huntsmen rescu'd him;

For hunting was his daily exercise.

War. My brother was too careless of his charge.—

But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may betide.

[Exeunt KING HENRY, WAR., CLAR.
Lieut., and Attendants.

Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's:

For doubtless Burgundy will yield him help,
And we shall have more wars before't be long.
As Henry's late presaging prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young
Richmond,

So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts,
What may befall him, to his harm and ours:
Therefore, Lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
Forthwith we'll send him hence to Brittany,
Till storms be past of civil enmity.

Oxf. Ay, for if Edward repossess the crown,
'Tis like that Richmond with the rest shall
down.

Som. It shall be so; he shall to Brittany.
Come, therefore, let's about it speedily.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Before York.

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, HASTINGS
and Forces.

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, Lord Hastings, and the rest,

Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends,
And says that once more I shall interchange
My waned state for Henry's regal crown.
Well have we pass'd, and now repass'd the seas
And brought desired help from Burgundy.
What, then, remains, we being thus arriv'd
From Ravenspurgh haven before the gates of York,

But that we enter, as into our dukedom?

Glo. The gates made fast!—Brother, I like not this;

For many men that stumble at the threshold
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.

K. Edw. Tush, man, abodements must not now affright us:

By fair or foul means we must enter in,
For hither will our friends repair to us.

Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more to summon them.

Enter, on the Walls, the Mayor of York and Aldermen.

May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,
And shut the gates for safety of ourselves;
For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.

K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be
your king,
Yet Edward at the least is Duke of York.

May. True, my good lord; I know you for no less.

K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my dukedom,

As being well content with that alone. [nose.]

Glo. But when the fox hath once got in his He'll soon find means to make the body follow.

[Aside.]

Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?

Open the gates, we are King Henry's friends.

May. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open'd. [Exeunt from above.]

Glo. A wise stout captain, and soon persuaded! [were well,]

Hast. The good old man would fain that all
So 'twere not 'long of him; but being enter'd,
I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade
Both him and all his brothers unto reason.

Re-enter the Mayor and Aldermen, below.

K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not be shut

But in the night or in the time of war.

What! fear not, man, but yield me up the keys;
[Takes his keys.]

For Edward will defend the town and thee.
And all those friends that deign to follow me.

Drum. Enter MONTGOMERY and Forces, marching.

Glo. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery,
Our trusty friend, unless I be deceiv'd.

K. Edw. Welcome, Sir John! But why come you in arms? [storm,]

Mont. To help King Edward in his time of
As every loyal subject ought to do.

K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery; but we now forget

Our title to the crown, and only claim
Our dukedom till God please to send the rest.

Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence
again:

I came to serve a king, and not a duke.—

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.

[A march begun.]

K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, awhile; and we'll debate

By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.

Mont. What talk you of debating? in few words,—

If you'll not here proclaim yourself our king,
I'll leave you to your fortune, and be gone

To keep them back that come to succour you:

Why should we fight, if you pretend no title?

Glo. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points?

K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make our claim:

Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.

Hast. Away with scrupulous wit! now arms must rule.

Glo. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crowns.

Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand;
The bruit thereof will bring you many friends.

K. Edw. Then be it as you will; for 'tis my right,

And Henry but usurps the diadem.

Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like himself;

And now will I be Edward's champion.

Hast. Sound trumpet; Edward shall be here proclaim'd:—

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.
[Gives him a paper. Flourish.]

Sold. [Reads.] Edward the Fourth, by the grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, &c.

Mont. And whoso'er gainsays King Edward's right,
By this I challenge him to single fight.

[Throws down his gauntlet.]

All. Long live Edward the Fourth!

K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery;—and thanks unto you all;

If fortune serve me, I'll requite this kindness.
Now, for this night, let's harbour here in York;
And when the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates;
For well I wot that Henry is no soldier.—
Ah, forward Clarence! how evil it beseems thee

To flatter Henry and forsake thy brother!
Yet, as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwick.—
Come on, brave soldiers: doubt not of the day,
And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, WARWICK, MONTAGUE, CLARENCE, EXETER, and OXFORD.

War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belgia,

With hasty Germans and blunt Hollanders,
Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas,
And with his troops doth march amain to London;

And many giddy people flock to him.

Oxf. Let's levy men, and beat him back again.

Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out;
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.

War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted friends,

Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war;

Those will I muster up:—and thou, son Clarence,

Shalt stir up, in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent,
Or the knights and gentlemen to come with thee:—

Thou, brother Montague, in Buckingham,
Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find
Men well inclin'd to hear what thou command'st:—

And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well belov'd,
In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.

My sovereign, with the loving citizens,—

Like to his island girl in with the ocean,

Or modest Dian circled with her nymphs,—

Shall rest in London till we come to him.—

Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply.—
Farewell, my sovereign.

K. Hen. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's true hope.

Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness'

K. Hen. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate!

Mont. Comfort, my lord;—and so I take my

Oxf. And thus [kissing HENRY'S hand] I seal my truth, and bid adieu.

K. Hen. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Montague,

And all at once, once more a happy farewell.

War. Farewell, sweet lords: let's meet at Coventry.

[Exeunt WAR., CLAR., OXF., and MONT.]

K. Hen. Here at the palace will I rest awhile.
Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?

Methinks the power that Edward hath in field
Should not be able to encounter mine. [rest.

Exe. The doubt is, that he will seduce the

K. Hen. That's not my fear; my meed hath got me fame:

I have not stopp'd mine ears to their demands,
Nor posted off their suits with slow delays:

My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,

My mercy dried their water-flowing tears;
I have not been desirous of their wealth,

Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,
Nor forward of revenge, though they much

err'd: [me?]

Then why should they love Edward more than

No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace:

And, when the lion fawns upon the lamb,

The lamb will never cease to follow him.

[Shout within, "A Lancaster! A Lancaster!"]

Exe. Hark, hark, my lord! what shouts are these?

Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers

Edw. Seize on the shame-fac'd Henry, bear him hence:

And once again proclaim us king of England.—
You are the fount that makes small brooks to flow: [dry,

Now stops thy spring; my sea shall suck them
And swell so much the higher by their ebb.—

Hence with him to the Tower; let him not speak.

[Exeunt some with KING HENRY.]

And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,

Where peremptory Warwick now remains:

The sun shines hot; and, if we use delay,
Cold biting winter mars our hop'd-for hay.

Glo. Away betimes, before his forces join,
And take the great-grown traitor unawares:

Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Coventry.

Enter upon the Walls, WARWICK, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?

1. Mess. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How far off is our brother Montague?

Where is the post that came from Montague?

2. Mess. By this at Daintrey, with a puissant troop.

Enter SIR JOHN SOMERVILLE.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?

Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces,
And do expect him here some two hours hence.

War. Then Clarence is at hand; I hear his drum. [Drum heard.] [hes;]

Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam The drum your honour hears marcheth from Warwick. [for friends.]

War. Who should that be? belike unlook'd-
Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

March. Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, and Forces.

K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle. [wall!]

Glo. See how the surly Warwick mans the War. O unbid spite! is sportful Edward come? [duc'd,]

Where slept our scouts, or how are they set-
That we could hear no news of his repair?

K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city gates,

Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee,
Call Edward king, and at his hands beg mercy?
And he shall pardon thee these outrages.

War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,

Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down,
Call Warwick patron, and be penitent?
And thou shalt still remain the Duke of York.

Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said the king;

Or did he make the jest against his will?
War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give:
I'll do thee service for so good a gift.

War. 'Twas I that gave the kingdom to thy brother.

K. Edw. Why, then, 'tis mine, if but by Warwick's gift.

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:
And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again;
And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

K. Edw. But Warwick's king is Edward's prisoner:

And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this,—
What is the body when the head is off? [cast,

Glo. Alas, that Warwick had no more fore-
But, whiles he thought to steal the single ten,
The king was silly finger'd from the deck!
You left poor Henry at the bishop's palace,
And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.

K. Edw. 'Tis even so; yet you are Warwick still.

Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time; kneel down, kneel down:

Nay, when? strike now, or else the iron cools.

War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,

And with the other fling it at thy face,
Than bear so low a sail, to strike to thee.

K. Edw. Sail how thou canst, have wind and tide thy friend; [hair,

This hand, fast wound about thy coal-black
Shall, whiles thy head is warm and new cut off,
Write in the dust this sentence with thy blood,—
Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more.

Enter OXFORD, with Forces, drum, and colours.

War. O cheerful colours! see where Oxford comes!

Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaster!

[He and his Forces enter the city.]

Glo. The gates are open, let us enter too.

K. Edw. So other foes may set upon our backs.

Stand we in good array; for they no doubt
Will issue out again and bid us battle:
If not, the city being but of small defence,
We'll quickly rouse the traitors in the same.

War. O, welcome, Oxford! for we want thy help.

Enter MONTAGUE, with Forces, drum, and colours.

Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaster!
[He and his Forces enter the city.]

Glo. Thou and thy brother both shall buy this treason

Even with the dearest blood your bodies bear.

K. Edw. The harder match'd, the greater victory:

My mind presageth happy gain and conquest.

Enter SOMERSET, with Forces, drum, and colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster!
[He and his Forces enter the city.]

Glo. Two of thy name, both Dukes of Somerset,

Have sold their lives unto the house of York;
And thou shalt be the third, if this sword hold.

Enter CLARENCE, with Forces, drum, and colours.

War. And lo, where George of Clarence sweeps along,

Of force enough to bid his brother battle;
With whom an upright zeal to right prevails
More than the nature of a brother's love!—
Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt, if Warwick call.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means?

[Taking the red rose out of his hat.]

Look here, I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Why, trowst thou, Warwick,

That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt, unnatural,
To bend the fatal instruments of war
Against his brother and his lawful king?

Perhaps thou wilt object my holy oath:
To keep that oath were more impiety
Than Jephtha's, when he sacrific'd his daughter.

I am so sorry for my trespass made,
That, to deserve well at my brother's hands,
I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe;

With resolution wheresoe'er I meet thee,—
As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad,—
To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.

And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee,
And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.—
Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends;

And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,
For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more below'd,
Than if thou never hadst deserv'd our hate.

Glo. Welcome, good Clarence; this is brother-like.

War. O passing traitor, perjurd and unjust!
K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town and fight?

Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears?
War. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence!
I will away towards Barnet presently,
And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st.

K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way.

Lords, to the field: Saint George and victory.
[March. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A field of Battle near Barnet.

Alarums and excursions. Enter KING EDWARD, bringing in WARWICK wounded.

K. Edw. So, lie thou there: die thou, and die our fear;

For Warwick was a bug that fear'd us all.—
Now, Montague, sit fast; I seek for thee,
That Warwick's bones may keep thine company. [Exit.]

War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, friend or foe,

And tell me who is victor, York or Warwick?
Why ask I that? my mangled body shows,
My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart shows,

That I must yield my body to the earth,
And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle,
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,
Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,

And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.

These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's black veil,

Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,
To search the secret treasons of the world:
The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,
Were likend off to kingly sepulchres;
For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave?
And who durst smile when Warwick bent his brow?

Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood!
My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Even now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me but my body's length!
Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust!

And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

Enter OXFORD and SOMERSET.

Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! wert thou as we are,

We might recover all our loss again:
The queen from France hath brought a puissant power; [fly!]

Even now we heard the news: ah, couldst thou
War. Why, then, I would not fly.—Ah, Montague,

If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,
And with thy lips keep in my soul awhile!
Thou lov'st me not; for, brother, if thou didst,
Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood
That glues my lips and will not let me speak.
Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead.

Som. Ah, Warwick! Montague hath breath'd his last;

And to the latest gasp cried out for Warwick,
And said, Commend me to my valiant brother.
And more he would have said; and more he spoke,

Which sounded like a cannon in a vault,
That might not be distinguish'd; but at last,
I well might hear, deliver'd with a groan,
O, farewell, Warwick!

War. Sweet rest his soul!—fly, lords, and save yourselves;

For Warwick bids you all farewell, to meet in heav'n. [Dies.]

Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power!

[Exeunt, bearing off WAR.'s body.]

SCENE III.—Another part of the Field.

Flourish. Enter KING EDWARD in triumph; with CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and the rest.

K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course,

And we are grac'd with wreaths of victory.
But in the midst of this bright-shining day
I spy a black, suspicious, threatening cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun
Ere he attain his easeful western bed:

I mean, my lords, those powers that the queen
Hath rais'd in Gallia have arriv'd our coast,
And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud

And blow it to the source from whence it came:
Thy very beams will dry those vapours up;

For every cloud engenders not a storm. [strong.]

Glo. The queen is valu'd thirty thousand
And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her:
If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd,
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

K. Edw. We are advertis'd by our loving friends [bury;]

That they do hold their course toward Tewks-
We, having now the best at Barnet field,
Will thither straight, for willingness rids way;
And as we march, our strength will be augmented

In every county as we go along.—

Strike up the drum; cry, Courage! and away.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.

March. Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD, SOMERSET, OXFORD, and Soldiers.

Q. Mar. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss,

But cheerily seek how to redress their harms.
What though the mast be now blown overboard,
The cable broke, the holding-anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood;
Yet lives our pilot still: is't meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,

With tearful eyes add water to the sea, [much,
And give more strength to that which hath too
Whiles, in his moan, the ship splits on the rock.
Which industry and courage might have sav'd?
Ah, what a shame! ah, what a fault were this!
Say Warwick was our anchor; what of that?
And Montague our top-mast, what of him?
Our slaughter'd friends the tackles, what of these?

Why, is not Oxford here another anchor?
And Somerset another goodly mast? [lungs?
The friends of France our shrouds and tack-
And, though unskilful, why not Ned and I
For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge?
We will not from the helm to sit and weep;
But keep our course, though the rough wind say no, [wreck.
From shelves and rocks that threaten us with
As good to chide the waves as speak them fair.
And what is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit?
And Richard but a ragged fatal rock?
All these the enemies to our poor bark.
Say you can swim, alas, 'tis but a while!
Tread on the sand, why, there you quickly sink:
Bestride the rock; the tide will wash you off,
Or else you famish,—that's a threefold death.
Thus speak I, lords, to let you understand,
If case some one of you would fly from us,
That there's no hop'd-for mercy with the brothers, [rocks.
More than with ruthless waves, with sands, and Why, courage, then! what cannot be avoided,
'Twere childish weakness to lament or fear.

Prince. Methinks a woman of this valiant spirit

Should, if a coward heard her speak these
words,

Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
And make him naked foil a man-at-arms.
I speak not this as doubting any here;
For did I but suspect a fearful man,
He should have leave to go away betimes;
Lest in our need he might infect another,
And make him of like spirit to himself.
If any such be here,—as God forbid!—
Let him depart before we need his help.

Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage,

And warriors faint! why, 'twere perpetual shame.—

O brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
Doth live again in thee: long mayst thou live
To bear his image and renew his glories!

Som. And he that will not fight for such a
hope,

Go home to bed, and, like the owl by day,
If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at.

Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset;—sweet
Oxford, thanks. [nothing else.

Prince. And take his thanks that yet hath

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at
hand,

Ready to fight; therefore be resolute.

Oxf. I thought no less: it is his policy
To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.

Som. But he's deceiv'd; we are in readiness.

Q. Mar. This cheers my heart, to see you forwardness

Oxf. Here pitch our battle; hence we will not budge.

Flourish and march. Enter, at a distance, KING EDWARD, CLARENCE, GLOSTER, and Forces.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood, [strength,

Which, by the heavens' assistance and your
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.

I need not add more fuel to your fire;

For well I wot ye blaze to burn them out:

Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords.

Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen,
what I should say

My tears gansay; for every word I speak,

Ye see, I drink the water of mine eyes.

Therefore, no more but this:—Henry, your sovereign,

Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd,

His realm a slaughter-house, his subjects slain,

His statutes cancell'd, and his treasure spent;

And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil.

You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,
Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

[Exeunt both armies.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the Plains.

*Alarums: excursions: and afterwards a retreat. Then enter KING EDWARD, CLAR-ENCE, GLOSTER, and Forces, with QUEEN
MARGARET, OXFORD, and SOMERSET prisoners.*

K. Edw. Now, here a period of tumultuous
broils.

Away with Oxford to Hammes' Castle straight;
For Somerset, off with his guilty head. [speak.

Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them Oxf. For my part, I'll not trouble thee with words. [fortune.

Som. Nor I, but stoop with patience to my

[Exeunt Oxf., and Som., guarded.]

Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublous
world,

To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.

K. Edw. Is proclamation made that who finds Edward

Shall have a high reward, and he his life?

Glo. It is; and lo, where youthful Edward comes.

Enter Soldiers, with PRINCE EDWARD.

K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant, let us hear him speak.

What, can so young a thorn begin to prick?—

Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make

For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,

And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?

Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York!

Suppose that I am now my father's mouth;

Resign thy chair, and where I stand kneel thou,

Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee,

Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer
to.

Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolv'd!

Glo. That you might still have worn the petticoat,
And ne'er have stol'n the breech from Lancaster.

Prince. Let Aesop fable in a winter's night;
His curish riddles sort not with this place.

Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that word. [to men.]

Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague
Glo. For God's sake, take away this captive scold.

Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back rather.

K. Edw. Peace, wilful boy, or I will charm your tongue.

Clar. Untutor'd lad, thou art too malapert.
Prince. I know my duty; you are all undutiful: [George,— Lascivious Edward,—and thou, perjur'd

And thou, misshapen Dick,—I tell ye all
I am your better, traitors as ye are;—
And thou usurp'st my father's right and mine.

K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this railer here. [Stabs him.]

Glo. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agony. [Stabs him.]

Clar. And there's for twitting me with perjury. [Stabs him.]

Q. Mar. O, kill me too!

Glo. Marry, and shall. [Offers to kill her.]

K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold; for we have done too much.

Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with words?

K. Edw. What, doth she swoon? use means for her recovery.

Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother;

I'll hence to London on a serious matter:

Ere ye come there, be sure to hear some news.

Clar. What? what?

Glo. The Tower! the Tower! [Exit.]

Q. Mar. O Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy! [ers!—

Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murder—
That that stabb'd Cæsar shed no blood at all,
Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,
If this foul deed were by to equal it:

He was a man;—this, in respect, a child,—
And men ne'er spend their fury on a child. [it?
What's worse than murderer, that I may name
No, no, my heart will burst, an if I speak:—
And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.—
Butchers and villains! bloody cannibals!
How sweet a plant have you untimely cropp'd!
You have no children, butchers! if you had,
The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse:

But if you ever chance to have a child,
Look in his youth to have him so cut off
As, deathsmen, you have rid this sweet young prince!

K. Edw. Away with her; go, bear her hence perforce.

Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, despatch me here; [death:

Here sheathe thy sword, I'll pardon thee my
What, wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou. [ease.]

Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much

Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it. [not do it?

Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear I would

Q. Mar. Ay, but thou usdest to forswear thyself:

'Twas sin before, but now 'tis charity.

What! wilt thou not?—Where is that devil's butcher: [thou?

Hard-favour'd Richard?—Richard, where art
Thou are not here: murder is thy aim-deed;
Petitioners for blood thou ne'er putt'st back.

K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge ye, bear her hence.

Q. Mar. So come to you and yours as to this prince! [Exit, led out forcibly.]

K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?

Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess,
To make a bloody supper in the Tower.

K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head. [sort

Now march we hence: discharge the common
With pay and thanks, and let's away to London,
And see our gentle queen how well she fares,—
By this, I hope, she hath a son for me. [Exitunt.]

SCENE VI.—LONDON. A Room in the Tower.

KING HENRY is discovered sitting with a book in his hand, the Lieutenant attending. Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good-day, my lord. What, at your book so hard?

K. Hen. Ay, my good lord:—my lord, I should say rather;

'Tis sin to flatter, good was little better:

Good Gloster and good devil were alike, [lord.

And both preposterous: therefore, not good

Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer. [Exit Lieutenant.]

K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf;

So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.—

What scene of death hath Roscius now to act?

Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind;
The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

K. Hen. The bird that hath been limed in a bush,

With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye.

Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. [Crete,

Glo. Why, what a peevish fool was that of
That taught his son the office of a fowl!

And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd.

K. Hen. I, Daedalus; my poor boy, Icarus;
Thy father, Minos, that denied our course;
The sun, that sear'd the wings of my sweet boy,
Thy brother Edward; and thyself, the sea,
Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life.

Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words!
My breast can better brook thy dagger's point
Than can my ears that tragic history.

But wherefore dost thou come? is't for my life?

Glo. Think'st thou I am an executioner?

K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art:
If murdering innocents be executing,

Why, then thou art an executioner.

Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.

K. Hen. Hadst thou been kill'd when first thou didst presume,

Thou hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine.
And thus I prophesy,—that many a thousand,
Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear,
And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's,

And many an orphan's water-standing eye,—
Men for their sons, wives for their husbands,
And orphans for their parents' timeless death,—
Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born.
The owl shriek'd at thy birth,—an evil sign;
The night-crow cried, aboding luckless time;
Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempest shook down trees;

The raven rook'd her on the chimney's top,
And chattering pies in dismal discords sung.
Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope,

To wit,—
An indigest deformed lump,
Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree. [born,
Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast
To signify thou cam'st to bite the world:
And if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st—

Glo. I'll hear no more:—die, prophet, in thy speech: [Stabs him.

For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd.
K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after this.

O God forgive my sins and pardon thee! [Dies.
Glo. What, will the aspiring blood of Lancaster

Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted. [death!

See how my sword weeps for the poor king's
O, may such purple tears be always shed
From those that wish the downfall of our house!—

If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Down, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither,— [Stabs him again.

I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear.—
Indeed, 'tis true that Henry told me of;
For I have often heard my mother say
I came into the world with my legs forward:
Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste,
And seek their ruin that usurp'd our right:
The midwife wonder'd; and the women cried,
O, Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth!
And so I was, which plainly signified
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
Then, since the heavens have shap'd my body
so,

Let hell make crook'd my mind to answer it.
I have no brother, I am like no brother;
And this word love, which greybeards call divine,

Be resident in men like one another,
And not in me: I am myself alone.— [light:
Clarence, beware; thou keep'st me from the
But I will sort a pitchy day for thee;
For I will buzz abroad such prophecies
That Edward shall be fearful of his life:
And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death.
King Henry and the prince his son are gone:
Clarence, thy turn is next, and then the rest;
Counting myself but bad till I be best.—

I'll throw thy body in another room,
And triumph, Henry,—in thy day of doom.
[Exit with the body.

SCENE VII.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish KING EDWARD is discovered sitting on his throne; QUEEN ELIZABETH with the infant PRINCE, CLARENCE, GLOSTER, HAST-INGS, and others, near him.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal throne,
Repurchas'd with the blood of enemies.
What valiant foemen, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in tops of all their pride!

Three Dukes of Somerset,—threefold renown'd
For hardy and undoubted champions;
Two Cliffords, as the father and the son;
And two Northumberlands,—two braver men
Ne'er spur'd their coursers at the trumpet's sound; [Montague,

With them the two brave bears, Warwick and
That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roar'd.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security.—
Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy.—
Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles and myself
Have in our armours watch'd the winter's night;
Went all afoot in summer's scalding heat,
That thou might'st repossess the crown in peace:
And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain.

Glo. I'll blast his harvest if your head were laid;

For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thick to heave;
And heave it shall some weight, or break my back:—

Work thou the way,—and that shalt execute.
[Aside.

K. Edw. Clarence and Gloster, love my lovely queen;
And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.
Clar. The duty that I owe unto your majesty
I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe.

K. Edw. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother, thanks. [thou sprang'st,

Glo. And, that I love the tree from whence
Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit.—
To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master,
And cried, all hail! when as he meant all harm. [Aside.

K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
Having my country's peace and brothers' loves.
Clar. What will your grace have done with Margaret?

Reignier, her father, to the King of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,
And hither have they sent it for her ransom.

K. Edw. Away with her, and waft her hence to France.

And now what rests but that we spend the time
With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
Such as befit the pleasure of the court?
Sound drums and trumpets! farewell, sour annoy!

For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy.
[Exeunt.

SCENE,—ENGLAND.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Street.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lower'd upon our house
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments:
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now,—instead of mounting barbed steeds
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,—

He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.
But I,—that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's
majesty

To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionable
That dogs bark at me as I halt by them;—
Why, I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity:
And therefore,—since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair well-spoken days,—
I am determin'd to prove a villain,
And hate the idle pleasures of these days.
Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous,
By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence and the king
In deadly hate the one against the other:
And, if King Edward be as true and just
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd
up,—

About a prophecy, which says that G
Of Edward's heirs the murderer shall be.
Dive, thoughts, down to my soul:—here Clarence comes.

Enter CLARENCE, guarded, and BRANKENBURY.

Brother, good-day: what means this armed guard,
That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,
Tendering my person's safety, hath appointed
This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glo. Upon what cause?

Clar. Because my name is George.

Glo. Alack, my lord, that fault is none of
yours;

He should, for that, commit your godfathers:—
O, belike his majesty hath some intent
That you shall be new-christen'd in the Tower.
But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know?

Clar. Yea, Richard, when I know; for I protest

As yet I do not; but, as I can learn,
He hearkens after prophecies and dreams;
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G,
And says a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be;
And, for my name of George begins with G,
It follows in his thought that I am he.
These, as I learn, and such like toys as these,
Have mov'd his highness to commit me now.

Glo. Why, this it is, when men are rul'd by women:—

'Tis not the king that sends you to the Tower;
My Lady Grey, his wife, Clarence, 'tis she
That tempers him to this extremity.
Was it not she, and that good man of worship,
Antony Woodville, her brother there,
That made him send Lord Hastings to the Tower,

From whence this present day he is deliver'd?
We are not safe, Clarence; we are not safe.

Clar. By heaven, I think there is no man secure [heralds]

But the queen's kindred, and night-walking
That trudge betwixt the king and Mistress Shore.
Heard you not what an humble suppliant
Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.
I'll tell you what,—I think it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery:
The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentle-

women,

Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. [me;]

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon
His majesty hath straitly given in charge
That no man shall have private conference,
Of what degree soever, with his brother.

Glo. Even so; an please your worship, Brak-enbury,

You may partake of anything we say:
We speak no treason, man;—we say the king
Is wise and virtuous; and his noble queen
Well struck in years, fair, and not jealous;—
We say that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing
tongue;

And the queen's kindred are made gentlefolks:
How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have naught to do.

Glo. Naught to do with Mistress Shore! I tell thee, fellow,

He that doth naught with her, excepting one,
Were best to do it secretly, alone.

Brak. What one, my lord? [tray me?]

Glo. Her husband, knave:—wouldst thou be-

Brak. I beseech your grace to pardon me;
and, withal,

Forbear your conference with the noble duke.

Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey. [obey.—]

Glo. We are the queen's abjects, and must

Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;
And whatsoever you will employ me in,—

Were it to call King Edward's widow sister,—
I will perform it to enfranchise you.

Meantime, this deep disgrace in brotherhood
Touches me deeper than you can imagine.

Clar. I know it pleaseth neither of us well.

Glo. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long;

I will deliver you, or else lie for you:
Meantime, have patience.

Clar. I must perforce: farewell.

[Exeunt CLAR., BRAK., and Guard.]

Glo. Go, tread the path that thou shalt ne'er return,

Simple, plain Clarence!—I do love thee so
That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven,
If heaven will take the present at our hands.—
But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings?

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious
lord!

Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain!

Well are you welcome to this open air.

How hath your lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must:

But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too;

For they that were your enemies are his, And have prevail'd as much on him as you.

Hast. More pity that the eagle should be mew'd

While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Glo. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so bad abroad as this at home,—

The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy, And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glo. Now, by Saint Paul, this news is bad indeed.

O, he hath kept an evil diet long,

And overmuch consum'd his royal person:

'Tis very grievous to be thought upon.

What, is he in his bed?

Hast. He is.

Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you.

[Exit HASTINGS.]

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die Till George be pack'd with posthorse up to heaven.

I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence, With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments; And, if I fail not in my deep intent, Clarence hath not another day to live: Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,

And leave the world for me to bustle in!

For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter:

What though I kill'd her husband and her

The readiest way to make the wench amend

Is to become her husband and her father:

The which will I; not all so much for love

As for another secret close intent,

By marrying her, which I must reach unto.

But yet I run before my horse to market:

Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives and reigns:

When they are gone, then must I count my gains.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—LONDON. Another Street.

Enter the Corpse of KING HENRY THE SIXTH borne in an open coffin, Gentlemen bearing halberds to guard it; and LADY ANNE as mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load,—

If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,—

Whilst I awhile obsequiously lament

The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.—

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!

Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost,

To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,

Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,

Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds!

Lo, in these windows that let forth thy life,

I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes:—

O, cursed be the hand that made these holes!

Cursed the heart that had the heart to do it!

Cursed the blood that let this blood from hence!

More direful hap betide that hated wretch

That makes us wretched by the death of thee,

Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads,

Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives!

If ever he have child, abortive be it,

Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,

Whose ugly and unnatural aspect

May fright the hopeful mother at the view;

And that be heir to his unhappiness!

If ever he have wife, let her be made

More miserable by the death of him

Than I am made by my young lord and thee!—

Come, now towards Chertsey with your holy load,

Taken from Paul's to be interred there;

And still, as you are weary of the weight,

Rest you, whilst I lament King Henry's corse.

[The Bearers take up the Corpse and advance.]

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Stay, you that bear the corse, and set it down.

[fiend,]

Anne. What black magician conjures up this To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Glo. Villains, set down the corse; or, by Saint Paul,

I'll make a corse of him that disobeys!

Genl. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

[command:]

Glo. Unmanner'd dog! stand thou, when I

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast,

Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,

And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

[The Bearers set down the coffin.]

Anne. What, do you tremble? are you all afraid?

Alas, I blame you not; for you are mortal,

And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.—

Avaunt, thou dreadful minister of hell!

Thou hadst but power over his mortal body,

His soul thou canst not have; therefore, be gone.

Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curst.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not;

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell,

Fill'd it with cursing cries and deep exclaims.

If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,

Behold this pattern of thy butcheries.—

O, gentlemen, see, see! dead Henry's wounds

Open their congeal'd mouths and bleed afresh!

Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity;

For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood

From cold and empty veins, where no blood

dwells;

Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural,

Provokes this deluge most unnatural.—

O God, which this blood mad'st, revenge his death!

O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death!

[derer dead;]

Either, heaven, with lightning strike the mur-

Or, earth, gape open wide, and eat him quick,

As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered!

Glo. Lady, you know no rules of charity,
Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.

Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor man:

No beast so fierce but knows some touch of pity.
Glo. But I know none, and therefore am no beast. [truth!]

Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the Glo. More wonderful when angels are so angry.—

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed evils to give me leave,
By circumstance, but to acquit myself.

Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.

Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me have

Some patient leisure to excuse myself.

Anne. Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make

No excuse current, but to hang thyself.

Glo. By such despair I should accuse myself.

Anne. And by despairing shalt thou stand excus'd;

For doing worthy vengeance on thyself,
That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.

Glo. Say that I slew them not?

Anne. Then say they were not slain:

But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.
Glo. I did not kill your husband.

Anne. Why, then, he is alive.

Glo. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand.

Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest: Queen
Margaret saw

Thy murderous falchion smoking in his blood;
The which thou once didst bend against her
breast,

But that thy brothers beat aside the point.

Glo. I was provoked by her slanderous
tongue,

That laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody
mind,

That never dreamt on aught but butcheries:
Didst thou not kill this king?

Glo. I grant ye.

Anne. Dost grant me, hedgehog? then, God grant me too

Thou mayst be damned for that wicked deed!
O, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

Glo. The fitter for the King of Heaven, that hath him. [come.]

Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never Glo. Let him thank me, that help to send him thither;

For he was fitter for that place than earth.

Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell.

Glo. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me name it.

Anne. Some dungeon.

Glo. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou liest!

Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.

Anne. I hope so.

Glo. I know so.—But, gentle Lady Anne,—
To leave this keen encounter of our wits,
And fall somewhat into a slower method,—
Is not the causer of the timeless deaths
Of these Plantagenets, Henry and Edward,

As blameful as the executioner? [effect.]

Anne. Thou wast the cause and most accurs'd

Glo. Your beauty was the cause of that effect;

Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep

To undertake the death of all the world,

So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.

Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,

These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. [wreck;—]

Glo. These eyes could not endure that beauty's
You should not blemish it if I stood by:

As all the world is cheer'd by the sun,

So I by that; it is my day, my life.

Anne. Black night o'er shade thy day, and death thy life! [both.]

Glo. Curse not thyself, fair creature; thou art

Anne. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.

Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,

To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.

Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,

To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my husband.

Glo. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,

Did it to help thee to a better husband.

Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth. [could.]

Glo. He lives that loves thee better than he

Anne. Name him.

Glo. Plantagenet.

Anne. Why, that was he.

Glo. The self-same name, but one of better nature.

Anne. Where is he?

Glo. Here. [She spits at him.] Why dost thou spit at me? [sake!]

Anne. Would it were mortal poison, for thy Glo. Never came poison from so sweet a place.

Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.
Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.

Glo. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected
mine.

Anne. Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead! [once;]

Glo. I would they were, that I might die at
For now they kill me with a living death.

Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt
tears, [drops;]

Sham'd their aspects with store of childish
These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear,

No, when my father York and Edward wept,
To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made

When black-fac'd Clifford shook his sword at
him;

Nor when thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,

And twenty times made pause, to sob and weep,
That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,

Like trees bedash'd with rain; in that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;

And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,

Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping.

I never su'd to friend nor enemy;

My tongue could never learn sweet smoothing word;

But, now thy beauty is propos'd my fee,
My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to speak. [She looks scornfully at him.]

Teach not thy lip such scorn; for it was made
For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.
If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo, here I lend thee thus sharp-pointed sword;
Which if thou please to hide in this true breast,
And let the soul forth that adareth thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
And humbly beg the death upon my knee.

Nay, do not pause; for I did kill King Henry,—
[He lays his breast open; she offers at it with his sword.]

But 'twas thy beauty that provoked me.
Nay, now despatch; 'twas I that stabb'd young Edward,—

[She again offers at his breast.]
But 'twas thy heavenly face that set me on.

[She lets fall the sword.]
Take up the sword again, or take up me.

Anne. Arise, dissembler: though I wish thy
death,

I will not be thy executioner.

Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.

Anne. I have already.

Glo. That was in thy rage:

Speak it again, and, even with the word,

This hand, which for thy love did kill thy love,

Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love;

To both their deaths shalt thou be accessory.

Anne. I would I knew your heart.

Glo. 'Tis figured in my tongue.

Anne. I fear me both are false.

Glo. Then never man was true.

Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.

Glo. Say, then, my peace is made.

Anne. That shalt thou know hereafter.

Glo. But shall I live in hope?

Anne. All men, I hope, live so.

Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.

Anne. To take is not to give.

[She puts on the ring.]

Glo. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy finger,

Even so thy breast encloseth my poor heart;

Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.

And if thy poor devoted servant may

But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,

Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.

Anne. What is it? [designs]

Glo. That it may please you leave these sad

To him that hath more cause to be a mourner,

And presently repair to Crosby Place;

Where,—after I have solemnly interr'd, &

At Chertsey monastery, this noble king,

And wet his grave with my repentant tears,—

I will with all expedient duty see you:

For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you,

Grant me this boon. [me too]

Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys

To see you become so penitent.—

Tressel and Berkeley, go along with me.

Glo. Bid me farewell.

Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve;

But since you teach me how to flatter you,

Imagine I have said farewell already.

[Exeunt LADY ANNE, TRESS, and BERK.]

Glo. Sirs, take up the corse.

Gent. Towards Chertsey, noble lord?

Glo. No, to White Friars, there attend my coming.

[Exeunt the rest, with the Corpe.]

Was ever woman in this humour woo'd?

Was ever woman in this humour won?

I'll have her; but I will not keep her long.

What! I, that kill'd her husband and his father,

To take her in her heart's extremest hate;

With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,

The bleeding witness of her hatred by;

Having God, her conscience, and these bars

against me,

And I no friends to back my suit withal,

But the plain devil and dissembling looks,

And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing!

Ha!

Hath she forgot already that brave prince,

Edward, her lord, whom I, some three months since,

Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury?

A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,—

Fram'd in the prodigality of nature,

Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right

royal,—

The spacious world cannot again afford:

And will she yet abase her eyes on me,

That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet

prince,

And made her widow to a woeful bed?

On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?

On me, that halt and am mishapen thus?

My dukedom to a beggarly denier,

I do mistake my person all this while:

Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,

Myself to be a marvellous proper man.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass;

And entertain a score or two of tailors,

To study fashions to adorn my body:

Since I am crept in favour with myself,

I will maintain it with some little cost.

But first I'll turn you fellow in his grave;

And then return lamenting to my love.—

Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a

That I may see my shadow as I pass.

SCENE III.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, LORD RIVERS and LORD GREY.

Riv. Hav patience, madam: there's no doubt his majesty

Will soon recover his accustom'd health.

Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse: [fort]

Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good com-

And cheer his grace with quick and merry

words.

Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide

on me?

Grey. No other harm but loss of such a lord.

Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms. [goodly son]

Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a

To be your comfort when he is gone.

Q. Eliz. Ah, he is young and his minority

Is put unto the trust of Richard Gloster,

A man that loves not me, nor none of you.

Riv. Is it concluded he shall be protector?

Q. Eliz. It is determin'd, not concluded yet: But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and STANLEY.

Grey. Here come the Lords of Buckingham and Stanley. [grace!]

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been!

Q. Eliz. The Countess Richmond, good my Lord of Stanley,

To your good prayer will scarcely say amen. Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife, And loves not me, be you, good lord, assur'd I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe The envious slanders of her false accusers; Or, if she be accus'd on true report, Bear with her weakness, which I think proceeds From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice. [of Stanley?]

Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my Lord Stan. But now the Duke of Buckingham and I Are come from visiting his majesty. [lords?]

Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully.

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you confer with him? [ment]

Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement Between the Duke of Gloster and your brothers, And between them and my lord chamberlain; And sent to warn them to his royal presence.

Q. Eliz. Would all were well!—but that will never be:

I fear our happiness is at the height.

Enter GLOSTER, HASTINGS, and DORSET.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it:—

Who are they that complain unto the king That I, forsooth, am stern, and love them not? By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly That fill his ears with such dessentious rumours. Because I cannot flatter and speak fair, Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog, Duck with French nods and apish courtesies, I must be held a rancorous enemy. Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm, But thus his simple truth must be abus'd By slyken, sly insinuating Jacks? [your grace?]

Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty nor grace. When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong?—

Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction? A plague upon you all! His royal grace,— Whom God preserve better than you would wish!—

Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing while, But you must trouble him with lewd complaints. [matter.]

Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the The king, on his own royal disposition, And not provok'd by any suitor else— Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred, That in your outward action shows itself Against my children, brothers, and myself—

Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.

Glo. I cannot tell: the world is grown so bad, That wrens may prey where eagles dare not perch:

Since every Jack became a gentleman, There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Q. Eliz. Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloster;

You envy my advancement, and my friends'; God grant we never may have need of you!

Glo. Meantime, God grants that we have need of you:

Our brother is imprison'd by your means, Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility Held in contempt; while great promotions Are daily given to ennoble those That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. [height]

Q. Eliz. By Him that rais'd me to this careful From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,

I never did increase his majesty Against the Duke of Clarence, but have been An earnest advocate to plead for him.

My lord, you do me shameful injury, Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Glo. You may deny that you were not the mean

Of my Lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Riv. She may, my lord; for,— [not so?]

Glo. Shemay, Lord Rivers?—why, who knows She may do more, sir, than denying that:

She may help you to many fair preferences; And then deny her aiding hand therein,

And lay those honours on your high desert. What may she not? She may,—ay, marry, may she,—

Riv. What, marry, may she? [king,]

Glo. What, marry, may she! marry with a A bachelor, a handsome stripling too:

I wis your grandam had a worse match.

Q. Eliz. My Lord of Gloster, I have too long borne

Your blunt upbraidings and your bitter scoffs: By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty

Of those gross taunts that oft I have endur'd.

I had rather be a country servant-maid Than a great queen, with this condition,—

To be so baited, scorn'd, and stormed at.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, behind.

Small joy have I in being England's queen.

Q. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech Him!

Thy honour, state, and seat is due to me.

Glo. What! threaten you me with telling of the king?

Tell him, and spare not: look, what I have said I will avouch in presence of the king:

I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.

Is time to speak,—my pains are quite forgot.

Q. Mar. Out, devil! I remember them too well:

Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower, And Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury.

Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,

I was a pack-horse in his great affairs;

A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,

A liberal rewarder of his friends:

To royalize his blood I spilt mine own.

Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his or thine. [band Grey

Glo. In all which time you and your husband
Were factious for the house of Lancaster;—
And, Rivers, so were you: was not your husband
In Margaret's battle at Saint Albans slain?

Let me put in your minds, if you forget,
What you have been ere this, and what you are;
Withal, what I have been, and what I am.

Q. Mar. A murderous villain, and so still thou art. [Warwick;

Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father,
Ay, and forswore himself—which Jesu pardon!

Q. Mar. Which God revenge! [crown;

Glo. To fight on Edward's party, for the
And for his meed, poor lord, he is mew'd up.
I would to God my heart were flint, like Edward's,

Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine:
I am too childish-foolish for this world.

Q. Mar. Kie thee to hell for shame, and leave this world,

Thou cacodemon! there thy kingdom is.

Riv. My Lord of Gloster, in those busy days
Which here you urge to prove us enemies,
We follow'd then our lord, our sovereign king:
So should we you, if you should be our king.

Glo. If I should be!—I had rather be a pedlar:

Far be it from my heart, the thought thereof!

Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose You should enjoy, were you this country's
king,—

As little joy you may suppose in me,

That I enjoy, being queen thereof. [of;

Q. Mar. As little joy enjoys the queen there-
For I am she, and altogether joyless.

I can no longer hold me patient.— [Advancing.
Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill'd from me!
Which of you trembles not that looks on me?

If not that, I being queen, you bow like subjects, [rebels?—

Yet that, by you depos'd, you quake like
Ah, gentle villain, do not turn away!

Glo. Foul wrinkled witch, what mak'st thou in my sight? [marr'd,

Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast
That will I make before I let thee go.

Glo. Wert thou not banished on pain of death?

Q. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in banishment

Than death can yield me here by my abode.

A husband and a son thou ow'st to me,—
And thou, a kingdom,—all of you allegiance:
Thus sorrow that I have, by right is yours;
And all the pleasures you usurp are mine.

Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,
When thou didst crown his warlike brows with paper, [eyes;

And with thy scorns drew'st rivers from his
And then, to dry them, gav'st the duke a clout Steep'd in the faultless blood of pretty Rut-
land;—

His curses, then from bitterness of soul [thee;
Denounc'd against thee, are all fallen upon
And God, not we, hath plagu'd thy bloody deed.

Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.

Hast. O, 'twas the foulest deed to slay that babe,

And the most merciless that e'er was heard of.
Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.

Dor. No man but prophesied revenge for it.

Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it. [I came,

Q. Mar. What, were you snarling all before
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me?

Did York's dread curse prevail so much with heaven

That Henry's death, my lovely Edward's death,
Their kingdom's loss, my woeful banishment,
Could all but answer for that peevish brat?
Can curses pierce the clouds and enter heaven?—
Why, then, give way, dull clouds, to my quick curses!—

Though not by war, by surfeit die your king,
As ours by murder, to make him a king!
Edward thy son, that now is Prince of Wales,
For Edward my son, that was Prince of Wales,
Die in his youth by like untimely violence!

Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,
Outlive thy glory, like my wretched self!

Long mayst thou live to wail thy children's loss;
And see another, as I see thee now,

Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine!
Long die thy happy days before thy death;

And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief,
Dieneither mother, wife, nor England's queen!—

Rivers and Dorset, you were standers by,—
And so wast thou, Lord Hastings,—when my son [him,

Was stabb'd with bloody daggers: God, I pray
That none of you may live your natural age,

But by some unlook'd accident cut off!
Glo. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wither'd hag.

Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me.

If heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,

O, let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation

On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace!
The worm of conscience still be-gnaw thy soul!

Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv'st,
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!

No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be while some tormenting dream

Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils!
Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog!

Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature and the son of hell!

Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!

Thou rag of honour! thou detested—
Glo. Margaret.

Q. Mar. Richard!

Glo. Ha!

Q. Mar. I call thee not.

Glo. I cry thee mercy, then; for I did think
That thou hadst call'd me all those bitter names.

Q. Mar. Why, so I did; but look'd for no reply.

O, let me make the period to my curse!

Glo. 'Tis done by me, and ends in—Margaret.

Q. Eliz. Thus have you breath'd your curse against yourself.

Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my fortune!

Why strew'st thou sugar on that bottled spider,
Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about?
Fool, fool! thou whett'st a knife to kill thyself.
The day will come that thou shalt wish for me
To help thee curse this poisonous bunch-back'd toad.

Hast. False-boding woman, end thy frantic curse,

Lest to thy harm thou move our patience.

Q. Mar. Foul shame upon you! you have all mov'd mine.

Riv. Were you well serv'd, you would be taught your duty. [me duty.]

Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do
Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects:

O, serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty!

Dor. Dispute not with her,—she is lunatic.

Q. Mar. Peace, master marquis, you are malapert:

Your fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current:

O, that your young nobility could judge
What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable!

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;

And if they fall they dash themselves to pieces.

Glo. Good counsel, marry:—learn it, learn it, marquis.

Dor. It touches you, my lord, as much as me.

Glo. Ay, and much more: but I was born so high

Our airy buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade;—alas! alas!—

Witness my son, now in the shade of death;
Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath

Hath in eternal darkness folded up.

Your airy buildeth in our airy's nest:—

O God, that see'st it, do not suffer it;

As it was won with blood, lost be it so!

Buck. Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity. [me:]

Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd.

My charity is outrage, life my shame,—
And in my shame still live my sorrow's rage!

Buck. Have done, have done.

[hand]

Q. Mar. O princely Buckingham, I'll kiss thy
In sign of league and amity with thee:

Now fair befell thee and thy noble house!

Thy garments are not spotted with our blood,

Nor thou within the compass of my curse.

Buck. Nor no one here; for curses never pass
The lips of those that breathe them in the air.

Q. Mar. I will not think but they ascend the sky,

And there awake God's gentle sleeping peace.
O Buckingham, take heed of yonder dog!

Look, when he fawns he bites; and when he bites,

His venom tooth will rankle to the death:
Have not to do with him, beware of him;

Sin, death, and hell have set their marks on him,

And all their ministers attend on him.

Glo. What doth she say, my Lord of Buckingham? [lord.]

Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious

Q. Mar. What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?

And soothe the devil that I warn thee from?

O, but remember this another day,

When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow,

And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess!—

Live each of you the subjects to his hate,

And he to yours, and all of you to God's!

Hast. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses. [liberty.]

Riv. And so doth mine: I muse why she's at

Glo. I cannot blame her: by God's holy mother,

She hath had too much wrong; and I repent

My part thereof that I have done her.

Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge.

Glo. Yet you have all the vantage to her wrong.

I was too hot to do somebody good,

That is too cold in thinking of it now.

Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repaid;

He is frank'd up to fattening for his pains;

God pardon them that are the cause thereof!

Riv. A virtuous and a Christian-like conclusion,

To pray for them that have done scathe to us.

Glo. So do I ever, being well advis'd;

For had I curs'd now, I had curs'd myself.

[Aside.]

Enter CATESBY.

Cates. Madam, his majesty doth call for you,—

And for your grace,—and you, my noble lords.

Q. Eliz. Catesby, I come.—Lords, will you go with me?

Riv. We wait upon your grace.

[Exeunt all but GLOSTER.]

Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl.

The secret mischiefs that I set abroad

I lay unto the grievous charge of others. [ness,

Clarence,—whom I, indeed, have cast in dark-

I do beweepe to many simple gulls;

Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;

And tell them 'tis the queen and her allies

That stir the king against the duke my brother.

Now, they believe it; and withal what me

To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey;

But then I sigh; and, with a piece of Scripture,

Tell them that God bids us do good for evil:

And thus I clothe my naked villainy

With odd old ends stol'n forth of holy writ;

And seem a saint when most I play the devil.—

But, soft! here come my executioners.

Enter two Murderers.

How now, my hardy, stout-resolved mates!

Are you now going to despatch this thing?

1 Murd. We are, my lord, and come to have the warrant,

That we may be admitted where he is.

Glo. Well thought upon;—I have it here about me: [Gives the warrant.]

When you have done, repair to Crosby Place.

But, sirs, be sudden in the execution,

Withal obdurate, do not hear him plead;

For Clarence is well-spoken, and perhaps

May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him.

1 Mird. Tut, tut, my lord, we will not stand to prate;

Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd

We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Glo. Your eyes drop millstones when fools' eyes fall tears:

I like you, lads;—about your business straight;

Go, go, despatch.

1 Mird. We will, my noble lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Room in the Tower.

Enter CLARENCE and BRAKENBURY.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

Clar. O, I have pass'd a miserable night, So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights, That, as I am a Christian faithful man, I would not spend another such a night Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days,— So full of dismal terror was the time!

Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell me. [Tower.]

Clar. Methought that I had broken from the And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy; And, in my company, my brother Gloucester; Who from my cabin tempted me to walk Upon the hatches: thence we look'd toward England,

And cited up a thousand heavy times, During the wars of York and Lancaster, That had befall'n us. As we pac'd along Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, Methought that Gloucester stumbled; and, in falling, [board]

Struck me, that thought to stay him, over- Into the tumbling billows of the main.

O Lord! methought what pain it was to drown!

What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!

What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!

Methought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;

A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;

Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,

Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels,

All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea: [holes]

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those

Where eyes did once inhabit there were crept,—

As 'twere in scorn of eyes,—reflecting gems,

That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep,

And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Brak. Had you such leisure in the time of death

To gaze upon the secrets of the deep? [strive]

Clar. Methought I had; and often did I

To yield the ghost: but still the envious flood

Stopp'd in my soul, and would not let it forth

To find the empty, vast, and wandering air;

But smother'd it within my panting bulk,

Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not with this sore agony?

Clar. No, no, my dream was lengthen'd after life;

O, then began the tempest of my soul!

I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood

With that grim ferryman which poets write of,

Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The first that there did greet my stranger soul

Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick;

Who cried aloud, What scourge for perjury

Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?

And so he vanish'd: then came wandering by

A shadow like an Angel, with bright hair

Dabbled in blood; and he shriek'd out aloud,

Clarence is come,—false, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence,—

That stabb'd me in the field by Tewksbury;—

Seize on him, Furies, take him to your torments!

With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends

Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries that, with the very noise,

I trembling wak'd, and for a season after

Could not believe but that I was in hell,—

Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brak. No marvel, lord, though it affrighted

you;

I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. O Brakenbury, I have done those things

That now give evidence against my soul,

For Edward's sake; and see how he requites me!— [thee,]

O God! If my deep prayers cannot appease

But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,

Yet execute thy wrath in me alone,—

O, spare my guiltless wife and my poor children!—

Keeper, I pr'ythee, sit by me awhile;

My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

Brak. I will, my lord; God give your grace good rest!—

[CLARENCE reposes himself on a chair.]

Sorrow breaks seasons and reposing hours.

Makes the night morning, and the noontide

night.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,

An outward honour for an inward toil:

And, for unfelt imaginations

They often feel a world of restless cares:

So that, between their titles and low name,

There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter the two Murderers.

1 Mird. Ho! who's here?

Brak. What wouldst thou, fellow? and how cam'st thou hither?

1 Mird. I would speak with Clarence, and I came hither on my legs.

Brak. What, so brief?

2 Mird. 'Tis better, sir, than to be tedious.—

Let him see our commission; talk no more.

[A paper is delivered to BRAK. who reads it.]

Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver

The noble Duke of Clarence to your hands:—

I will not reason what is meant hereby,

Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.

There lies the duke asleep,—and there the keys;

I'll to the king, and signify to him

That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

1 Mird. You may, sir; 'tis a point of wisdom: fare you well. [Exit BRAKENBURY.]

2 Mird. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?

2 Murd. No; he'll say 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Murd. When he wakes! why, fool, he shall never wake until the great judgment-day.

1 Murd. Why, then he'll say we stabb'd him sleeping.

2 Murd. The urging of that word judgment hath bred a kind of remorse in me.

1 Murd. What, art thou afraid?

2 Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant for it; but to be damned for killing him, from the which no warrant can defend me.

1 Murd. I thought thou hadst been resolute.

2 Murd. So I am, to let him live.

1 Murd. I'll back to the Duke of Gloster, and tell him so.

2 Murd. Nay, I prythee, stay a little: I hope my holy humour will change; it was wont to hold me but while one tells twenty.

1 Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now?

2 Murd. Faith, some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me.

1 Murd. Remember our reward, when the deed's done.

2 Murd. Zounds, he dies: I had forgot the reward.

1 Murd. Where's thy conscience now?

2 Murd. In the Duke of Gloster's purse.

1 Murd. So, when he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out.

2 Murd. 'Tis no matter; let it go; there's few or none will entertain it.

1 Murd. What if it come to thee again?

2 Murd. I'll not meddle with it,—it makes a man a coward; a man cannot steal, but it accuseth him; a man cannot swear, but it checks him; a man cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, but it detects him: 'tis a blushing shame-faced spirit that mutinies in a man's bosom; it fills one full of obstacles: it made me once restore a purse of gold that by chance I found; it beggars any man that keeps it: it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man that means to live well endeavours to trust to himself and live without it.

1 Murd. Zounds, it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.

2 Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee but to make thee sigh.

1 Murd. I am strong-framed, he cannot prevail with me.

Murd. Spoke like a tall fellow that respects his reputation. Come, shall we fall to work! 1 Murd. Take him on the costard with the hilts of thy sword, and then throw him into the malmsey-butt in the next row.

2 Murd. O excellent device! and make a sop of him.

1 Murd. Soft! he wakes.

2 Murd. Strike!

1 Murd. No, we'll reason with him.

Clar. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of wine.

1 Murd. You shall have wine enough, my lord, anon.

Clar. In God's name, what art thou?

1 Murd. A man, as you are.

Clar. But not, as I am, royal.

1 Murd. Nor you, as we are, loyal.

Clar. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are humble.

1 Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks mine own.

Clar. How darkly and how deadly dost thou Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale? Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

Both Murd. To, to, to,— Clar. To murder me?

Both Murd. Ay, ay.

Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it. Wherein, my friends, have I offended you?

1 Murd. Offended us you have not, but the king.

Clar. I shall be reconcil'd to him again.

2 Murd. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to die.

Clar. Are you drawn forth among a world of To slay the innocent? What is my offence? What is the evidence that doth accuse me?

Where lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge? or who pronounce'd The bitter sentence of poor Clarence's death?

Before I be convict by course of law, To threaten me with death is most unlawful.

I charge you, as you hope to have redemption By Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous sins,

That you depart, and lay no hands on me:

The deed you undertake is damnable.

1 Murd. What we will do, we do upon command.

2 Murd. And he that hath commanded is our king.

Clar. Erroneous vassals! the great King of Hath in the table of his law commanded

That thou shalt do no murder: will you then Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?

Take heed, for he holds vengeance in his hand, To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee

For false forswearing, and for murder too: Thou didst receive the sacrament to fight

In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.

1 Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God,

Didst break that vow; and with thy traitor's blade Unripp'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son.

2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend.

1 Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law to us,

When thou hast broke it in such dear degree? Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?

For Edward, for my brother, for his sake: He sends you not to murder me for this;

For in that sin he is as deep as I. If God will be avenged for the deed,

O, know you yet, he doth it publicly: Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;

He needs no indirect nor lawless course To cut off those that have offended him.

1 Murd. Who made thee, then, a bloody minister

When gallant-springing brave Plantagenet, That princely novice, was struck dead by thee?

Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage

1 Murd. Thy brother's love, our duty, and Provoke us hither now to slaughter thee.

Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me; I am his brother, and I love him well. If you are hir'd for meed, go back again, And I will send you to my brother Gloster, Who shall reward you better for my life Than Edward will for tidings on my death.

2 Murd. You are deceiv'd, your brother Gloster hates you. [dear:

Clar. O, no, he loves me, and he holds me Go you to him from me.

Both Murd. Ay, so we will.

Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father York

Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm, And charg'd us from his soul to love each other, He little thought of this divided friendship: Bid Gloster think on this, and he will weep.

1 Murd. Ay, millstones; as he lesson'd us to weep.

Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.

1 Murd. Right as snow in harvest.—Come, you deceive yourself:

'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.

Clar. It cannot be; for he bewep't my fortune, And hugg'd me in his arms, and swore, with sobs,

That he would labour my delivery.

1 Murd. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you

From this earth's thralldom to the joys of heaven.

2 Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.

Clar. Have you that holy feeling in your souls, To counsel me to make my peace with God, And are you yet to your own souls so blind That you will war with God by murdering me?—O, sirs, consider, they that set you on To do this deed will hate you for the deed.

2 Murd. What shall we do?

Clar. Relent, and save your souls.

1 Murd. Relent! 'tis cowardly and womanish. [ish.

Clar. Not to relent is beastly, savage, devil-Which of you, if you were a prince's son, Being pent from liberty, as I am now,—If two such murderers as yourselves came to you,—

Would not entreat for life?—

My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks;

O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,

Come thou on my side, and entreat for me,

As you would beg, were you in my distress:

A begging prince what beggar pities not?

2 Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

1 Murd. Take that, and that: if all this will not do, [Stabs him.

I'll drown you in the malmsey-butt within. [Exit with the body.

2 Murd. A bloody deed, and desperately despatch'd!

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Re-enter First Murderer.

1 Murd. How now, what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not?

By heaven, the duke shall know how slack you have been. [brother!

2 Murd. I would he knew that I had sav'd his Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say; For I repent me that the duke is slain. [Exit.

1 Murd. So do not I: go, coward as thou art.—

Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole,

Till that the duke give order for his burial:

And when I have my meed, I will away;

For this will out, and then I must not stay. [Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING EDWARD, led in sick: QUEEN ELIZABETH, DORSET, RIVERS, HASTINGS, BUCKINGHAM, GREY, and others.

K. Edw. Why, so;—now have I done a good day's work:—

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy

From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence;

And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,

Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.

Rivers and Hastings, take each other's hand;

Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudging hate;

And with my hand I seal my true heart's love.

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like!

K. Edw. Take heed you dally not before your king;

Lest he that is the supreme King of kings

Confound your hidden falsehood, and award

Either of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love!

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart!

K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt from this,—

Nor you, son Dorset,—Buckingham, nor you;—

You have been factious one against the other.

Wife, love Lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;

And what you do, do it unfeignedly.

Q. Eliz. There, Hastings; I will never more remember

Our former hatred, so thrive I and mine!

K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him;—Hastings, love lord marquis.

Dor. This interchange of love I here protest, Upon my part shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I. [Embraces DORSET.

K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this league

With thy embracements to my wife's allies,

And make me happy in your unity. [hate

Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his Upon your grace [to the QUEEN], but with all

duteous love

Doth cherish you and yours, God punish me

With hate in those where I expect most love!

When I have most need to employ a friend,

And most assured that he is a friend,

Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,

Be he unto me!—this do I beg of heaven

When I am cold in love to you or yours. [Embracing RIVERS, &c.

K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham,

Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart.

There wanteth now our brother Gloster here,
To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble duke.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Good-morrow to my sovereign king and queen;

And, princely peers, a happy time of day!

K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the day.

Gloster, we have done deeds of charity;

Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate,

Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.

Glo. A blessed labour, my most sovereign lord.—

Among this princely heap, if any here,

By false intelligence or wrong surmise,

Hold me a foe;

If I unwittingly, or in my rage,

Have aught committed that is hardly borne

By any in this presence, I desire

To reconcile me to his friendly peace:

'Tis death to me to be at enmity;

I hate it, and desire all good men's love.—

First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,

Which I will purchase with my dutious service;—

Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham,

If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us;—

Of you, and you, Lord Rivers, and of Dorset,

That all without desert have frown'd on me;

Of you, Lord Woodville, and, Lord Scales, of you;—

Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen;—indeed, of

I do not know that Englishman alive

With whom my soul is any jot at odds

More than the infant that is born to-night:

I thank my God for my humility. [after:—]

Q. Eliz. A holiday shall this be kept here—
I would to God all strifes were well compounded.—

My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness
To take our brother Clarence to your grace.

Glo. Why, madam, have I offer'd love for this,

To be so flouted in this royal presence?

Who knows not that the gentle duke is dead?

[They all start.]

You do him injury to scorn his coise.

K. Edw. Who knows not he is dead! who knows he is? [thus!]

Q. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is Buck. Look I so pale, Lord Dorset, as the rest?

Dor. Ay, my lord; and no man in the presence

But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks.

K. Edw. Is Clarence dead? the order was revers'd.

Glo. But he, poor man, by your first order died,

And that a winged Mercury did bear;

Some tardy cripple bore the countermand

That came too lag to see him buried.

God grant that some, less noble and less loyal,

Nearer in bloody thoughts, but not in blood,

Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,

And yet go current from suspicion!

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done! [sorrow.]

K. Edw. I pry'thee, peace: my soul is full of Stan. I will not rise unless your highness hear me. [quest'st.]

K. Edw. Then say at once what is it thou re-

Stan. The forfeit, sovereign, of my servant's life;

Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman

Lately attendant on the Duke of Norfolk.

K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,

And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave?

My brother kill'd no man,—his fault was thought,

And yet his punishment was bitter death.

Who su'd to me for him? who, in my wrath,

Kneel'd at my feet, and bid me be advis'd?

Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?

Who told me how the poor soul did forsake

The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me?

Who told me, in the field of Tewksbury,

When Oxford had me down, he rescu'd me,

And said, Dear brother, live, and be a king?

Who told me, when we both lay in the field

Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me

Even in his garments, and did give himself,

All thin and naked, to the numb-cold night?

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath

Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you

Had so much grace to put it in my mind.

But when your carters or your waiting-vassals

Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd

The precious image of our dear Redeemer,

You straight are on your knees for pardon

pardon;

And I, unjustly too, must grant it you:—

But for my brother not a man would speak,—

Nor I, ungracious, speak unto myself

For him, poor soul. The proudest of you all

Have been beholden to him in his life;

Yet none of you would once beg for his life.—

O God, I fear thy justice will take hold

On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this!

Come, Hastings, help me to my closet.

Ah, poor Clarence!

[Exeunt KING, QUEEN, HAST., RIV.,

DOR., and GREY.]

Glo. This is the fruit of rashness!—Mark'd you not

How that the guilty kindred of the queen

Look'd pale when they did hear of Clarence'

death?

O, they did urge it still unto the king!

God will revenge it.—Come, lords, will you go

To comfort Edward with our company?

Buck. We wait upon your grace. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another Room in the Palace.

Enter the DUCHESS OF YORK, with a Son and Daughter of CLARENCE.

Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?

Duch. No, boy. [your breast.]

Daugh. Why do you weep so oft, and beat
And cry, O Clarence, my unhappy son!

Son. Why do you look on us, and shake your head,

And call us orphans, wretches, castaways,
If that our noble father be alive? [both;

Duch. My pretty cousins, you mistake me
I do lament the sickness of the king.
As loth to lose him, not your father's death;
It were lost sorrow to wail one that's lost.

Son. Then you conclude, my grandam, he is dead.

The king mine uncle is to blame for this:
God will revenge it; whom I will importune
With earnest prayers all to that effect.

Daugh. And so will I.

Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth love you well:

Incapable and shallow innocents, [death.
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's

Son. Grandam, we can; for my good uncle Gloster

Told me, the king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Devis'd impeachments to imprison him:

And when my uncle told me so, he wept,
And pitied me, and kindly kiss'd my cheek

Bade me rely on him as on my father,
And he would love me dearly as his child.

Duch. Ah, that deceit should steal such gentle shape,

And with a virtuous visard hide deep vice!

He is my son; ay, and therein my shame;

Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit.

Son. Think you my uncle did dissemble, grandam?

Duch. Ay, boy.

[this?

Son. I cannot think it.—Hark! what noise is

Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH, distractedly;
RIVERS and DORSET following her.

Q. Eliz. Ah, who shall hinder me to wail and weep,

To chide my fortune, and torment myself?

I'll join with black despair against my soul,

And to myself become an enemy. [patience?

Duch. What means this scene of rude im-

Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence:

Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead.—

Why grow the branches when the root is gone?

Why wither not the leaves that want their sap?—

If you will live, lament; if die, be brief,

That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's;

Or, like obedient subjects, follow him

To his new kingdom of perpetual rest. [row

Duch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sor-

As I had title in thy noble husband!

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,

And liv'd by looking on his images:

But now two mirrors of his princely semblance

Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death,

And I for comfort have but one false glass,

That grieves me when I see my shame in him.

Thou art a widow; yet thou art a mother,

And hast the comfort of thy children left:

But death hath snatch'd my husband from mine arms, [hands,—

And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble

Clarence and Edward. O, what cause have

I,—

Thine being but a moiety of my moan,—
To overgo thy woes and drown thy cries?

Son. Ah, aunt, you wept not for our father's death!

How can we aid you with our kindred tears?

Daugh. Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,

Your widow-dolour likewise be unwept!

Q. Eliz. Give me no help in lamentation;

I am not barren to bring forth complaints:

All springs reduce thy currents to mine eyes,

That I, being govern'd by the watery moon,

May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world!

Ah for my husband, for my dear Lord Edward!

Chil. Ah for our father, for our dear Lord

Clarence!

Duch. Alas for both, both mine, Edward and

Q. Eliz. What stay had I but Edward? and he's gone.

[he's gone.

Chil. What stay had we but Clarence? and Duch. What stays had I but they? and they are gone.

Q. Eliz. Was never widow had so dear a loss!

Chil. Were never orphans had so dear a loss?

Duch. Was never mother had so dear a loss!

Alas, I am the mother of these griefs!

Their woes are parcell'd, mine are general.

She for an Edward weeps, and so do I;

I for a Clarence weep, so doth not she:

These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I;

I for an Edward weep, so do not they:—

Alas, you three, on me, threefold distress'd,

Pour all your tears! I am your sorrow's nurse,

And I will pamper it with lamentation.

Dor. Comfort, dear mother: God is much displeas'd

That you take with unthankfulness his doing;

In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful,

With dull unwillingness to repay a debt

Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;

Much more to be thus opposite with heaven,

For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

Riv. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother,

[for him;

Of the young prince your son: send straight

Let him be crown'd; in him your comfort lives:

Drown desperate sorrow in dead Edward's grave,

And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY,
HASTINGS, RATCLIFF, and others.

Glo. Sister, have comfort: all of us have

cause

To wail the dunning of our shining star;

But none can cure their harms by wailing

them.—

Madam, my mother, I do cry you mercy;

I did not see your grace:—humbly on my knee

I crave your blessing. [thy breast,

Duch. God bless thee; and put meekness in Love, charity, obedience, and true duty.

Glo. Amen; and make me die a good old

man!—

That is the butt end of a mother's blessing;

I marvel that her grace did leave it out. [Aside.

Buck. You cloudy princes and heart-sorrowing peers,

That bear this heavy mutual load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other's love:
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.
The broken rancour of your high-swoln hearts,
But lately splinter'd, knit, and join'd together,
Must gently be preserv'd, cherish'd, and kept:
Me seemeth good that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be fet
Hither to London, to be crown'd our king.

Riv. Why with some little train, my Lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break
out,

Which would be so much the more dangerous
By how much the estate is green and yet un-govern'd:

Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented. [us]

Glo. I hope the king made peace with all of
And the compact is firm and true in me.

Riv. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach,
Which haply by much company might be urg'd:
Therefore I say with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Glo. Then be it so; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that straight shall post to Ludlow.

Madam,—and you, my mother,—will you go
To give your censures in this business?

[Exeunt all but BUCK. and GLO.]

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,

For God's sake, let not us two stay at home;
For by the way I'll sort occasion,
As index to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the queen's proud kindred from the prince.

Glo. My other self, my counsel's consistory,
My oracle, my prophet!—my dear cousin,
I, as a child, will go by thy direction.
Toward Ludlow then, for we'll not stay behind.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—LONDON. A Street.

Enter two Citizens, meeting.

1 Cit. Good-morrow, neighbour: whither away so fast?

2 Cit. I promise you, I scarcely know myself:
Hear you the news abroad?

1 Cit. Yes,—that the king is dead.

2 Cit. Ill news, by'r lady; seldom comes the better:

I fear, I fear, 'twill prove a giddy world.

Enter a third Citizen.

3 Cit. Neighbours, God speed!

1 Cit. Give you good-morrow, sir.

3 Cit. Doth the news hold of good King Edward's death? [while!]

2 Cit. Ay, sir, it is too true; God help, the

3 Cit. Then, masters, look to see a troublous
world.

1 Cit. No, no; by God's grace, his son shall reign. [a child!]

3 Cit. Woe to that land that's govern'd by
2 Cit. In him there is a hope of government,

Which, in his nonage, council under him,
And, in his full and ripen'd years, himself,
No doubt, shall then, and till then, govern well.

1 Cit. So stood the state when Henry the Sixth

Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old.

3 Cit. Stood the state so? No, no, good friends, God wot;

For then this land was famously enrich'd
With politic grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

1 Cit. Why, so hath this, both by his father and mother. [father,

3 Cit. Better it were they all came by his
Or by his father there were none at all;
For emulation now, who shall be nearest,
Will touch us all too near if God prevent not.
O, full of danger is the Duke of Gloster!

And the queen's sons and brothers haught and
proud:

And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace as before.

1 Cit. Come, come, we fear the worst; all will be well.

3 Cit. When clouds are seen, wise men put on their cloaks;

When great leaves fall, then winter is at hand;
When the sun sets, who doth not look for
night?

Untimely storms make men expect a dearth.

All may be well; but, if God sort it so,

'Tis more than we deserve or I expect. [fear:

2 Cit. Truly, the hearts of men are full of
You cannot reason almost with a man
That looks not heavily and full of dread.

3 Cit. Before the days of change, still is it so;

By a divine instinct men's minds mistrust

Ensuing danger, as, by proof, we see

The water swell before a boisterous storm.

But leave it all to God.—Whither away?

2 Cit. Marry, we were sent for to the justices.

3 Cit. And so was I: I'll bear you company.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace. DUKE OF YORK, QUEEN ELIZABETH, and the DUCHESS OF YORK.

Arch. Last night, I hear, they at Northampton lay;

And at Stony-Stratford will they be to-night:

To-morrow or next day they will be here.

Duch. I long with all my heart to see the
prince:

I hope he is much grown since last I saw him.

Q. Eliz. But I hear no; they say my son of
York

Has almost overta'en him in his growth.

York. Ay, mother; but I would not have it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin? it is good to grow. [supper,

York. Gramam, one night, as we did sit at My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow

More than my brother: Ay, quoth my uncle
Gloster, [apace:

Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow

And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast, Because sweetflowers are slow, and weeds make haste. [not hold

Duch. Good faith, good faith, the saying did
In him that did object the same to thee:
He was the wretched'st thing when he was young.

So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Arch. And so no doubt he is, my gracious
madam.

Duch. I hope he is: but yet let mothers doubt.
York. Now, by my troth, if I had been re-member'd,

I could have given my uncle's grace a flout,
To touch his growth nearer than he touch'd
mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I pr'ythee, let me hear it.

York. Marry, they say my uncle grew so fast
That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old:
'Twas full two years ere I could get a tooth.
Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.

Duch. I pr'ythee, pretty York, who told thee
this?

York. Grandam, his nurse. [wast born.

Duch. His nurse! why she was dead ere thou York. If 'twere not she, I cannot tell who told me. [shrewd.

Q. Eliz. A parlous boy:—go to, you are too

Arch. Good madam, be not angry with the child.

Q. Eliz. Pitchers have ears.

Arch. Here comes a messenger.

Enter a Messenger.

What news? [report.

Mess. Such news, my lord, as grieves me to

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?

Mess. Well, madam and in health.

Duch. What is thy news?

Mess. Lord Rivers and Lord Grey are sent to Pomfret,

With them Sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them?

Mess. The mighty dukes
Gloucester and Buckingham.

Q. Eliz. For what offence?

Mess. The sum of all I can, I have disclos'd;
Why or for what the nobles were committed
Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ah me, I see the ruin of my house!
The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind;
Insulting tyranny begins to jet
Upon the innocent and awless throne:—

Welcome, destruction, blood, and massacre!
I see, as in a map, the end of all. [days!

Duch. Accurs'd and unquiet wrangling
How many of you have mine eyes beheld?

My husband lost his life to get the crown;

And often up and down my sons were toss'd,

For me to joy and weep their gain and loss:

And being seated, and domestic broils

Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors,

Make war upon themselves; brother to brother,

Blood to blood, self against self:—O, preposterous

And frantic outrage, end thy damned spleen;

Or let me die, to look on death no more!

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy; we will to sanctuary.—

Madam, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with him.

Q. Eliz. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go.

[To the QUEEN.

And thither bear your treasure and your goods.

For my part, I'll resign unto your grace

The seal I keep; and so betide to me

As well I tender you and all of yours!

Come, I'll conduct you to the sanctuary.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Street.

The trumpets sound. Enter the PRINCE OF WALES, GLOSTER, BUCKINGHAM, CATESBY, CARDINAL BOUCHIER, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts'
sovereign:

The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No, uncle; but our crosses on the way

Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy:
I want more uncles here to welcome me.

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your years

Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit:

No more can you distinguish of a man

Than of his outward show; which, God he knows,

Seldom or never jumpeth with the heart.

Those uncles which you want were dangerous;

Your grace attended to their sugar'd words,

But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:

God keep you from them, and from such false
friends!

Prince. God keep me from false friends! but they were none. [greet you.

Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to Enter the Lord Mayor and his Train.

May. God bless your grace with health and happy days!

Prince. I thank you, good my lord;—and thank you all. [Exeunt Mayor, &c.

I thought my mother and my brother York

Would long ere this have met us on the way:

Fie, what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not

To tell us whether they will come or no!

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the sweating lord.

Enter HASTINGS.

Prince. Welcome, my lord: what, will our mother come?

Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not
I,

The queen your mother and your brother York

Have taken sanctuary: the tender prince

Would fain have come with me to meet your
grace,

But by his mother was perforce withheld.

Buck. Fie, what an indirect and peevish course

Is this of hers?—Lord cardinal, will your grace

Persuade the queen to send the Duke of York
Unto his princely brother presently?
If she deny, Lord Hastings, go with him,
And from her jealous arms pluck him perforce.

Card. My Lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory

Can from his mother win the Duke of York,
Anon expect him here; but if she be obdurate
To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of blessed sanctuary! not for all of this land
Would I be guilty of so great a sin. [lord,

Buck. You are too senseless-obstinate, my Too ceremonious and traditional:
Weigh it but with the grossness of this age,
You break not sanctuary in seizing him.

The benefit thereof is always granted [place,
To those whose dealing's have deserv'd the
And those who have the wit to claim the place:
This prince hath neither claim'd it nor deserv'd
it;

And therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it:
Then, taking him from hence that is not there,
You break no privilege nor charter there.

Off have I heard of sanctuary-men;
But sanctuary-children ne'er till now.

Card. My lord, you shall o'errule my mind for once.—

Come on, Lord Hastings, will you go with me?
Hast. I go, my lord.

Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may. [Exeunt CARD. and HAST.

Say, uncle Gloster, if our brother come,
Where shall we sojourn till our coronation?

Glo. Where it seems best unto your royal self.

If I may counsel you, some day or two
Your highness shall repose you at the Tower:
Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit

For your best health and recreation. [place.—

Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any
Did Julius Caesar build that place, my lord?

Glo. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place;

Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edified.

Prince. Is it upon record, or else reported Successfully from age to age, he built it?

Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.

Prince. But say, my lord, it were not register'd,

methinks the truth should live from age to age,
As 'twere retail'd to all posterity,
Even to the general all-ending day.

Glo. So wise so young, they say, do never live long. [Aside.

Prince. What say you, uncle? [long.—

Glo. I say, without characters, fame lives
Thus, like the formal vice, Iniquity,
I moralize two meanings in one word. [Aside.

Prince. That Julius Caesar was a famous man;
With what his valour did enrich his wit,
His wit set down to make his valour live:
Death makes no conquest of this conqueror;
For now he lives in fame, though not in life.—
I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham,—

Buck. What, my gracious lord?

Prince. An if I live until I be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again,
Or die a soldier, as I liv'd a king.

Glo. Short summers lightly have a forward spring. [Aside.

Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the Duke of York.

Enter YORK, HASTINGS, and the CARDINAL.

Prince. Richard of York! how fares our loving brother? [you now.

York. Well, my dread lord; so must I call

Prince. Ay brother,—to our grief, as it is
yours:

Too late he died that might have kept that title,
Which by his death hath lost much majesty.

Glo. How fares our cousin, noble Lord of York? [lord,

York. I thank you, gentle uncle. O, my
You said that idle weeds are fast in growth:

The prince my brother hath outgrown me far.

Glo. He hath, my lord.

York. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. O, my fair cousin, I must not say so.

York. Then is he more beholding to you than I.

Glo. He may command me as my sovereign;
But you have power in me as in a kinsman.

York. I pray you, uncle, give me this dagger.

Glo. My dagger, little cousin? with all my heart.

Prince. A beggar, brother? [give;

York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will
And being but a toy, which is no grief to give.

Glo. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin. [it.

York. A greater gift! O, that's the sword to

Glo. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.

York. O then, I see, you will part but with light gifts;

In weightier things you'll say a beggar nay.

Glo. It is too weighty for your grace to wear.

York. I weigh it lightly, were it heavier.

Glo. What, would you have my weapon, little lord? [call me.

York. I would, that I might thank you as you

Glo. How?

York. Little. [in talk:—

Prince. My Lord of York will still be cross
Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.

York. You mean, to bear me, not to bear with me:—

Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me;
Because that I am little, like an ape,

He thinks that you should bear me on your shoulders. [reasons!

Buck. With what a sharp-provided wit he
To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle,

Because that aptly taunts himself:

So cunning and so young is wonderful. [along?

Glo. My gracious lord, will't please to pass
Myself and my good cousin Buckingham

Will to your mother, to entreat of her

To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

York. Will, will you go unto the Tower, my lord? [so.

Prince. My lord protector needs will have it

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, what should you fear? [ghost:

York. Marry, my uncle Clarence's angry

My grandam told me he was murder'd there.

Prince. I fear no uncles dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope. [fear.
Prince. An if they live, I hope I need not
 But come, my lord; and with a heavy heart,
 Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower.
 [Sennet. Exeunt PRINCE, YORK, HAST.,
 CAR. and Attendants.

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating
 York
 Was not incensed by his subtle mother
 To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously?

Glo. No doubt, no doubt: O, 'tis a parlous
 boy;

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable:
 He is all the mother's, from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest.—Come hither, Catesby. [tend

Thou art sworn a-deeply to effect what we in-
 As closely to conceal what we impart:
 Thou know'st our reasons urg'd upon the
 way;—

What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter
 To make William Lord Hastings of our mind,
 For the instalment of this noble duke

In the seat royal of this famous isle? [prince Cate. He for his father's sake so loves the
 That he will not be won to aught against him.

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley?
 will not he?

Cate. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.
Buck. Well, then, no more but this: go, gentle Catesby, [ings

And, as it were far off, sound thou Lord Hast-
 How he doth stand affected to our purpose;
 And summon him to-morrow to the Tower,
 To sit about the coronation.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
 Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:

If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
 Be thou so too; and so break off the talk,
 And give us notice of his inclination:

For we to-morrow hold divided councils,
 Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd.

Glo. Commend me to Lord William: tell him, Catesby,

His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries
 To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret Castle;

And bid my lord, for joy of this good news,
 Give Mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, go, effect this business soundly. [I can.

Cate. My good lords both, with all the heed Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we sleep?

Cate. You shall, my lord.
Glo. At Crosby Place, there shall you find us both. [Exit CATESBY.

Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do if we perceive

Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?
Glo. Chop off his head, man;—somewhat we will do:—

And look, when I am king, claim thou of me
 The earldom of Hereford, and all the movables
 Whereof the king my brother was possess'd.

Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand [kindness.

Glo. And look to have it yielded with all
 Come, let us sup betimes, that afterwards
 We may digest our complots in some form.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before LORD HASTINGS' House.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord!— [Knocking.

Hast. [Within.] Who knocks?

Mess. One from the Lord Stanley.

Hast. [Within.] What is't o'clock?

Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Enter HASTINGS.

Hast. Cannot my Lord Stanley sleep these tedious nights?

Mess. So it appears by that I have to say.
 First, he commends him to your noble self.

Hast. What then? [night

Mess. Then certifies your lordship that this
 He dreamt the boar had razed off his helm:

Besides, he says there are two councils held;
 And that may be determin'd at the one Which may make you and him to rue at the other. [pleasure,—

Therefore he sends to know your lordship's
 If you will presently take horse with him,
 And with all speed post with him toward the north,

To shun the danger that his soul divines.
Hast. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord;

Bid him not fear the separated councils:
 His honour and myself are at the one,
 And at the other is my good friend Catesby;

Where nothing can proceed that toucheth us
 Whereof I shall not have intelligence.

Tell him his fears are shallow, without instance:
 And for his dreams, I wonder he's so simple
 To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers:

To fly the boar before the boar pursues,
 Were to incense the boar to follow us,
 And make pursuit where he did mean no chase.

Go, bid thy master rise and come to me;
 And we will both together to the Tower,
 Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say. [Exit.

Enter CATESBY.

Cate. Many good-morrows to my noble lord!
Hast. Good-morrow, Catesby; you are early stirring: [state?

What news, what news, in this our tottering
Cate. It is a reeling world indeed, my lord;
 And I believe will never stand upright
 Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

Hast. How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?

Cate. Ay, my good lord. [my shoulders
Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.

But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it?
Cate. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you forward

Upon his party for the gain thereof:
 And thereupon he sends you this good news,—
 That this same very day your enemies,
 The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.

Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that
 news,
 Because they have been still my adversaries:
 But that I'll give my voice on Richard's side,

To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows I will not do it to the death.

Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind!

Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelve month hence,—

That they who brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy.

Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,
I'll send some packing that yet think not on't.

Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,

When men are unprepar'd, and look not for it.
Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out

With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: and so 'twill do
With some men else that think themselves as safe

As thou and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear
To princely Richard and to Buckingham.

Cate. The princes both make high account of you,—

For they account his head upon the bridge.

[Aside.] Hast. I know they do; and I have well deserv'd it.

Enter STANLEY.

Come on, come on; where is your boar-spear,
man?

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?

Stan. My lord, good-morrow; and good-morrow, Catesby:—

You may jest on, but, by the holy rood,
I do not like these several councils, I.

Hast. My lord, I hold my life as dear as you do yours;

And never in my days, I do protest,
Was it more precious to me than 'tis now:

Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am?

Stan. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from London, [sure,—]

Were jocund, and suppos'd their states were
And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;

But yet, you see, how soon the day o'ercast!
This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;

Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!
What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, have with you.—Wot you what, my lord?

To-day the lords you talk of are beheaded.

Stan. They, for their truth, might better wear their heads [hats.—]

Than some that have accus'd them wear their
But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before; I'll talk with this good fellow. [Exit STAN. and CATE.]

How now, sirrah! how goes the world with thee? [ask.]

Purs. The better that your lordship please to Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now [meet:]

Than when thou mett'st me last where now we Then was I going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;

But now, I tell thee,—keep it to thyself,—
This day those enemies are put to death,
And I in better state than e'er I was.

Purs. God hold it, to your honour's good content! [me.]

Hast. Gramercy, fellow: there, drink that for [Throwing him his purse.]

Purs. I thank your honour. [Exit.]

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour.

Hast. I thank thee, good Sir John, with all my heart.

I am in your debt for your last exercise;
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain!

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest;

Your honour hath no shriving-work in hand.

Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,

The men you talk of came into my mind.—
What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there:

I shall return before your lordship thence.

Hast. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. And supper too, although thou know'st it not. [Aside.]

Come, will you go?
Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—POMFRET. Before the Castle.

Enter RATCLIFF, with a Guard, conducting RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN to execution.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this,—

To-day shalt thou behold a subject die
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty. [of you!]

Grey. God bless the prince from all the pack
A knot you are of damned blood-suckers.

Vaugh. You live that shall cry woe for this hereafter.

Rat. Despatch; the limit of your lives is out.

Riv. O Pomfret! Pomfret! O thou bloody prison,

Fatal and ominous to noble peers!
Within the guilty closure of thy walls

Richard the Second here was hack'd to death:
And, for more slander to thy dismal seat,

We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our heads,

When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I.
For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.

Riv. Then curs'd she Richard, then curs'd she Buckingham,

Then curs'd she Hastings:—O, remember, God,
To hear her prayer for them, as now for us!

And for my sister and her princely sons,
Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,

Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt!

Rat. Make haste; the hour of death is expiate.

Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaughan,—let us here embrace:
Farewell, until we meet again in heaven.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Room in the Tower.

BUCKINGHAM, STANLEY, HASTINGS, the BISHOP OF ELY, RATCLIFFE, LOVEL, and others, sitting at a table: Officers of the Council attending.

Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met

Is to determine of the coronation.

In God's name, speak,—when is the royal day?

Buck. Are all things ready for that royal time?

Stan. They are; and wants but nomination.

Ely. To-morrow, then, I judge a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?

Who is most inward with the noble duke?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces: for our hearts,

He knows no more of mine than I of yours;

Nor I of his, my lord, than you of mine.—

Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me well;

But for his purpose in the coronation

I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd

His gracious pleasure any way therein:

But you, my noble lords, may name the time;

And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice,

Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the duke himself.

[Enter GLOSTER.]

Glo. My noble lords and cousins all, good-morrow.

I have been long a sleeper; but I trust

My absence doth neglect no great design

Which by my presence might have been concluded.

Buck. Had you not come upon your cue, my lord,

William Lord Hastings had pronounc'd your I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king.

Glo. Than my Lord Hastings no man might be bolder;

His lordship knows me well, and loves me My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holburn

I saw good strawberries in your garden there: I do beseech you send for some of them.

Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.

[Takes him aside.]

Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business, And finds the testy gentleman so hot

That he will lose his head ere give consent

His master's child, as worshipfully he terms it, Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.

Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile; I'll go with you.

[Exeunt GLO. and BUCK.]

Stan. We have not yet set down this day of triumph.

To-morrow, in my judgment, is too sudden; For I myself am not so well provided As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

[Re-enter BISHOP OF ELY.]

Ely. Where is my lord the Duke of Gloster? I have sent for these strawberries.

Hast. His grace looks cheerfully and smooth this morning;

There's some conceit or other likes him well When that he bids good-morrow with such spirit.

I think there's ne'er a man in Christendom Can lesser hide his love or hate than he; For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Stan. What of his heart perceive you in his By any livelihood he showed to-day?

Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offended;

For, were he, he had shown it in his looks.

[Re-enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM.]

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve That do conspire my death with devilish plots Of damned witchcraft, and that have prevail'd Upon my body with their hellish charms?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord, Makes me most forward in this princely To doom the offenders: whose'er they be, I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glo. Then be your eyes the witness of their evil:

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm, Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up: [witch, And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous Consorted with that harlot-strumpet Shore, That by their witchcraft thus have mark'd me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble lord,—

Glo. If thou protector of this damned strumpet—Talk'st thou to me of ifs?—Thou art a traitor:—Off with his head!—now, by Saint Paul I swear, I will not dine until I see the same,—

Lovel and Ratcliff:—look that it be done:—

The rest, that love me, rise and follow me.

[Exeunt all except HAST., LOV., and RATCLIFF.]

Hast. Woe, woe, for England! not a whit for me;

For I, too fond, might have prevented this.

Stanley did dream the boar did raze his helm; And I did scorn it, and disdain to fly.

Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse did stumble,

And started, when he look'd upon the Tower, As loth to bear me to the slaughter-house.

O, now I need the priest that spake to me:

I now repent I told the pursuivant, As too triumphing, how mine enemies

To-day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,

And I myself secure in grace and favour.

O Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy curse

Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Rat. Come, come, despatch; the duke would be at dinner:

Make a short shrift; he longs to see your head.

Hast. O momentary grace of mortal men, Which we more hunt for than the grace of God! Who builds his hope in air of your goodlooks,

Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready, with every nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, despatch; 'tis bootless to exclaim. [land!]

Hast. O bloody Richard!—miserable Eng-
I prophesy the fearful'st time to thee
That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.—
Come, lead me to the block, bear him my head
They smile at me who shortly shall be dead.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—LONDON. The Tower Walls.

Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM in rusty armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin, and stop again,
As if thou wert distraught and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;

Speak and look back, and pry on every side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion: ghastly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time, to grace my stratagems.

But what, is Catesby gone? [along.]

Glo. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor

Enter the Lord Mayor and CATESBY.

Buck. Lord mayor,—

Glo. Look to the drawbridge there!

Buck. Hark! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord Mayor, the reason we have sent,—

Glo. Look back, defend thee,—here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocency defend and guard us! [and Lovel.]

Glo. Be patient, they are friends,—Ratcliff

*Enter LOVELL and RATCLIFF, with HASTINGS
head.*

Lov. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I lov'd the man that I must weep.

I took him for the plainest harmless creature
That breath'd upon the earth a Christian;
Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts: [virtue]
So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of
That, his apparent open guilt omitted,—
I mean, his conversation with Shore's wife,—
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect.

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert'st shelter'd traitor

That ever liv'd.—

Would you imagine, or almost believe,—

Were't not that by great preservation

We live to tell it you,—the subtle traitor

Thus day had plotted, in the council-house,

To murder me and my good Lord of Gloster!

May. Had he done so? [fideis?]

Glo. What! think you we are Turks or In-
Or that we would, against the form of law,

Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death,
But that the extreme peril of the case,
The peace of England and our persons' safety,
Enforc'd us to this execution?

May. Now, fair befall you! he deserv'd his death; [ceeded]

And your good graces both have well pro-
To warn false traitors from the like attempts.
I never look'd for better at his hands
After he once fell in with Mistress Shore. [die]

Buck. Yet had we not determin'd he should Until your lordship came to see his end;
Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Something against our meaning, hath prevented:

Because, my lord, we would have had you heard
The traitor speak, and timorously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same
Unto the citizens, who haply may Misconstrue us in him, and wait his death.

May. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall serve

As well as I had seen, and heard him speak:
And do not doubt, right noble princes both,
But I'll acquaint our dutieous citizens
With all your just proceedings in this case.

Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship
here,

To avoid the censures of the carping world.

Buck. But since you come too late of our intent,

Yet witness what you hear we did intend:

And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

[Exit Lord Mayor.]

Glo. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham.

The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post:—

There, at your meetest vantage of the time,
Infer the bastardy of Edward's children:
Tell them how Edward put to death a citizen,
Only for saying he would make his son
Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed, his house,
Which, by the sign thereof, was termed so.
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury.

And bestial appetite in change of lust; [wives,
Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters,
Even where his raging eye or savage heart,
Without control, listed to make a prey.

Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person:— [child]

Tell them, when that my mother went with
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,
My princely father, then had wars in France
And, by true computation of the time,
Found that the issue was not his begot;
Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke my father:
Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere far off;
Because, my lord, you know my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord, I'll play the orator
As if the golden plea for which I plead
Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu.

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Bay-nard's Castle;

Where you shall find me well accompanied
With reverend fathers and well learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit.]

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to Doctor Shaw.—

Go thou [to CATE.] to Friar Penker;—bid them Meet me within this hour at Baynard's Castle.

[Exeunt LOV. and CATE.]

Now will I in, to take some privy order To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight; And to give notice that no manner of person Have any time recourse unto the princes. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—LONDON. A Street.

Enter a Scrivener.

Scriv. Here is the indictment of the good Lord Hastings; Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd, That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's. And mark how well the sequel hangs together:—

Eleven hours I have spent to write it over, For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me; The precedent was full as long a-doing: And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd, Untainted, unexamined, free, at liberty. Here's a good world the while! Who is so gross That cannot see this palpable device! Yet who so bold but says he sees it not! Bad is the world; and all will come to naught When such ill dealing must be seen in thought. [Exit.]

SCENE VII.—LONDON. Court of Baynard's Castle.

Enter GLOSTER and BUCKINGHAM, meeting.

Glo. How now, how now! what say the citizens?

Buck. Now, by the holy mother of our Lord, The citizens are mum, say not a word.

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children? [Lucy.]

Buck. I did; with his contract with Lady And his contract by deputy in France; The insatiate greediness of his desires, And his enforcement of the city wives; His tyranny for trifles; his own bastardy,— As being got, your father then in France, And his resemblance, being not like the duke: Withal I did infer your lineaments,— Being the right idea of your father, Both in your form and nobleness of mind; Laid open all your victories in Scotland, Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace, Your bounty, virtue, fair humility; Indeed, left nothing fitting for your purpose Untouch'd or slightly handled in discourse: And when my oratory drew toward end I bid them that did love their country's good Cry, God save Richard, England's royal king!

Glo. And did they so? [word;]

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a But, like dumb statues or breathing stones, Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Which when I saw, I reprehended them; And ask'd the mayor what meant this wilful silence:

His answer was,—the people were not us'd To be spoke to but by the recorder. Then he was urg'd to tell my tale again,— Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke infer'd:

But nothing spoke in warrant from himself. When he had done, some followers of mine own,

At lower end of the hall, hurl'd up their caps, And some ten voices cried, God save King Richard!

And thus I took the vantage of those few,— Thanks, gentle citizens and friends, quoth I; This general applause and cheerful shout Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard: And even here brake off and came away.

Glo. What tongueless blocks were they! would they not speak? [come?]

Will not the mayor, then, and his brethren, Buck. The mayor is here at hand. Intend some fear;

Be not you spoke with but by mighty suit: And look you get a prayer-book in your hand, And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;

For on that ground I'll make a holy descent: And be not easily won to our requests; Play the maid's part,—still answer nay, and take it.

Glo. I go; and if you plead as well for them As I can say nay to thee for myself, No doubt we bring it to a happy issue.

Buck. Go, go, up to the leads; the lord mayor knocks. [Exit GLOSTER.]

Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord: I dance attendance here; I think the duke will not be spoke withal.

Enter, from the Castle, CATESBY.

Now, Catesby,—what says your lord to my request? [lord,]

Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble To visit him to-morrow or next day: He is within, with two right reverend fathers, Divinely bent to meditation:

And in no worldly suit would he be mov'd, To draw him from his holy exercise. [duke;]

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious Tell him, myself, the mayor and aldermen, In deep designs, in matter of great moment, No less importing than our general good, Are come to have some conference with his grace.

Cate. I'll signify so much unto him straight. [Exit.]

Buck. Ah, ha, my lord, this prince is not an Edward!

He is not lolling on a lewd day-bed, But on his knees at meditation; Not dallying with a brace of courtizens, But meditating with two deep divines; Not sleeping, to engross his idle body, But praying, to enrich his watchful soul: Happy were England would this virtuous prince Take on himself the sovereignty thereof: But, sure, I fear, we shall not win him to it.

Mat. Marry, God defend his grace should say us nay! [again.]

Buck. I fear he will. Here Catesby comes

Re-enter CATESBY.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?

Cate. He wonders to what end you have assembled

Such troops of citizens to come to him:
His grace not being warn'd thereof before,
He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am my noble cousin should Suspect me, that I mean no good to him:
By heaven, we come to him in perfect love;
And so once more return and tell his grace.

[Exit CATESBY.]

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 'tis much to draw them thence,—

So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, in a Gallery above, between two Bishops. CATESBY returns.

May. See, where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen! [prince,

Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian
To stay him from the fall of vanity:
And, see, a book of prayer in his hand,—
True ornament to know a holy man.—
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our requests;
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion and right Christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology:
I rather do beseech you pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Defer'd the visitation of my friends. [sure?

But, leaving this, what is your grace's plea-Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,

And all good men of this ungovern'd isle.

Glo. I do suspect I have done some offence
That seems disgracious in the city's eye;
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord: would it might please your grace,

On our entreaties, to amend your fault!

Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian land? [resign

Buck. Know, then, it is your fault that you
The supreme seat, the throne majestical,
The scepter'd office of your ancestors,
Your state of fortune and your due of birth,
The lineal glory of your royal house,
To the corruption of a blemish'd stock:
Whilst, in the mildness of your sleepy
thoughts,—

Which here we waken to our country's good,—
This noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her face defac'd with scars of infamy,
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants,
And almost shoulder'd in the swallowing gulf
Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion.

Which to recure, we heartily solicit
Your gracious self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;—
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain;
But as successively, from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
For this, consorted with the citizens
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And, by their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace.

Glo. I cannot tell if to depart in silence
Or bitterly to speak in your reproof
Best fiftith my degree or your condition:
If not to answer, you might haply think

Tongue-tied ambition, not replying, yielded
To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me;
If to reprove you for this suit of yours,
So season'd with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends.
Therefore,—to speak, and to avoid the first,
And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,— Definitely thus I answer you.

Your love deserves my thanks, but my desert
Unmeritable shuns your high request.
First, if all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe revenue and due of birth,
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty and so many my defects, [ness,—
That I would rather hide me from my great-
Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,—
Than in my greatness covet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my glory smother'd.
But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me,—
And much I need to help you, were there need;—

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay that you would lay on me,—
The right and fortune of his happy stars;
Which God defend that I should wring from him! [grace;

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.
You say that Edward is your brother's son:
So say we too, but not by Edward's wife;
For first was he contract to Lady Lucy,—
Your mother lives a witness to his vow,—
And afterward by substitute betroth'd
To Bona, sister to the King of France.
These both put off, a poor petitioner,
A care-craz'd mother to a many sons,
A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye,
Seduc'd the pitch and height of his degree
To base declension and loath'd bigamy:
By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners call the prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proffer'd benefit of dignity;
If not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing time
Unto a lineal true-derived course. [you.

May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat

Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love. [suit!

Cate. O, make them joyful, grant their lawful

Glo. Alas, why would you heap those cares
on me?

I am unfit for state and majesty:—
I do beseech you, take it not amiss;
I cannot nor I will not yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it,—as, in love and zeal,
Loth to depose the child, your brother's son—
As well we know your tenderness of heart,

And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse,
Which we have noted in you to your kindred,
And equally, indeed, to all estates,—
Yet know, wher you accept our suit or no,
Your brother's son shall never reign our king;
But we will plant some other in the throne,
To the disgrace and downfall of your house:
And in this resolution here we leave you.—
Come, citizens, we will treat no more.

[Exeunt BUCK., the Mayor and Citizens retiring.]

Cate. Call them again, sweet prince, accept their suit:

If you deny them, all the land will rue it.

Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares? Call them again.

[Cate goes to the Mayor, &c., and then exit.]

I am not made of stone,

But penetrable to your kind entreaties,
Albeit against my conscience and my soul.

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM and CATESBY, the Mayor, &c., coming forward.

Cousin of Buckingham,—and sage, grave men,
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, wher I will or no,
I must have patience to endure the load:
But if black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof;
For God he knows, and you may partly see,
How far I am from the desire of this. [say it.]

May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will

Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.

Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title,—

Long live King Richard, England's worthy king!

All. Amen. [crown'd?]

Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be Glo. Even when you please, for you will have it so.

Buck. To-morrow, then, we will attend your grace:

And so, most joyfully, we take our leave.

Glo. Come, let us to our holy work again.—

[To the Bishops.]

Farewell, my cousin;—farewell, gentle friends. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—LONDON. Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, QUEEN ELIZABETH, DUCHESS OF YORK, and MARQUESS OF DORSET; on the other, ANNE DUCHESS OF GLOSTER, leading LADY MARGARET PLANTAGENET, CLARENCE'S young Daughter.

Duch. Who meets us here?—my niece Plantagenet

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster? Now, for my life, she's wandering to the Tower, On pure heart's love, to greet the tender princes.—

Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your graces both

A happy and a joyful time of day! [away?]

Q. Eliz. As much to you, good sister! Whither

Anne. No further than the Tower; and, as I guess,

Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.

Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks: we'll enter all together:—

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes.

Enter BRAKENBURY.

Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the prince, and my young son of York?

Brak. Right well, dear madam. By your patience,

I may not suffer you to visit them;
The king has strictly charg'd the contrary.

Q. Eliz. The king! who's that?

Brak. I mean the lord protector.

Q. Eliz. The lord protect him from that kingly title!

Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
I am their mother; who shall bar me from them?

Duch. I am their father's mother; I will see them. [mother:]

Anne. Their aunt I am in law, in love their
Then bring me to their sights; I'll bear thy blame,

And take thy office from thee, on my peril.

Brak. No, madam, no,—I may not leave it so:
I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me. [Exit.]

Enter STANLEY

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence,

And I'll salute your grace of York as mother
And reverend looker-on of two fair queens.—

Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster,

[To the DUCHESS OF GLOSTER.]

There to be crown'd Richard's royal queen.

Q. Eliz. Ah, cut my lace asunder, [beat,]
That my pent heart may have some scope to

Or else I swoon with this dead-killing news!

Anne. Despiteful tidings! O unpleasing news!

Dor. Be of good cheer: mother, how fares your grace? [gone!]

Q. Eliz. O Dorset, speak not to me, get thee
Death and destruction dog thee at the heels;

Thy mother's name is ominous to children.

If thou wilt outstrip death, go cross the seas,

And live with Richmond, from the reach of hell:

Go, hie thee, hie thee from this slaughter-house,

Lest thou increase the number of the dead;

And make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse,

Nor mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.

Stan. Full of wise care is this your counsel,
madam.—

Take all the swift advantage of the hours;
You shall have letters from me to my son

In your behalf, to meet you on the way:
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. O ill-dispersing wind of misery!—

O my accursed womb, the bed of death!

A cockatrice hast thou hatch'd to the world,

Whose unavoided eye is murderous. [sent.]

Stan. Come, madam, come; I in all haste was Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.—

O, would to God that the inclusive verge

Of golden metal that must round my brow

Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain!
Anointed let me be with deadly venom,
And die ere men can say God save the Queen!

Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;

To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm.

Anne. No, why?—When he that is my husband now

Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corse;
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his hands

Which issu'd from my other angel husband,
And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;

O, when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish,—Be thou, quoth I, accurs'd!
For making me, so young, so old a widow!
And when thou wedd'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;

And be thy wife,—if any be so mad,—
More miserable by the life of thee [death!
Than thou hast made me by my dear lord's

Lo, ere I can repeat this curse again,
Within so small a time, my woman's heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words,
And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse,—

Which hitherto hath held mine eyes from rest;
For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.
Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu! I pity thy complaining.

Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours. [glory!

Q. Eliz. Farewell, thou woeful welcomer of Anne. Adieu, poor soul, that tak'st thy leave of it!

Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee!— [To DORSET.

Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!— [To ANNE.

Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee! [To QUEEN ELIZABETH.

I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!
Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Q. Eliz. Stay yet, look back with me unto the Tower.—

Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babes,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls!
Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!
Rude ragged nurse, old sullen playfellow
For tender princes, use my babies well!
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—LONDON. A Room of State in the Palace.

Flourish of trumpets. RICHARD, as King, upon his throne; BUCKINGHAM, CATESBY, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Buckingham,—

Buck. My gracious sovereign?

K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high, by thy advice

And thy assistance, is King Richard seated:—

But shall we wear these glories for a day?

Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?

Buck. Still live they, and for ever let them last!

K. Rich. Ah, Buckingham, now do I play the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed:—

Young Edward lives;—think now what I would speak.

Buck. Say on, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be king. [liege.

Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned

K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'tis so: but Edward lives.

Buck. True, noble prince.

K. Rich. O bitter consequence,
That Edward still should live,—true, noble prince!—

Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull:—

Shall I be plain?—I wish the bastards dead;
And I would have it suddenly perform'd.

What say'st thou now? speak suddenly, be brief.

Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure.

K. Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes:

Say, have I thy consent that they shall die?

Buck. Give me some little breath, some pause, dear lord,

Before I positively speak in this:

I will resolve your grace immediately. [Exit.

Cate. The king is angry: see, he gnaws his lip. [Aside.

K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools [Descends from his throne.

And unresponsive boys; none are for me

That look into me with considerate eyes:

High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.
Boy!—

Page. My lord?

K. Rich. Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold

Would tempt into a close exploit of death?

Page. I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit:

Gold were as good as twenty orators,

And will, no doubt, tempt him to anything.

K. Rich. What is his name?

Page. His name, my lord, is Tyrrel.

K. Rich. I partly know the man: go, call him hither, boy. [Exit Page.

The deep-revolving witty Buckingham

No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels:

Hath he so long held out with me untir'd,

And stops he now for breath?—well, be it so.

Enter STANLEY.

How now, Lord Stanley! what's the news?

Stan. Know, my loving lord,

The Marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby: rumour it abroad

That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;
I will take order for her keeping close:

Inquire me out some mean poor gentleman

Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter;—

The boy is foolish, and I fear not him.—
Look, how thou dream'st!—I say again, give out
That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:
About it; for it stands me much upon,
To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me.
[Exit CATESBY.]

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:—
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! But I am in
So far in blood that sin will pluck on sin:
Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.

Re-enter Page, with TYRREL.

Is thy name Tyrrel? [subject.]

Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient
K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious lord.
K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine? [enemies.]

Tyr. Please you. But I had rather kill two K. Rich. Why, then, thou hast it: two deep enemies,

Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,

Are they that I would have thee deal upon:—
Tyrrel, I mean those bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them,

And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.

K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark,
come hither, Tyrrel:

Go, by this token:—rise, and lend thine ear:
[Whispers.]

There is no more but so:—say it is done,
And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.

Tyr. I will despatch it straight. [Exit.]

Re-enter BUCKINGHAM.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind
The late demand that you did sound me in.

K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Richmond.

Buck. I hear the news, my lord.

K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son:—
well, look to it. [promise,]

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by
For which your honour and your faith is pawn'd;
The earldom of Hereford, and the movables,
Which you have promised I shall possess.

K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife: if she convey

Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

Buck. What says your highness to my just request? [Sixth]

K. Rich. I do remember me,—Henry the
Did prophesy that Richmond should be king,
When Richmond was a little peevish boy.

A king!—perhaps,—

Buck. My lord,—

K. Rich. How chance the prophet could not at that time

Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?

Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom,— [Exeter,]

K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at
The mayor in courtesy show'd me the castle,

And call'd it Rouge-mont; at which name I started,

Because a bard of Ireland told me once
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord,—

K. Rich. Ay, what's o'clock? [mind]

Buck. I am thus bold to put your grace in
Of what you promis'd me.

King Rich. Well, but what's o'clock?

Buck. Upon the stroke of ten.

K. Rich. Well, let it strike.

Buck. Why let it strike?

K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack, thou keep'st the stroke

Between thy begging and my meditation.
I am not in the giving vein to-day. [or no.]

Buck. Why, then resolve me whether you will

K. Rich. Thou troublest me; I am not in the vein. [Exeunt K. RICH. and Train.]

Buck. And is it thus? repays he my deep service

With such contempt? made I him king for this?
O, let me think on Hastings, and be gone

To Brecknock while my fearful head is on!
[Exit.]

SCENE III.—LONDON. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter TYRREL.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done,—
The most arch deed of piteous massacre

That ever yet this land was guilty of.

Dighton and Forrest, whom I did suborn

To do this piece of ruthless butchery,

Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,

Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,

Wept like two children in their death's sad story.

O thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle babes.—

Thus, thus, quoth Forrest, girding one another

Within their alabaster innocent arms.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,

Which in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.

A book of prayers on their pillow lay;

Which once, quoth Forrest, almost chang'd my

mind,

But, O, the devil,—there the villain stopp'd;

When Dighton thus told on,—we smothered

The most replenished sweet work of nature

That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd.—

Hence both are gone; with conscience and remorse

They could not speak; and so I left them both,

To bear this tidings to the bloody king:—

And here he comes:—

Enter KING RICHARD.

All health, my sovereign lord!

K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel, am I happy in thy news? [charge]

Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in Beget your happiness, be happy then,

For it is done.

K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?

Tyr. I did, my lord.

K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel?

Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried
them;

But where, to say the truth, I do not know.

K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, at after supper,
When thou shalt tell the process of their death.
Meantime, but think how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.
Farewell till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.]

K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I pent up close;
His daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage;
The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom,
And Anne my wife hath bid the world good-night.

Now, for I know the Bretagne Richmond aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And by that knot looks proudly on the crown,
To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter RATCLIFF.

Rat. My lord,—

K. Rich. Good news or bad, that thou com'st in so bluntly? [Richmond;

Rat. Bad news, my lord: Morton is fled to
And Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welsh-
men,

Is in the field, and still his power increaseth.

K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near

Than Buckingham and his rash-levied strength.
Come,—I have learn'd that fearful commenting

Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary:

Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king!

Go, muster men: my counsel is my shield;
We must be brief when traitors brave the field.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—LONDON. Before the Palace.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.

Here in these confines sily have I lurk'd,
To watch the waning of mine enemies.

A dire induction am I witness to,
And will to France; hoping the consequence

Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.— Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret: who comes here? [Retires.]

*Enter QUEEN ELIZABETH and the DUCHESS
OF YORK.*

Q. Eliz. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender
babes!

My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,

And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,

And hear your mother's lamentation! [right
Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right for Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night.

Duch. So many miseries have craz'd my voice
That my woe-weary'd tongue is still and mute.—

Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,

Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.

Q. Eliz. Wilt thou, O God, fly from such gentle lambs,

And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
When didst thou sleep when such a deed was done? [sweet son.

Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my

Duch. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal-living ghost, [usurp'd,

Woe's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life
Brief abstract and record of tedious days,

Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth,
[Sitting down.]

Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!
Q. Eliz. Ah, that thou wouldst as soon afford a grave

As thou canst yield a melancholy seat! [here.

Then would I hide my bones, not rest them
Ah, who hath any cause to mourn but we?

[Sitting down by her.
Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,

Give mine the benefit of seniority,
[Coming forward.]

And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.
If sorrow can admit society,

[Sitting down with him.
Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine—

I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him,
I had a Henry, till a Richard kill'd him, [him;

Thou hast an Edward, till a Richard kill'd
Thou hadst a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.

Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill him;

I had a Rutland too, thou help'st to kill him.
Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept

A hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death:
That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,

To worry lambs and lap their gentle blood;
That foul defacer of God's handiwork;

That excellent grand tyrant of the earth,
That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,—

Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.—
O upright, just, and true-disposing God,

How do I thank thee that this carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body,

And makes her pew-fellow with others' moan!
Duch. O Harry's wife, triumph not in my woes!

God witness with me, I have wept for thine.

Q. Mar. Bear with me; I am hungry for revenge,

And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward;

Thy other Edward dead to quit my Edward;
Young York he is but boot, because both they

Match not the high perfection of my loss:
Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb'd my Edward;

And the beholders of this frantic play,
The adulterate Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,

Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves.
Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligencer;

Only reserv'd their factor to buy souls,
And send them thither:—but at hand, at hand,

Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,

To have him suddenly convey'd from hence.—
Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray,

That I may live to say, The dog is dead!

Q. Eliz. O, thou didst prophesy the time would come

That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottled spider, that foul bunch-back'd toad! [my fortune,

Q. Mar. I call'd thee then, vain flourish of
I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen;
The presentation of but what I was,
The flattering index of a direful pageant;
One heav'd a-high, to be hurl'd down below;
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast; a garish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.
Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?

Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou joy?
Who sues, and kneels, and says, God save the queen?

Where be the bending peers that flatter'd thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd
thee?

Decline all this, and see what now thou art:
For happy wife, a most distressed widow;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For one being su'd to, one that humbly sues;
For queen, a very caitiff crown'd with care;
For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;
For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one;
For one commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou wast,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art.
Thou didst usurp my place, and dost thou not
Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?
Now thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;

From which even here I slip my wearied head,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.
Farewell, York's wife, and queen of sad mis-chance:— [France.

These English woes shall make me smile in
Q. Eliz. O thou well skill'd in curses, stay awhile,

And teach me how to curse mine enemies!

Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast
the day;

Compare dead happiness with living woe;
Think that thy babes were fairer than they were,
And he that slew them fouler than he is:
Bettering thy loss makes the bad-causer worse;
Revolving this will teach thee how to curse.

Q. Eliz. My words are dull; O, quicken them with thine!

Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like mine. [Exit.

Duch. Why should calamity be full of words?
Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client woes,

Airy succeders of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries! [part

Let them have scope: though what they do im-
Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart.

Duch. If so, then be not tongue-tied: go with
me,

And in the breath of bitter words let's smother
My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smother'd. [Drum within.

I hear his drum:—be copious in exclams.

Enter KING RICHARD and his Train, marching.

K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition? [thee,

Duch. O, she that might have intercepted
By strangling thee in her accursed womb,
From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast
done!

Q. Eliz. Hidst thou that forehead with a golden crown, [right,
Where should be branded, if that right were
The slaughter of the prince that ow'd that crown,
And the dire death of my poor sons and brothers?
Tell me thou villain-slave, where are my children?

Duch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother Clarence?

And little Ned Plantagenet, his son? [Grey?

Q. Eliz. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Duch. Where is kind Hastings?

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets! strike alarum, drums!

Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women
Rail on the Lord's anointed: strike, I say!

[Flourish. Alarums.
Either be patient, and entreat me fair
Or with the clamorous report of war
Thus will I drown your exclamations.

Duch. Art thou my son?

K. Rich. Ay, I thank God, my father, and yourself.

Duch. Then patiently hear my impatience.

K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition,

That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

Duch. O, let me speak!

K. Rich. Do, then; but I'll not hear.

Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my words.

K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste.

Duch. Art thou so hasty? I have stay'd for
thee,

God knows, in torment and in agony.

K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort
you? [well

Duch. No, by the holy rood, thou know'st it
Thou cam'st on earth to make the earth my hell.
A grievous burden was thy birth to me;
Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy;
Thy school-days frightful, desperate, wild, and furious; [turous;

Thy prime of manhood daring, bold, and ven-Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody, [hatred:

More mild, but yet more harmful, kind in
What comfortable hour canst thou name
That ever grac'd me in thy company?

K. Rich. Faith, none but Humphrey Hour, that call'd your grace

To breakfast once forth of my company.

If I be so disgracious in your eye,

Let me march on and not offend you, madam.—
Strike up the drum.

Duch. I pry'thee, hear me speak.

K. Rich. You speak too bitterly.

Duch. Hear me a word;

For I shall never speak to thee again.

K. Rich. So. [disance

Duch. Either thou wilt die by God's just or-
Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror;

Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish,
And never look upon thy face again.
Therefore take with thee my most heavy curse;
Which in the day of battle tire thee more
Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!
My prayers on the adverse party fight;
And there the little souls of Edward's children shall be the victims of thine.

Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end,
Shame serves thy life and doth thy death attend.

[Exit.]
Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse

Abides in me; I say amen to her. [Going.]

K. Rich. Stay, madam, I must talk a word with you.

Q. Eliz. I have no more sons of the royal
blood

For thee to slaughter: for my daughters,
Richard,—

They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens;

And therefore level not to hit their lives.

K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd Elizabeth,
Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious.

Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O, let her live,

And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty;
Slander myself as false to Edward's bed;

Throw over her the veil of infamy:
So she may live unscar'd of bleeding slaughter,

I will confess she was not Edward's daughter.
K. Rich. Wrong not her birth; she is of royal blood.

Q. Eliz. To save her life I'll say she is not so.

K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth.

Q. Eliz. And only in that safety died her brothers. [opposite.]

K. Rich. Lo, at their births good stars were

Q. Eliz. No, to their lives bad friends were contrary.

K. Rich. All unavoids is the doom of destiny.

Q. Eliz. True, when avoided grace makes destiny:

[y babes were destined to a sadder doom
grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life.

K. Rich. You speak as if that I had slain my cousins.

Q. Eliz. Cousins, indeed; and by their uncle cozen'd

Of comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life.
Whose hand soever lanc'd their tender hearts,

Thy head, all indirectly, gave direction:
No doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt

Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart,
To revel in the entrails of my lambs.

But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys

Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes;
And I, in such a desperate bay of death,

Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.

K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprise
And dangerous success of bloody wars,

As I intend more good to you and yours
Than ever you or yours by me were harm'd!

Q. Eliz. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,

To be discover'd, that can do me good?

K. Rich. The advancement of your children, gentle lady. [their heads?]

Q. Eliz. Up to some scaffold, there to lose

K. Rich. No, to the dignity and height of honour,

The high imperial type of this earth's glory.

Q. Eliz. Flatter my sorrows with report of it;
Tell me what state, what dignity, what honour,

Canst thou demise to any child of mine? [all K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and

Will I withal endow a child of thine;
So in the Lethe of thy angry soul [wrongs

Thou drown the sad remembrance of those Which thou supposest I have done to thee.

Q. Eliz. Be brief, lest that the process of thy kindness

Last longer telling than thy kindness' date.

K. Rich. Then know, that from my soul I love thy daughter. [her soul.]

Q. Eliz. My daughter's mother thinks it with
K. Rich. What do you think?

Q. Eliz. That thou dost love my daughter from thy soul: [brothers;

So from thy soul's love didst thou love her
And from my heart's love I do thank thee for it.

K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning:

I mean that with my soul I love thy daughter,
And do intend to make her Queen of England.

Q. Eliz. Well, then, who dost thou mean shall be her king?

K. Rich. Even he that makes her queen:
who else should be?

Q. Eliz. What, thou? [madam?]

K. Rich. I, even I: what think you of it,
Q. Eliz. How canst thou woo her?

K. Rich. That I would learn of you,
As one being best acquainted with her humour.

Q. Eliz. And wilt thou learn of me?

K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart.

Q. Eliz. Send to her, by the man that slew her brothers,

A pair of bleeding hearts; thereon engrave
Edward and York; then haply will she weep:

Therefore present to her,—as sometime Margaret

Did to thy father, steep'd in Rutland's blood,—
A handkerchief; which, say to her, did drain

The purple sap from her sweet brothers' bodies,
And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withal.

If this inducement move her not to love,
Send her a letter of thy noble deeds;

Tell her thou mad'st away her uncle Clarence,
Her uncle Rivers; ay, and for her sake

Mad'st quick conveyance with her good aunt
Anne. [the way

K. Rich. You mock me, madam; this is not
To win your daughter.

Q. Eliz. There is no other way;
Unless thou could'st put on some other shape,

And not be Richard that hath done all this.

K. Rich. Say that I did all this for love of her?

Q. Eliz. Nay, then indeed she cannot choose but hate thee,

Having bought love with such a bloody spoil.

K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now amended:
Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent.
If I did take the kingdom from your sons,

To make amends I'll give it to your daughter.
 If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,
 To quicken your increase I will beget
 Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter:
 A grandam's name is little less in love
 Than is the doating title of a mother;
 They are as children but one step below,
 Even of your mettle, of your very blood;
 Of all one pain,—save for a night of groans
 Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like sorrow.
 Your children were vexation to your youth;
 But mine shall be a comfort to your age.
 The loss you have is but a son being king,
 And by that loss your daughter is made queen.
 I cannot make you what amends I would,
 Therefore accept such kindness as I can.
 Dorset your son, that with a fearful soul
 Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
 This fair alliance quickly shall call home
 To high promotions and great dignity: [wife,
 The king, that calls your beauteous daughter
 Familiarly shall call thy Dorset brother;
 Again shall you be mother to a king,
 And all the runs of distressful times
 Repair'd with double riches of content.
 What! we have many goodly days to see:
 The liquid drops of tears that you have shed
 Shall come again, transform'd to orient pearl,
 Advantaging their loan with interest
 Of ten-times-double gain of happiness.
 Go, then, my mother, to thy daughter go;
 Make bold her bashful years with your experience,

Prepare her ears to hear a wooer's tale:
 Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame
 Of golden sovereignty; acquaint the princess
 With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys:
 And when this arm of mine hath chastised
 The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,
 Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
 And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
 To whom I will retail my conquest won,
 And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar.

Q. Eliz. What were I best to say? her father's brother
 Would be her lord? or shall I say her uncle?
 Or he that slew her brothers and her uncles?
 Under what title shall I woo for thee,
 That God, the law, my honour, and her love
 Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?

K. Rich. Infer fair England's peace by this alliance.

Q. Eliz. Which she shall purchase with still-lasting war. [entreates.

K. Rich. Tell her the king, that may command,

Q. Eliz. That at her hands which the king's King forbids. [queen.

K. Rich. Say she shall be a high and mighty

Q. Eliz. To wail the title, as her mother doth.

K. Rich. Say I will love her everlastingly.

Q. Eliz. But how long shall that title, ever,
 last?

K. Rich. Sweetly in force unto her fair life's end. [life last?

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet

K. Rich. As long as heaven and nature lengthens it. [it.

Q. Eliz. As long as hell and Richard likes of K. Rich. Say I, her sovereign, am her subject low.

Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, loathes such sovereignty.

K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her.

Q. Eliz. An honest tale speeds best being plainly told. [tale.

K. Rich. Then, plainly to her tell my loving

Q. Eliz. Plain and not honest is too harsh a style.

K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick. [dead;—

Q. Eliz. O, no, my reasons are too deep and Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves.

K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam;
 that is past.

Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I till heartstrings break.

K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my crown,— [usurp'd.

Q. Eliz. Profan'd, dishonour'd, and the third

K. Rich. I swear,—

Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath:
 Thy George, profan'd hath lost his holy honour;
 Thy garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue;

Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory.
 If something thou wouldst swear to be believ'd, Swear, then, by something that thou hast not wrong'd.

K. Rich. Now, by the world,—

Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs.

K. Rich. My father's death,—

Q. Eliz. Thy life hath that dishonour'd.

K. Rich. Then, by myself,—

Q. Eliz. Thyself is self-misus'd.

K. Rich. Why, then, by God,—

Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.
 If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,
 The unity the king thy brother made
 Had not been broken, nor my brother slain:
 If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,
 The imperial metal, circling now thy head,
 Had grac'd the tender temples of my child;
 And both the princes had been breathing here,
 Which now, two tender bedfellows for dust,
 Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms.
 What canst thou swear by now?

K. Rich. The time to come.

Q. Eliz. That thou hast wrong'd in the time
 o'erpast;

For I myself have many tears to wash
 Hereafter time, for time past wronged by thee.
 The children live whose parents thou hast
 slaughter'd,

Ungovern'd youth, to wail it in their age;
 The parents live whose children thou hast
 butcher'd,

Old barren plants, to wail it with their age.

Swear not by time to come; for that thou hast
 Misus'd ere used, by times ill-us'd o'erpast.

K. Rich. As I intend to prosper and repent!

So thrive I in my dangerous attempt

Of hostile arms! myself myself confound!

Heaven and fortune bar me happy hours!

Day, yield me not thy light; nor, night, thy rest!

Be opposite all planets of good luck

To my proceeding!—if, with pure heart's love,

Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,

I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter!

In her consists my happiness and thine;

Without her, follows to myself and thee,

Herself, the land, and many a Christian soul,
 Death, desolation, ruin, and decay:
 It cannot be avoided but by this;
 It will not be avoided but by this.
 Therefore, dear mother,—I must call you so,—
 Be the attorney of my love to her:
 Plead what I will be, not what I have been;
 Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:
 Urge the necessity and state of times,
 And be not peevish found in great designs.

Q. Eliz. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?

K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt you to do good.

Q. Eliz. Shall I forget myself to be myself?

K. Rich. Ay, if your self's remembrance wrong yourself.

Q. Eliz. But thou didst kill my children.

K. Rich. But in your daughter's womb I bury them:

Where, in that nest of spicery, they shall breed
 Selves of themselves, to your recomforture.

Q. Eliz. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.

Q. Eliz. I go.—Write to me very shortly,
 And you shall understand from me her mind.

K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss; and so,
 farewell.

[Kissing her. Exit Q. ELIZ.]

Relenting fool, and shallow changing woman!

Enter RATCLIFF; CATESBY following.

How now! what news?

Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast

Rideth a puissant navy; to the shore
 Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends,
 Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back:
 'Tis thought that Richmond is their admiral;
 And there they hull, expecting but the aid
 Of Buckingham to welcome them ashore.

K. Rich. Some light-footed friend post to the Duke of Norfolk:—

Ratcliff, thyself,—or Catesby; where is he?

Cate. Here, my good lord.

K. Rich. Catesby, fly to the duke.

Cate. I will, my lord, with all convenient haste.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither:—post to Salisbury:

When thou cam'st thither,—Dull, unmindful villain, [To CATESBY.]

Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the duke?

Cate. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness' pleasure.

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

K. Rich. O, true, good Catesby:—bid him levy straight

The greatest strength and power he can make,
 And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.

Cate. I go. [Exit.]

Rat. What, may it please you, shall I do at Salisbury?

K. Rich. Why, what wouldst thou do there before I go?

Rat. Your highness told me I should post before.

Enter STANLEY.

K. Rich. My mind is chang'd.—Stanley, what news with you?

Stan. None good, my liege, to please you with the hearing;

Nor none so bad but well may be reported.

K. Rich. Ho day, a riddle! neither good nor bad!

What need'st thou run so many miles about,
 When thou mayst tell thy tale the nearest way?
 Once more, what news?

Stan. Richmond is on the seas.
K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him!

White-liver'd runagate, what doth he there?

Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.

K. Rich. Well, as you guess?

Stan. Stirr'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and Morton,

He makes for England here, to claim the crown.

K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword unsway'd?

Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd?

What heir of York is there alive but we?
 And who is England's king but great York's heir?

Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas?

Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.

K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege, [comes.]

You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman
 Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear.

Stan. No, mighty liege; therefore mistrust me not.

K. Rich. Where is thy power, then, to beat him back?

Where be thy tenants and thy followers?

Are they not now upon the western shore,
 Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?

Stan. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north.

K. Rich. Cold friends to me: what do they in the north, [west?]

When they should serve their sovereign in the Stan. They have not been commanded, mighty king:

Pleaseth your majesty to give me leave,
 I'll muster up my friends, and meet your grace

Where and what time your majesty shall please.

K. Rich. Ay, ay, thou wouldst be gone to join with Richmond;

But I'll not trust thee.

Stan. Most mighty sovereign,

You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful:

I never was nor never will be false.

K. Rich. Go, then, and muster men. But leave behind [be firm,

Your son, George Stanley: look your heart
 Or else his head's assurance is but frail.

Stan. So deal with him as I prove true to you.
 [Exit.]

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire,

As I by friends am well advertised,
 Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty prelate,

Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates, are in arms.

Enter a second Messenger.

2 Mess. In Kent, my liege, the Guilfords are in arms;
And every hour more competitors [strong.
Flock to the rebels, and their power grows

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My lord, the army of great Buckingham,—

K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but songs of death? [He strikes him.
There, take thou that till thou bring better
news.

3 Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty
Is, that by sudden floods and fall of waters,
Buckingham's army is dispers'd and scatter'd:
And he himself wander'd away alone,
No man knows whither.

K. Rich. I cry you mercy:
There is my purse to cure that blow of thine.
Hath any well-advised friend proclaim'd
Reward to him that brings the traitor in?

3 Mess. Such proclamation hath been made,
my liege.

Enter a fourth Messenger.

4 Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel and Lord Marquis
Dorset,
'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms.
But this good comfort bring I to your highness,—

The Bretagne navy is dispers'd by tempest:
Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks
If they were his assistants, yea or no;
Who answer'd him they came from Buckingham

Upon his party: he, mistrusting them,
Hois'd sail, and made his course again for Bretagne. [in arms;

K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up
If not to fight with foreign enemies,
Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

Re-enter CATESBY.

Cate. My liege, the Duke of Buckingham is taken,— [mond
That is the best news: that the Earl of Rich-
Is with a mighty power landed at Milford
Is colder news, but yet they must be told.

K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury! while we reason here

A royal battle might be won and lost:—
Some one take order Buckingham be brought To Salisbury; the rest march on with me.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Room in LORD STANLEY'S
House.

Enter STANLEY and SIR CHRISTOPHER URSWICK.

Stan. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from me:—

That in the sty of the most deadly boar
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold:
If I revolt, off goes young George's head;

The fear of that holds off my present aid.
So, get thee gone: commend me to thy lord;
Withal say that the queen hath heartily consented

He should espouse Elizabeth her daughter
But tell me, where is princely Richmond now?

Chris. At Pembroke, or at Ha'rford-west, in Wales.

Stan. What men of name resort to him?

Chris. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;

Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley;
Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, Sir James Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant crew;

And many other of great name and worth:
And towards London do they bend their power,
If by the way they be not fought withal. [hand;

Stan. Well, hie thee to thy lord; I kiss his
These letters will resolve him of my mind.
Farewell. [Gives papers to SIR CHRIS.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—SALISBURY. An open place.

Enter the Sheriff and Guard, with BUCKING-HAM, led to execution.

Buck. Will not King Richard let me speak
with him?

Sher. No, my good lord; therefore be patient.
Buck. Hastings, and Edward's children,
Grey, and Rivers,

Holy King Henry, and thy fair son Edward,
Vaughan, and all that have miscarried
By underhand corrupted foul injustice,—
If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction!—
This is All-Souls' day, fellows, is it not?

Sher. It is, my lord. [doomsday.

Buck. Why, then, All-Souls' day is my body's
This is the day which in King Edward's time
I wish'd might fall on me, when I was found
False to his children or his wife's allies;

This is the day wherein I wish'd to fall
By the false faith of him whom most I trusted;
This, this All-Soul's day to my fearful soul
Is the determin'd respite of my wrongs:

That high All-Seer which I dallied with Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest.

Thus doth he force the swords of wicked men
To turn their own points on their masters'
bosoms:

Thus Margaret's curse falls heavy on my neck,— [sorrow.

When he, quoth she, shall split thy heart with Remember Margaret was a prophetess.—

Come, sirs, convey me to the block of shame;
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Plain near Tamworth.

*Enter, with drum and colours, RICHMOND, OX-FORD, SIR JAMES BLUNT, SIR WALTER
HERBERT, and others, with Forces, marching.*

Richm. Fellows in arms, and my most loving friends,

Bruis'd underneath the yoke of tyranny,
Thus far into the bowels of the land
Have we march'd on without impediment;
And here receive we from our father Stanley
Lines of fair comfort and encouragement.
The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar,
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful
vines,

Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough

In your embowell'd bosoms,—this foul swine
Lies now even in the centre of this isle,
Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn:
From Tamworth thither is but one day's march.
In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace
By this one bloody trial of sharp war.

Oxf. Every man's conscience is a thousand
swords,

To fight against that bloody homicide.

Herb. I doubt not but his friends will turn to us.

Blunt. He hath no friends but what are friends for fear,

Which in his dearest need will fly from him.

Richm. All for our vantage. Then, in God's name, march:

True hope is swift, and flies with swallows'
wings;

Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures
kings. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Bosworth Field.

Enter KING RICHARD and Forces; the DUKE OF NORFOLK, EARL OF SURREY, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tents, even here in Bosworth field.—

My Lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?

Sur. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.

K. Rich. My Lord of Norfolk,—

Nor. Here, most gracious liege.

K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knocks; ha!
must we not? [lord.]

Nor. We must both give and take, my loving

K. Rich. Up with my tent! Here will I lie to-night;

[Soldiers begin to set up the KING's tent.
But where to-morrow? Well, all's one for that.—

Who hath described the number of the traitors?

Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power. [count:]

K. Rich. Why, our battalia trebles that ac-besides, the king's name is a tower of strength,
Which they upon the adverse faction want.—
Up with the tent!—Come, noble gentlemen,
Let us survey the vantage of the ground;—
Call for some men of sound direction:—
Let's lack no discipline, make no delay;
For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day. [Exeunt.]

Enter, on the other side of the Field, RICH-MOND, SIR WILLIAM BRANDON, OXFORD and other Lords. Some of the Soldiers pitch RICHMOND's tent.

Richm. The weary sun hath made a golden set,

And by the bright track of his fiery car

Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.—
ir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard.—

Give me some ink and paper in my tent:
I'll draw the form and model of our battle,
Limit each leader to his several charge,
And part in just proportion our small power.—
My Lord of Oxford,—you, Sir William Brandon,—

And you, Sir Walter Herbert,—stay with me.—
The Earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment:—

Good Captain Blunt, bear my good-night to him,
And by the second hour in the morning

Desire the earl to see me in my tent:
Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me,—

Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, do you know?
Blunt. Unless I have mista'en his colours much,—

Which well I am assur'd I have not done,—
His regiment lies half a mile at least

South from the mighty power of the king.

Richm. If without peril it be possible,
Sweet Blunt, make some good means to speak
with him,

And give him from me this most needful note.
Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it;

And so, God give you quiet rest to-night!
Richm. Good-night, good Captain Blunt.—

Come, gentlemen,
Let us consult upon to-morrow's business:

In to my tent: the air is raw and cold.
[They withdraw into the tent.]

*Enter, to his tent, KING RICHARD, NORFOLK
RATCLIFF, and CATESBY.*

K. Rich. What is't o'clock?

Cate. It's supper-time, my lord;
It's six o'clock.

K. Rich. I will not sup to-night.—
Give me some ink and paper.—

What, is my beaver easier than it was?
And all my armour laid into my tent?

Cate. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness.

K. Rich. Good Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge;

Use careful watch, choose trusty sentinels.

Nor. I go, my lord.

K. Rich. Stir with the lark to-morrow, gentle
Norfolk.

Nor. I warrant you, my lord. [Exit.]

K. Rich. Ratcliff,—

Rat. My lord?

K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant-at-arms

To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power
Before sunrise, lest his son George fall

Into the blind cave of eternal night.—

Fill me a bowl of wine.—Give me a watch.—

Saddle white Surrey to the field to-morrow.—

Look that my staves be sound, and not too heavy.—

Ratcliff.—

Rat. My lord?

K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy Lord
Northumberland?

Rat. Thomas the Earl of Surrey and himself, Much about cock-shut-time, from troop to troop

Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers.

K. Rich. So, I am satisfied.—Give me a bowl of wine:

I have not that alacrity of spirit
Nor cheer of mind that I was wont to have.
Set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?

Rat. It is, my lord.

K. Rich. Bid my guard watch; leave me.
Ratcliff, about the mid of night come to my tent
And help to arm me. Leave me, I say.

[*K. Rich. retires into his tent. Exeunt
RATCLIFF and CATESBY.*]

RICHMOND's tent opens, and discovers him and his Officers, &c.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!

Richm. All comfort that the dark night can afford

Be to thy person, noble father-in-law!
Tell me, how fares our loving mother?

Stan. I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother,

Who prays continually for Richmond's good:
So much for that.—The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.

In brief,—for so the season bids us be,— Prepare thy battle early in the morning,
And put thy fortune to the arbitrement
Of bloody strokes and mortal-staring war.

I, as I may,—that which I would I cannot,—
With best advantage will deceive the time,
And aid thee in this doubtful stroke of arms:
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Lest, being seen, thy brother, tender George,
Be executed in his father's sight.

Farewell: the leisure and the fearful time
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love
And ample interchange of sweet discourse,
Which so-long-sunder'd friends should dwell upon:

God give us leisure for these rites of love!
Once more, adieu: be valiant, and speed well!

Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment:

I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap,

Lest leaden slumber peise me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory:
Once more, good-night, kind lords and gentlemen.

[Exeunt Lords, &c. with STAN.]

O Thou whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye;
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Make us thy ministers of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory!
To thee I do commend my watchful soul
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping and waking, O, defend me still!

*The Ghost of PRINCE EDWARD, son to HENRY
THE SIXTH, rises between the two tents.*

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!
[To KING RICHARD.]

Think how thou stabb'dst me in my prime of youth

At Tewksbury: despair, therefore, and die!—
Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wronged souls
Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:
King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.

The Ghost of KING HENRY THE SIXTH rises.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my anointed body
[To KING RICHARD.]

By thee was punched full of deadly holes:
Think on the Tower and me: despair, and die,—
Harry the Sixth bids thee despair and die!—
Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror!

[To RICHMOND.]

Harry, that prophesied thou shouldst be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep: live, and flourish!

The Ghost of CLARENCE rises.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!
[To KING RICHARD.]

I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome wine,
Poor Clarence, by thy guile betray'd to death!
To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword: despair, and die!—
Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

[To RICHMOND.]

The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee:
Good angels guard thy battle! live, and flourish!

The Ghosts of RIVERS, GREY, and VAUGHAN rise.

G. of R. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow,
[To KING RICHARD.]

Rivers, that died at Pomfret! despair, and die!
G. of G. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!

[To KING RICHARD.]

G. of V. Think upon Vaughan, and, with guilty fear,

Let fall thy lance: despair, and die!—
[To KING RICHARD]

All Three. Awake, and think our wrongs in Richard's bosom [To RICHMOND.]

Will conquer him!—awake, and win the day!

The Ghost of HASTINGS rises.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake,
[To KING RICHARD.]

And in a bloody battle end thy days!
Think on Lord Hastings: despair, and die!—
Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake!

[To RICHMOND.]

Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!

The Ghosts of the two young Princes rise.

Ghosts. Dream on thy cousins, smother'd in the Tower:

Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard,
And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and death!
Thy nephews' souls, bid thee despair and die!—
Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in joy;

Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy!
Live, and beget a happy race of kings!
Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.

The Ghost of QUEEN ANNE rises.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,

That never slept a quiet hour with thee,
 Now fills thy sleep with perturbations:
 To-morrow in the battle think on me,
 And fall thy edgeless sword: despair, and die!—
 Thou quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep;
 [To RICHMOND.]
 Dream of success and happy victory:
 Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

The Ghost of BUCKINGHAM rises.

Ghost. The first was I that help'd thee to the crown;
 [To KING RICHARD]
 The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
 O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
 And die in terror of thy guiltiness!
 Dream on, dream on of bloody deeds and death:
 Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath!—

I died for hope ere I could lend thee aid.

[To RICHMOND.]
 But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd:
 God and good angels fight on Richmond's side,
 And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

[The Ghosts vanish. K. RICH. starts. out of his dream.]

K. Rich. Give me another horse,—bind up my wounds,—
 Have mercy, Jesu!—Soft! I did but dream.—
 O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me!—

The lights burn blue.—It is now dead midnight.

Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.
 What, do I fear myself? there's none else by:
 Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.
 Is there a murderer here? No;—yes; I am;
 Then fly. What, from myself? Great reason why,—

Lest I revenge. What,—myself upon myself!
 Alack, I love myself. Wherefore? for any good
 That I myself have done unto myself?
 O, no! alas, I rather hate myself
 For hateful deeds committed by myself!
 I am a villain: yet I lie, I am not.
 Fool, of thyself speak well:—fool, do not flatter.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
 And every tongue brings in a several tale,
 And every tale condemns me for a villain.
 Perjury, perjury, in the high'st degree;
 Murder, stern murder, in the dir'st degree;
 All several sins, all us'd in each degree,
 Throwing the bar, crying all, Guilty! guilty!
 I shall despair. There is no creature loves me;
 And if I die no soul shall pity me:
 Nay, wherefore should they,—since that I myself

Find in myself no pity to myself?
 Methought the souls of all that I had murder'd
 Came to my tent; and every one did threat
 To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter RATCLIFF.

Rat. My lord,—

K. Rich. Who's there? [village-cock]

Rat. Ratcliff, my lord; 'tis I. The early
 Hath twice done salutation to the morn;
 Your friends are up, and buckle on their armour.

K. Rich. O Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful dream!— [true?]

What thinkest thou,—will our friends prove all
 Rat. No doubt, my lord.

K. Rich. O Ratcliff, I fear, I fear,—

Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows. [night]

K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to—
 Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers

Armed in proof and led by shallow Richmond.
 It is not yet near day. Come, go with me;
 Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
 To hear if any mean to shrink from me.

[Exeunt K. RICH. and RATCLIFF.]

RICHMOND wakes. Enter OXFORD and others

Lords. Good-morrow, Richmond! [men,
 Richm. Cry mercy, lords and watchful gentle-
 That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.

Lords. How have you slept, my lord?

Richm. The sweetest sleep and fairest-boding dreams

That ever enter'd in a drowsy head
 Have I since your departure had, my lords.
 Methought their souls whose bodies Richard
 murder'd

Came to my tent, and cried on victory:
 I promise you, my heart is very jocund
 In the remembrance of so fair a dream.
 How far into the morning is it, lords?

Lords. Upon the stroke of four.

Rich. Why, then, 'tis time to arm and give direction.—

[He advances to the Troops.]

More than I have said, loving countrymen,
 The leisure and enforcement of the time
 Forbids to dwell on: yet remember this,—
 God and our good cause fight upon our side;
 The prayers of holy saints and wronged souls,
 Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before our faces;

Richard except, those whom we fight against
 Had rather have us win than him they follow:
 For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
 A bloody tyrant and a homicide; [lish'd;
 One rais'd in blood, and one in blood estab-
 One that made means to come by what he hath,
 And slaughter'd those that were the means to help him;

A base foul stone, made precious by the foil
 Of England's chair, where he is falsely set;
 One that hath ever been God's enemy:
 Then, if you fight against God's enemy,
 God will, in justice, ward you as his soldiers;
 If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,
 You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain;
 If you do fight against your country's foes,
 Your country's fat shall pay your pains the hire;
 If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
 Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors;
 If you do free your children from the sword,
 Your children's children quit it in your age.
 Then, in the name of God and all these rights, Advance your standards, draw your willing swords.

For me, the ransom of my bold attempt
 Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face;

But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt
The least of you shall share his part thereof.
Sound drums and trumpets boldly and cheerfully;
God and Saint George! Richmond and victory!
[Exeunt.]

Re-enter KING RICHARD, RATCLIFF, Attendants, and Forces.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland as touching Richmond?

Rat. That he was never trained up in arms.
K. Rich. He said the truth: and what said
Surrey then? [purpose.]

Rat. He smil'd, and said, the better for our K. Rich. He was in the right; and so, indeed, it is. [Clock strikes.]

Tell the clock there.—Give me a calendar,—
Who saw the sun to-day?

Rat. Not I, my lord.

K. Rich. Then he disdains to shine; for by the book
He should have brav'd the east an hour ago:
A black day will it be to somebody.—
Ratcliff.—

Rat. My lord?

H. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day;
The sky doth frown and lower upon our army.
I would these dewy tears were from the ground.
Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me
More than to Richmond? for the selfsame
heaven

That frowns on me looks sadly upon him.

Enter NORFOLK.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaunts in the field. [horse;—]

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle; caparison my
Call up Lord Stanley, bid him bring his power:
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered:—
My forward shall be drawn out all in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot;
Our archers shall be placed in the midst:
John Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.
They thus directed, we ourself will follow
In the main battle; whose puissance on either side

Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
This, and Saint George to boot!—What think'st thou, Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.—
This found I on my tent this morning.

[Giving a scroll.]
K. Rich. [Reads.] Jocky of Norfolk, be not too bold,

For Dickon thy master is bought and sold.
A thing devised by the enemy.—
Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge:
Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls;
Conscience is but a word that cowards use;
Devil'd at first to keep the strong in awe:
Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.

March on, join bravely, let us to 't pell-mell;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.—
What shall I say more than I have infer'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withal;—

A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and runaways,
A scum of Breagnes, and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and assur'd destruction.
You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest;
You having lands, and bless'd with beauteous
wives,

They would restrain the one, disdain the other.
And who doth lead them but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost?
A milk sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow?
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives;
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd themselves:

If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Breagnes; whom our fathers [thump'd,

Have in their own land beaten, bobb'd, and
And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?

Ravish our daughters?—Hark! I hear their drum. [Drum afar off.]

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeo-
men!

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head!
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves!

Enter a Messenger.

What says Lord Stanley? will he bring his power?

Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off with his son George's head!

Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the marsh:

After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom:

Advance our standards, set upon our foes;
Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,
Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!
Upon them! Victory sits on our helmets.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarum: excursions. Enter NORFOLK and Forces; to him CATESBY.

Cate. Rescue, my Lord of Norfolk, rescue, rescue!

The king enacts more wonders than a man,
Daring an opposite to every danger:
His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death
Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarum. Enter KING RICHARD.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cate. Withdraw, my lord; I'll help you to a horse.

K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die:
I think there be six Richmonds in the field;

Five have I slain to-day instead of him.—
A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Enter, from opposite sides, KING RICHARD and RICHMOND; and exeunt fighting. Retreat, and flourish. Then re-enter RICHMOND, with STANLEY bearing the crown and divers other Lords and Forces.

Richm. God and your arms be prais'd, victorious friends;

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead.

Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquit thee!

Lo, here, this long-usurped royalty
From the dead temples of this bloody wretch
Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy brows withal:
Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it. [all!—

Richm. Great God of heaven, say Amen to
But, tell me, is young George Stanley living?

Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town, [us.

Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?

Stan. John Duke of Norfolk, Walter Lord
Ferrers, [don.

Sir Robert Brakenbury, and Sir William Bran-Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births:

Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled
That in submission will return to us:

And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,

We will unite the white rose and the red:—

Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,

That long hath frown'd upon their enmity!

What traitor hears me, and says not Amen?

England hath long been mad, and scarr'd herself;

The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,

The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,

The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire:

All this divided York and Lancaster,

Divided in their dire division,—

O, now let Richmond and Elizabeth,

The true successors of each royal house,

By God's fair ordinance conjoin together!

And let their heirs,—God, if thy will be so,—

Enrich the time to come with smooth'd-fac'd
peace,

With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days!

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,

That would reduce these bloody days again,

And make poor England weep in streams of
blood!

Let them not live to taste this land's increase

That would with treason wound this fair land's
peace!

Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives

That she may long live here, God say Amen!

PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh: things now
 That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
 Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
 Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
 We now present. Those that can pity, here
 May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
 The subject will deserve it. Such as give Their money out of hope they may believe,
 May here find truth too. Those that come to see
 Only a show or two, and so agree

The play may pass, if they be still and willing,
 I'll undertake may see away their shilling Richly in two short hours. Only they
 That come to hear a merry bawdy play,
 A noise of targets, or to see a fellow
 In a long motley coat guarded with yellow,
 Will be deceiv'd; for, gentle hearers, know,
 To rank our chosen truth with such a show
 As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
 Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring,
 To make that only true we now intend,
 Will leave us never an understanding friend.

Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known

The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad, as we would make ye: think ye see
The very persons of our noble story
As they were living; think you see them great,
And follow'd with the general throng and sweat
Of thousand friends; then, in a moment, see
How soon this mightiness meets misery:
And if you can be merry then I'll say
A man may weep upon his wedding-day.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—LONDON. An Ante-Chamber in the Palace.

Enter the DUKE OF NORFOLK at one door; at the other, the DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM and the LORD ABERGAVENNY.

Buck. Good-morrow, and well met. How have you done
Since last we saw in France?

Nor. I thank your grace,
Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely ague
Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when
Those suns of glory, those two lights of men,
Met in the vale of Andren.

Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde:
I was then present, saw them salute on horseback; [clung
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they
In their embracement, as they grew together;
Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weigh'd
Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: men might say,
Till this time pomp was single, but now married

To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders it's: to-day the French,
All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English; and to-morrow they Made Britain India: every man that stood Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were

As cherubims, all gilt: the madams too,
Not us'd to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them as a painting: now this masque
Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As presence did present them; him in eye,
Still him in praise: and, being present both,
'Twas said they saw but one; and no discern-Durst was his tongue in censure. When these suns,— [leng'd

For so they phrase 'em,—by their heralds chal-
The noble spirits to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought's compass: that former fabulous story,

Being now seen possible enough, got credit,
That Bevis was believ'd.

Buck. O, you go far.
Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of everything
Would by a good discourser lose some life, Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal;

To the disposing of it naught rebell'd,
Order gave each thing view; the office did
Distinctly his full function.

Buck. Who did guide—
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?

Nor. One, certes, that promises no element
In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord?
Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion

Of the right reverend Cardinal of York. [freed Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is
From his ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fierce vanities? I wonder
That such a keech can with his very bulk
Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir,
There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends; [grace

For, being not propp'd by ancestry, whose Chalks successors their way; nor call'd upon
For high feats done to the crown; neither allied
To eminent assistants; but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note
The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys
A place next to the king.

Aber. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him,—let some graver
eye

Pierce into that; but I can see his pride Peep through each part of him: whence has he
that?

If not from hell, the devil is a niggard;
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil,
Upon this French going-out, took he upon him,
Without the privy o' the king, to appoint Who should attend on him? He makes up the file

Of all the gentry; for the most part such
To whom as great a charge as little honour
He meant to lay upon; and his own letter,
The honourable board of council out,
Must fetch him in the papers.

Aber. I do know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sicken'd their estates that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O, many 'em
Have broke their backs with laying manors on
For this great journey. What did this vanity
But minister communication of
A most poor issue?

Nor. Grievedly I think,
The peace between the French and us not values,

The cost that did conclude it.
Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd was
A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke

Into a general prophecy.—That this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on't.

Nor. Which is budded out;
For France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd

Our merchants' goods at Bordeaux.

Aber. Is it therefore
The ambassador is silenc'd?

Nor. Marry, is't.

Aber. A proper title of a peace; and purchas'd

At a superfluous rate!

Buck. Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carried.

Nor. Like it your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you,—
And take it from a heart that wishes towards
you

Honour and plenteous safety,—that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potency
Together; to consider further, that
What his high hatred would effect wants not
A minister in his power. You know his nature,
That he's revengeful; and I know his sword
Hath a sharp edge: it's long, and, 't may be said,
It reaches far; and where 'twill not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel, You'll find it wholesome.—Lo, where comes that rock
That I advise you shunning.

Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY, the purse borne before him, certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with papers. The CARDINAL in his passage fixeth his eye on BUCKINGHAM, and BUCKINGHAM on him, both full of disdain.

Wol. The Duke of Buckingham's surveyor?
ha?

Where's his examination?

1 Secr. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready?

1 Secr. Ay, please your grace.

Wol. Well, we shall then know more; and Buckingham

Shall lessen this big look.

[Exeunt WOLSEY and Train.]

Buck. This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd, and I

Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore best

Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book
Outworths a noble's blood.

Nor. What, are you chaf'd?

Ask God for temperance; that's the appliance only

Which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in's looks

Matter against me; and his eye revell'd
Me, as his subject object: at this instant [king;

He bores me with some trick: he's gone to the
I'll follow, and outstare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord,

And let your reason with your choler question
What 'tis you go about: to climb steep hills
Requires slow pace at first: anger is like
A full-hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Not a man in England

Can advise me like you: be to yourself
As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king;
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence; or proclaim
There's difference in no persons.

Nor. Be advis'd;
Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it do singe yourself: we may outrun,
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor till 't run o'er,
In seeming to augment it wastes it? Be advis'd:
I say again, there is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself,
If with the sap of reason you would quench
Or but allay the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir
I am thankful to you; and I'll go along
By your prescription: but this top-proud fellow,—

Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions,—by intelligence,
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel, I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not treasonous.

Buck. To the king I'll say't; and make my vouch as strong

As shore of rock. Attend. This holy fox,
Or wolf, or both,—for he is equal ravenous
As he is subtle, and as prone to mischief
As able to perform't; his mind and place
Infecting one another, yea, reciprocally,—
Only to show his pomp as well in France
As here at home, suggests the king our master
To this last costly treaty, the interview,
Tha. swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass

Did break i' the rinsing.

Nor. Faith, and so it did.

Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning cardinal

The articles o' the combination drew
As himself pleas'd; and they were ratified
As he cried, Thus let be: to as much end
As give a crutch to the dead: but our count-cardinal

Has done this, and 'tis well; for worthy Wolsey,
Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows,—
Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
To the old dam treason,—Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,—
For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey,—here makes visitation:
His fears that the interview betwixt

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him: he privily
Deals with our cardinal; and, as I trow,—
Which I do well; for I am sure the emperor Paid ere he promis'd; whereby his suit was granted

Ere it was ask'd;—but when the way was made,
And pay'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd,—

That he would please to alter the king's course,
And break the foresaid peace. Let the king
know,—

As soon he shall by me,—that thus the cardinal

Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,
And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry
To hear this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in't.

Buck. No, not a syllable:
I do pronounce him in that very shape
He shall appear in proof.

Enter BRANDON, a Sergeant-at-Arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Bran. Your office, sergeant; execute it.
Serg. Sir,
My lord the Duke of Buckingham, and Earl
Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I
Arrest thee of high treason, in the name
Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo, you, my lord,
The net has fall'n upon me! I shall perish
Under device and practice.

Bran. I am sorry
To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on
The business present: 'tis his highness' pleasure
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me Which makes my whit'st part black. The will of heaven

Be done in this and all things!—I obey.—
O my Lord Abergavenny, fare you well!

Bran. Nay, he must bear you company.—
The king [To ABERGAVENNY.
Is pleas'd you shall to the Tower, till you know
How he determines further.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure
By me obey'd!

Bran. Here is a warrant from
The king to attach Lord Montacute; and the bodies
Of the duke's confessor, John de la Car,
One Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,—

Buck. So, so;
These are the limbs o' the plot;—no more, I
hope.

Bran. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O, Nicholas Hopkins?

Bran. He.

Buck. My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal [ready:

Hath show'd him gold; my life is spann'd al-
I am the shadow of poor Buckingham,
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on,
By darkening my clear sun.—My lord, farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—LONDON. The Council Chamber.

Cornets. Enter KING HENRY, CARDINAL
WOLSEY, the Lords of the Council, SIR
THOMAS LOVELL, Officers, and Attendants.
The KING enters, leaning on the CARDINAL'S shoulder.

K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart of it, [level
Thanks you for this great care: I stood i' the
Of a full-charg'd confederacy, and give thanks
To you that choked it.—Let be call'd before us

That gentleman of Buckingham's: in person
I'll hear him his confessions justify;
An point by point the treasons of his master
He shall again relate.

[The KING takes his state. The Lords of the Council take their several places. The CARDINAL places himself under the KING'S feet, on his right side.

A noise within, crying, "Room for the Queen!" Enter QUEEN KATHARINE, ushered by the DUKES OF NORFOLK and SUFFOLK: she kneels. The KING riseth from his state, takes her up, kisses, and placeth her by him.

Q. Kath. Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a suitor. [your suit

K. Hen. Arise, and take place by us:—half
Never name to us; you have half our power:
The other moiety, ere you ask, is given;
Repeat your will, and take it.

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty.
That you would love yourself, and in that love
Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor
The dignity of your office, is the point
Of my petition.

K. Hen. Lady mine, proceed.
Q. Kath. I am solicited, not by a few,
And those of true condition, that your subjects
Are in great grievance: there have been commissions

Sent down among 'em which have flaw'd the
heart

Of all their loyalties:—wherein, although,
My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, as putter-on
Of these exactions, yet the king our master,— Whose honour Heaven shield from soil!—even he escapes not

Language unmannerly, yea, such which breaks
The sides of loyalty, and almost appears
In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,—
It doth appear; for, upon these taxations,
The clothiers all, not able to maintain
Them any to them 'longing, have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who,
Unfit for other life, compell'd by hunger
And lack of other means, in desperate manner
Daring the event to the teeth, are all in uproar,
And danger serves among them.

K. Hen. Taxation!
Wherein? and what taxation?—My lord cardinal,

You that are blam'd for it alike with us,
Know you of this taxation?

Wol. Please you, sir,
I know but of a single part, in aught
Pertains to the state; and front but in that file
Where others tell steps with me.

Q. Kath. No, my lord,
You know no more than others; but you frame Things that are known alike; which are not wholesome [must

To those which would not know them, and yet Perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions,

Whereof my sovereign would have note. they

Most pestilent to the hearing; and to bear 'em
The back is sacrifice to the load. They say
They are devis'd by you; or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hen. Still exaction!
The nature of it in what kind, let's know,
Is this exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturesome
In tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd Under your promis'd pardon. The subjects'
grief

Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his substance, to be levied
Without delay; and the pretence for this Is nam'd your wars in France: this makes bold mouths;

Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts
freeze

Allegiance in them; their curses now Live where their prayers did: and it's come to pass

This tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. I would your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no primer business.

K. Hen. By my life,
This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me,
I have no further gone in this than by
A single voice; and that not pass'd me but
By learned approbation of the judges. If I am Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither
know

My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing,—let me say
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. We must not stint

Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope malicious censurers; which ever.
As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow
That is new-trimm'd, but benefit no further Than vainly longing. What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, once weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at,
We should take root here where we sit, or sit
State-statues only.

K. Hen. Things done well
And with a care exempt themselves from fear
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each
A trembling contribution! Why, we take From every tree lop, bark, and part o' the timber;

And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd
The air will drink the sap. To every county
Where this is question'd send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied
The force of this commission: pray, look to't;
I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you.

[To the Secretary.
Let there be letters writ to every shire,

Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons

Hardly conceive of me; let it be nois'd
That through our intercession this revokement
And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you
Further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.

Q. Kath. I am sorry that the Duke of Buckingham

Is run in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many:

The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare
speaker;

To nature none more bound; his training such
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers
And never seek for aid out of himself. Yet see,
When these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind growing once corrupt,

They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly

Than ever they were fair. This man so complete, [we,

Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when Almost with ravish'd list'ning, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady,
Hath into monstrous habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black As if besmear'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear—

This was his gentleman in trust,—of him
Things to strike honour sad,—Bid him recount
The fore-cited practices; whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much.

Wol. Stand forth, and with bold spirit relate what you,

Most like a careful subject, have collected
Out of the Duke of Buckingham.

K. Hen. Speak freely.

Surv. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would infect his speech,—that if the king
Should without issue die, he'll carry it so
To make the sceptre his: these very words
I have heard him utter to his son-in-law,
Lord Abergarny; to whom by oath he menac'd
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note
This dangerous conception in this point.
Not friended by his wish, to your high person
His will is most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends.

Q. Kath. My learn'd lord cardinal,
Deliver all with charity.

K. Hen. Speak on:

How grounded he his title to the crown
Upon our fall? to this point hast thou heard him
At any time speak aught?

Surv. He was brought to this
By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. Hen. What was that Hopkins?

Surv. Sir, a Chartreux friar,
His confessor; who fed him every minute
With words of sovereignty.

K. Hen. How know'st thou this?
Surv. Not long before your highness sped to
France,

The Duke being at the Rose, within the parish
Saint Lawrence Poultny, did of me demand

What was the speech among the Londoners Concerning the French journey: I replied, Men fear'd the French would prove perfidious, To the king's danger. Presently the duke Said, 'twas the fear, indeed; and that he doubted

'Twould prove the verity of certain words Spoke by a holy monk; That ofi, says he. Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit John de la Car, my chaplain, a choice hour To hear from him a matter of some moment: Whom after under the confession's seal He solemnly had sworn, that what he spoke My chaplain to no creature living but To me should utter, with demure confidence This pausingly ensu'd,—Neither the king nor's heirs,

Tell you the duke, shall prosper: bid him strive To gain the love o' the commonalty: the duke Shall govern England.

O. Kath. If I know you well, You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office [heed On the complaint o' the tenants: take good You charge not in your spleen a noble person, And spoil your nobler soul: I say, take heed: Yes, heartily beseech you.

K. Hen. Let him on:— Go forward.

Surv. On my soul, I'll speak but truth. I told my lord the duke, by the devil's illusions The monk might be deceiv'd; and that 'twas dangerous for him To ruminate on this so far, until It forg'd him some design, which, being believ'd,

It was much like to do: he answer'd, Tush, It can do me no damage; adding further, That, had the king in his last sickness fail'd, The cardinal's and Sir Thomas Lovell's heads Should have gone off.

K. Hen. Hal! what, so rank? Ah-hal! There's mischief in this man:—Canst thou say further?

Surv. I can, my liege.

K. Hen. Proceed.

Surv. Being at Greenwich, After your highness had reprov'd the duke About Sir William Blomer,—

K. Hen. I remember Of such a time:—being my sworn servant, The duke retain'd him his.—But on; what hence?

Surv. If, quoth he, I for this had been committed, As, to the Tower, I thought,—I would have play'd

The part my father meant to act upon The usurper Richard; who, being at Salisbury, Made suit to come in's presence; which, if granted,

As he put semblance of his duty, would Have bid his knife into him.

K. Hen. A giant traitor!

Wol. Now, madam, may his highness live in freedom, And this man out of prison?

O. Kath. God mend all!

K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee; what say'st?

Surv. After the duke his father, with the knife,

He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,

Another spread on's breast, mounting his eyes, He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenor Was, were he evil us'd, he would out-go His father by as much as a performance Does an irrelative purpose.

K. Hen. There's his period, To sheath his knife in us. He is attach'd; Call him to present trial: if he may Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none, Let him not seek't of us: by day and night, He is a daring traitor to the height. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—LONDON. A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain and LORD SANDS.

Cham. Is't possible the spells of France should juggle

Men into such strange mysteries?

Sands. New customs,

Though they be never so ridiculous,

Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd.

Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English

Have got by the late voyage is but merely

A fit or two o' the face; but they are shrewd ones;

For when they hold them, you would swear directly

Their very noses had been counsellors To Pepin or Clotharius, they keep state so.

Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones: one would take it,

That never saw 'em pace before, the spavin Or springhalt reign'd among 'em.

Cham. Death! my lord, Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too, That sure they have worn out Christendom.

Enter SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

How now? What news, Sir Thomas Lovell?

Lov. 'Faith, my lord,

I hear of none, but the new proclamation

That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.

Cham. What is't for?

Lov. The reformation of our travel'd galleons, [tailors.

That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and

Cham. I am glad 'tis there: now I would pray our monsieurs

To think an English courtier may be wise, And never see the Louvre.

Lov. They must either—

For so run the conditions—leave those remnants

Of fool and feather that they got in France,

With all their honourable points of ignorance

Pertaining thereunto,—as fights and fireworks:

Abusing better men than they can be,

Out of a foreign wisdom,—renouncing clean

The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,

Short blister'd breeches, and those types of travel,

And understand again, like honest men;

Or pack to their old playfellows: there, I take it,

They may, cum privilegio, wear away

The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.

Sands. 'Tis time to give 'em physic, their diseases
Are grown so catching.

Cham. What a loss our ladies
Will have of these trim vanities!

Lov. Ay, marry,
There will be woe indeed, lords: the sly whore-
sons

Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
A French song and a fiddle has no fellow.

Sands. The devil fiddle 'em! I am glad they're going,—

For, sure, there's no converting of 'em:—now
An honest country lord, as I am, beaten [song,
A long time out of play, may bring his plain-
And have an hour of hearing; and, by'r Lady,
Held current music too.

Cham. Well said, Lord Sands;
Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.

Sands. No, my lord;
Nor shall not, while I have a stump.

Cham. Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a-going?

Lov. To the cardinal's:
Your lordship is a guest too.

Cham. O, 'tis true;
This night he makes a supper, and a great one,
To many lords and ladies; there will be
The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.

Lov. That churchman bears a bounteous mund indeed,

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dews fall everywhere.

Cham. No doubt he's noble;
He had a black mouth that said other of him.

Sands. He may, my lord,—has wherewithal;
in him [trine:
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doc-
Men of his way should be most liberal;
They are set here for examples.

Cham. True, they are so;
But few now give so great ones. My barge stays; [Thomas,
Your lordship shall along.—Come, good Sir
We shall be late else; which I would not be,
For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guildford,
This night to be comptrollers.

Sands. I am your lordship's.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—LONDON. The Presence Chamber in York Place.

Hautboys. A small table under a state for the CARDINAL, a longer table for the guests.
Enter, at one door, ANNE BULLEN, and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlewoman, as guests; at another door, enter SIR HENRY GUILDFORD.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace

Salutes ye all; this night he dedicates
To fair content and you: none here, he hopes,
In all this noble bevvy, has brought with her
One care abroad; he would have all as merry
As, first, good company, good wine, good welcome [tardy:
Can make good people.—O, my lord, you are

Enter Lord Chamberlain, LORD SANDS, and SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

The very thought of this fair company
Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, Sir Henry Guildford.

Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal
But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested;
I think would better please 'em: by my life,
They are a sweet society of fair ones. [fessor

Lov. O, that your lordship were but now con-
To one or two of these!

Sands. I would I were;
They should find easy penance.

Lov. Faith, how easy?

Sands. As easy as a down-bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit?

Sir Harry,
Place you that side; I'll take the charge of this;
His grace is ent'ring.—Nay, you must not freeze;

Two women plac'd together makes cold weather:—

My Lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em waking;

Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith,
And thank your lordship.—By your leave,
sweet ladies:

[Seats himself between ANNE BULLEN and another Lady.

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;
I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir?

Sands. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love too:

But he would bite none; just as I do now,—
He would kiss you twenty with a breath.

[Kisses her.
Cham. Well said, my lord.—

So, now you've fairly seated.—Gentlemen,
The penance lies on you if these fair ladies
Pass away frowning.

Sands. For my little cure,
Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter CARDINAL WOLSEY, attended; and takes his state.

Wol. Ye're welcome, my fair guests: that noble lady

Or gentleman that is not freely merry
Is not my friend: this, to confirm my welcome;
And to you all, good health. [Drinks.

Sands. Your grace is noble:—
Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,
And save me so much talking.

Wol. My Lord Sands.
I am beholden to you: cheer your neighbours,—
Ladies, you are not merry:—gentlemen,
Whose fault is this?

Sands. The red wine first must rise
In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have
'em

Talk us to silence.

Anne. You are a merry gamester,
My Lord Sands.

Sands. Yes, if I make my play.
Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam,
For 'tis to such a thing,—

Anne. You cannot show me.

Sands. I told your grace they would talk anon.

[Drum and trumpets: Chambers discharged within.]

Wol. What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of ye.

[Exit a Servant.]

Wol. What warlike voice,
And to what end, is this?—Nay ladies, fear not;
By all the laws of war ye're privileg'd.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now! what is't?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers,—
For so they seem: they have left their barge, and landed:

And hither make, as great ambassadors
From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain,
Go, give 'em welcome; you can speak the French tongue;

And, pray receive 'em nobly, and conduct 'em
Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty
Shall shine at full upon them.—Some attend
him.

[Exit Chamberlain attended. All arise, and tables removed.]

You have now a broken banquet: but we'll mend it.

A good digestion to you all: and once more
I shower a welcome on you;—welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the KING, and others, as maskers, habited like shepherds, with Torch-bearers, ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the CARDINAL, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures?

Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd

To tell your grace,—that, having heard by fame
Of this so noble and so fair assembly
This night to meet here, they could do no less
Out of the great respect they bear to beauty,
But leave their flocks; and, under your fair conduct,

Crave leave to view these ladies, and entreat
An hour of revels with 'em.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain,
They have done my poor house grace, for which
I pay 'em pleasures.

A thousand thanks, and pray 'em take their [Ladies chosen for the dance. The KING chooses ANNE BULLEN.]

K. Hen. The fairest hand I ever touch'd!
O beauty,

Till now I never knew thee! [Music. Dance.]

Wol. My lord,—

Cham. Your grace?

Wol. Pray tell them thus much from me:—
There should be one amongst them, by his person,

More worthy this place than myself; to whom,
If I but knew him, with my love and duty
I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.

[Goes to the Maskers, and returns.]

Wol. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess,
There is indeed; which they would have your
grace

Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see, then.—

[Comes from his state.]
By all your good leaves, gentlemen:—here I'll make

My royal choice.

K. Hen. Ye have found him, cardinal:
[Unmasking.]

You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord:
You are a churchman, or I'll tell you, cardinal
I should judge now unhappily.

Wol. I am glad

Your grace is grown so pleasant.

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain,

Pr'ythee, come hither: what fair lady's that?

Cham. An't please your grace, Sir Thomas
Bullen's daughter,—[women.]

The Viscount Rochford,—one of her highness'
K. Hen. By heaven, she is a dainty one.—

Sweetheart,

I were unmannerly to take you out,

And not to kiss you.—A health, gentlemen!

Let it go round.

Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready
I the privy chamber?

Lov. Yes, my lord.

Wol. Your grace,

I fear, with dancing is a little heated.

K. Hen. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's fresher air, my lord,
In the next chamber. [sweet partner,

K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one:—

I must not yet forsake you:—let's be merry:—

Good my lord cardinal, I have half a dozen healths

To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure

To lead 'em once again; and then let's dream

Who's best in favour.—Let the music knock it.
[Exeunt, with trumpets.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. —LONDON. A Street.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast?

2 Gent. O, God save ye!

E'en to the hall, to hear what shall become
Of the great Duke of Buckingham.

1 Gent. I'll save you That labour, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony

Of bringing back the prisoner.

2 Gent. Were you there?

1 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.

2 Gent. Pray, speak what has happen'd.

1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.

2 Gent. Is he found guilty?

1 Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon't.

2 Gent. I am sorry for't.

1 Gent. So are a number more.

2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it? [duke

1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great
Came to the bar; where to his accusations
He pleaded still not guilty, and alleg'd

Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions
Of divers witnesses; which the duke desir'd
To have brought, viva voce, to his face:
At which appear'd against him his surveyor;
Sir Gilbert Peck, his chancellor; and John Car,
Confessor to him; with that devil-monk,
Hopkins, that made this mischief.

2 Gent.

That was he
That fed him with his prophecies?

1 Gent.

The same.
All these accus'd him strongly; which he fain
Would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could not:

And so his peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him or forgotten. [self?

2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear him-

1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar to hear

His knell rung out, his judgment,—he was
With such an agony, he sweat extremely,
And something spoke in choler, ill, and hasty;
But he fell to himself again, and sweetly
In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.

2 Gent. I do not think he fears death.

1 Gent.

Sure, he does not,
He never was so womanish; the cause
He may a little grieve at.

2 Gent.

Certainly
The cardinal is the end of this.

1 Gent.

'Tis likely,
By all conjectures: first, Kildare's attainder,
Then deputy of Ireland; who remov'd,
Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,
Lest he should help his father.

2 Gent.

That trick of state
Was a deep envious one.

1 Gent.

At his return
No doubt he will requite it. This is noted,
And generally,—whoever the king favours
The cardinal instantly will find employment,
And far enough from court too.

2 Gent.

All the commons
Hate him perniciously, and, o' my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much
They love and dote on; call him bounteous
Buckingham,

The mirror of all courtesies,—

1 Gent.

Stay there, sir,
And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

*Enter BUCKINGHAM from his arraignment;
Tip-staves before him; the axe with the edge towards him; halberds on each side: with him SIR THOMAS LOVELL, SIR NICHOLAS VAUX, SIR WILLIAM SANDS, and common
people.*

2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.

Buck.

All good people,
You that thus far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me
I have this day receiv'd a traitor's judgment,
And by that name must die: yet, heaven bear
witness,

And if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful!

The law I bear no malice for my death;

'T has done, upon the premises, but justice:
But those that sought it I could wish more Christians:

Be what they will, I heartily forgive 'em:

Yet let 'em look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against
'em.

For further life in this world I ne'er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies
More than I dare make faults. You few that lov'd me,

And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to him, only dying,
Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And as the long divorce of steel falls on me
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heaven.—Lead on, o' Gods'
name.

Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you

As I would be forgiven: I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences
'Gainst me that I cannot take peace with: no black envy

Shall make my grave.—Commend me to his
grace;

And if he speak of Buckingham, pray tell him
You met him half in heaven: my vows and prayers

Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake,
Shall cry for blessings on him; may he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years!
Ever below'd may his rule be!

And when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument!

Lov. To the water side I must conduct your
grace;

Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.

Vaux.

Prepare there,
The duke is coming: see the barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture as suits
The greatness of his person.

Buck.

Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone: my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither I was lord high constable
And Duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward Bohun:

Yet I am richer than my base accusers, [it;
That never knew what truth meant: I now seal
And with that blood will make 'em one day groan for't.

My noble father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his servant Banister,
Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd,
And without trial fell; God's peace be with him!
Henry the Seventh succeeding, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd me to my honours, and out of ruins
Made my name once more noble. Now his son,
Henry the Eighth, life, honour, name, and all
That made me happy, at one stroke has taken
For ever from the world. I had my trial,

And must needs say a noble one; which makes
me

A little happier than my wretched father:
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes,—both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most;

A most unnatural and faithless service!
Heaven has an end in all, yet, you that hear me.
This from a dying man receive as certain:—
Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels,

Be sure you be not loose; for those you make friends [ceive

And give your hearts to, when they once per-
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But where they mean to sink ye. All good people, [hour

Pray for me! I must now forsake ye: the last
Of my long weary life is come upon me.
Farewell:

And when you would say something that is sad, Speak how I fell.—I have done; and God forgive me!

[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and Train.]

1 Gent. O, this is full of pity!—Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads
That were the authors.

2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can give you inkling
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.

1 Gent. Good angels, keep it from us!
Where may it be? You do not doubt my faith,
sir? [quire

2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 'twill re-
A strong faith to conceal it.

1 Gent. Let me have it;
I do not talk much.

2 Gent. I am confident;
You shall, sir: did you not of late days hear
A buzzing of a separation
Between the king and Katherine?

1 Gent. Yes, but it held not:
For when the king once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the lord mayor straight
To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.

2 Gent. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now: for it grows again
Fresher than e'er it was; and held for certain
The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal,
Or some about him near, have, out of malice
To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple

That will undo her: to confirm this too,
Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately;
As all think for this business.

1 Gent. 'Tis the cardinal;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

2 Gent. I think you have hit the mark: but is't not cruel
That she should feel the smart of this? The cardinal

Will have his will, and she must fall.
1 Gent. 'Tis woeful.

We are too open here to argue this;
Let's think in private more. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—LONDON. An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain reading a letter.

Cham. My lord,—The horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission and main power, took 'em from me;
with this reason,—His master would be served before a subject, if not before the king; which stopped our mouths, sir.

I fear he will indeed: well, let him have them:
He will have all, I think.

Enter the DUKES OF NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.

Nor. Well met, my Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good-day to both your graces.

Suf. How is the king employ'd?

Cham. I left him private,
Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause?

Cham. It seems the marriage with his brother's wife

Has crept too near his conscience.

Suf. No, his conscience
Has crept too near another lady.

Nor. 'Tis so:

This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal:
That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune, Turns what he lists. The king will know him one day. [Self else.

Suf. Pray God he do! he'll never know him—
Nor. How holily he works in all his business!
And with what zeal! for, now he has crack'd
the league [nephew,

Between us and the emperor, the queen's great-
He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience, Fears, and despairs,—and all these for his marriage:

And out of all these to restore the king,
He counsels a divorce; a loss of her
That, like a jewel, has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre;
Of her that loves him with that excellence
That angels love good men with; even of her
That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless the king; and is not this course pious?

Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel!

'Tis most true [speaks 'em,
These news are everywhere; every tongue
And every true heart weeps for't: all that dare
Look into these affairs see this main end,—
The French king's sister. Heaven will one day open

The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold bad man.

Suf. And free us from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance;
Or this imperious man will work us all
From princes into pages: all men's honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he please.

Suf. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed:

As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please; his curses and his blessings
Touch me alike, they are breath I not believe in.
I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him
To him that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in;
And with some other business put the king
From these sad thoughts that work too much upon him:—

My lord, you'll bear us company?

Cham. Excuse me;
The king has sent me other-where: besides,
You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him:
Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain.]

NORFOLK opens a folding door. The KING is discovered sitting, and reading pensively.

Suf. How sad he looks! sure, he is much afflicted.

K. Hen. Who is there, ha?

Nor. Pray God he be not angry.

K. Hen. Who's there, I say? How dare you thrust yourselves

into my private meditations?

Who am I, ha?

Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences

Malice ne'er meant: our breach of duty this way
Is business of estate; in which we come
To know your royal pleasure.

K. Hen. Ye are too bold:
Go to; I'll make you know your times of business:

Is this an hour for temporal affairs, ha?

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Who's there? my good lord cardinal?—O my Wolsey,

The quiet of my wounded conscience,
Thou art a cure fit for a king.—You're welcome
[To CAMPEIUS.]

Most reverend learned sir, into our kingdom:
Use us and it.—My good lord, have great care
I be not found a talker. [To WOLSEY.]

Wol. Sir, you cannot.
I would your grace would give us but an hour
Of private conference.

K. Hen. We are busy; go.

[To NORFOLK and SUFFOLK.]

Nor. [Aside to Suf.] This priest has no pride in him!

Suf. [Aside to NOR.] Not to speak of:
I would not be so sick though for his place:
But this cannot continue.

Nor. [Aside to Suf.] If it do,
I'll venture one have-at-him.

Suf. [Aside to NOR.] I another.

[Exit NOR. and Suf.]

Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom

Above all princes, in committing freely
Your scruple to the voice of Christendom.
Who can be angry now? what envy reach you?
The Spaniard, tied by blood and favour to her,
Must now confess, if they have any goodness,
The trial just and noble. All the clerks,

I mean the learned ones, in Christian kingdoms,
Have their free voices: Rome the nurse of judgment,

Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One general tongue unto us, this good man,
This just and learned priest, Cardinal Cam-peius,—

Whom once more I present unto your highness.

K. Hen. And once more in mine arms I bid him welcome,

And thank the holy conclave for their loves:
They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for.

Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all strangers' loves,

You are so noble. To your highness' hand
I tender my commission;—by whose virtue,—
The court of Rome commanding,—you, my lord Cardinal of York, are join'd with me their servant,

In the impartial judging of this business.

K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted

Forthwith for what you come.—Where's Gardiner?

Wol. I know your majesty has always lov'd
her

So dear in heart, not to deny her that
A woman of less place might ask by law,
Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her.

K. Hen. Ay, and the best she shall have;
and my favour

To him that does best: God forbid else. Cardinal,

Pr'ythee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary:

I find him a fit fellow.

[Exit WOLSEY.]

Re-enter WOLSEY with GARDINER.

Wol. [Aside to GARD.] Give me your hand:
much joy and favour to you;

You are the king's now.

Gard. [Aside to WOL.] But to be commanded
For ever by your grace, whose hand has rais'd
me.

K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.

Cam. My Lord of York, was not one Doctor
Pace

In this man's place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes, surely.

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread, then,
Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

Wol. How! of me?

Cam. They will not stick to say you envied
him;

And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd
him

That he ran mad and died.

Wol. Heaven's peace be with him!
That's Christian care enough: for living murderers

There's places of rebuke. He was a fool;
For he would needs be virtuous: that good
fellow,

If I command him, follows my appointment:
I will have none so near else. Learn this,
brother,

We live not to be grip'd by meaner persons.
K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen. [Exit GARDINER.]

The most convenient place that I can think of
For such receipt of learning is Black-Friars;
There ye shall meet about this weighty business:—

My Wolsey, see it furnish'd.—O, my lord,
Would it not grieve an able man to leave
So sweet a bedfellow? But, conscience, conscience,—

O, 'tis a tender place! and I must leave her.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—LONDON. An Ante-chamber in the QUEEN'S Apartments.

Enter ANNE BULLEN and an Old Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither: here's the pang that pinches:—
His highness having liv'd so long with her, and she

So good a lady that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her,—by my life,
She never knew harm-doing;—O, now, after
So many courses of the sun enthron'd,
Still growing in a majesty and pomp,—the which
To leave a thousand-fold more bitter than Tis sweet at first to acquire,—after this process,
To give her the avault! it is a pity
Would move a monster.

Old L. Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her.

Anne. O, God's will! much better
She ne'er had known pomp: though it be temporal,

Yet, if that quarrel, fortune, do divorce
It from the bearer, 'tis a sufferance panging
As soul and body's severing.

Old L. Alas, poor lady!
She's a stranger now again.

Anne. So much the more
Must pity drop upon her. Verily,
I swear, 'tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content
Is our best having.

Anne. By my troth and maidenhead,
I would not be a queen.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would,
And venture maidenhead for't; and so would
you,

For all this spice of your hypocrisy:
You, that have so fair parts of woman on you,
Have too a woman's heart; which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty;
Which, to say sooth, are blessings;—and which gifts,—

Saving your minding,—the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive
If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth,— Old L. Yes, troth and troth; you would not be a queen?

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange: a threepence bowed would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it: but, I pray you,
What think you of a duchess? have you limbs
To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth.
Old L. Then you are weakly made: pluck off a little;

I would not be a young count in your way
For more than blushing comes to: if your back
Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak
Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How you do talk!
I swear again I would not be a queen
For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England
You'd venture an emballing: I myself
Would for Carnarvonshire, although there long'd
No more to the crown but that. Lo, who comes

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good-morrow, ladies. What wer't worth to know

The secret of your conference?

Anne. My good lord,
Not your demand; it values not your asking:
Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying. [ing]

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becom-
The action of good women: there is hope
All will be well.

Anne. Now, I pray God, amen!
Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings

[lady,
Follow such creatures. That you may, fair
Perceive I speak sincerely, and high note's
Ta'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty
Commends his good opinion of you to you, and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing
Than Marchioness of Pembroke; to which title
A thousand pound a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know
What kind of my obedience I should tender;
More than my all is nothing: nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers and wishes

Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship, Vouchsafe to speak my thanks and my obedience,

As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness;
Whose health and royalty I pray for.

Cham. Lady,
I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit
The king hath of you.—I have perus'd her well; [Aside.]

Beauty and honour in her are so mingled
That they have caught the king: and who knows yet

But from this lady may proceed a gem
To lighten all this isle?—I'll to the king
And say I spoke with you.

Anne. My honour'd lord.
[Exit Lord Chamberlain.]

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see!
I have been begging sixteen years in court,—
Am yet a courtier beggary,—nor could Come pat betwixt too early and too late.

For any suit of pounds; and you, O fate!
A very fresh-fish here,—fie, fie, fie upon [up
This compell'd fortune!—have your mouth fill'd
Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me. [no.
Old L. How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence,
There was a lady once,—'tis an old story,—
That would not be a queen, that would she not,
For all the mud in Egypt:—have you heard it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant.

Old L. With your theme I could O'ermount the lark. The Marchioness of Pembroke!

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation! By my life,
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time
I know your back will bear a duchess:—say,
Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady,
Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on't. Would I had no being,
If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me
To think what follows.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence: pray, do not deliver
What here you have heard to her.

Old L. What do you think me?
[Exit.

SCENE IV.—LONDON. A Hall in BLACK-FRIARS.

*Trumpet, sennet, and cornets. Enter two Vergers, with short silver wands; next them, two Scribes, in the habits of doctors; after them, the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY alone; after him, the BISHOPS OF LINCOLN,
ELY, ROCHESTER, and SAINT ASAPH; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the purse, with the great seal, and a Cardinal's hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver cross; then a Gentleman-usher bareheaded, accompanied with a Sergeant-at-Arms bearing a silver mace;
then two Gentlemen bearing two great silver pillars; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals, WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS; two Noblemen with the sword and mace. Then enter the KING and QUEEN and their Trains.
The KING takes place under the cloth of state;
the two Cardinals sit under him as judges.
The QUEEN takes place at some distance from the KING. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court, in manner of a consistory; between them the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The Crier and the rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the hall.*

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read,

Let silence be commanded.

K. Hen. What's the need?
It hath already publicly been read,
And on all sides the authority allow'd;
You may, then, spare that time.

Wol. Be't so.—Proceed.
Scribe. Say, Henry King of England, come into the court.

Crier. Henry King of England, &c.

K. Hen. Here.

Scribe. Say, Katherine, Queen of England, come into the court.

Crier. Katharine Queen of England, &c.

[The QUEEN makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, comes to the KING, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.

Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you do me right and justice;

And to bestow your pity on me: for
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir,
In what have I offended you? what cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off,
And take your good grace from me? Heaven
witness,

I have been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike, [sorry
Yea, subject to your countenance,—glad or
As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour
I ever contradicted your desire, [friends
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine enemy? what friend of mine
That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice
He was from thence discharg'd? Sir, call to mind
That I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years, and have been blest
With many children by you: if, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock or my love and duty,
Against your sacred person, in God's name,
Turn me away; and let the foul'st contempt
Shut door upon me, and so give me up
To the sharp'st kind of justice. Please you, sir,
The king, your father, was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand,
My father, King of Spain, was reckon'd one
The wisest prince that there had reign'd by many
A year before: it is not to be question'd
That they had gather'd a wise council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business,
Who deem'd our marriage lawful: wherefore I humbly

Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may Be by my friends in Spain advis'd; whose counsel

I will implore; if not, i' the name of God,
Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

Wol. You have here, lady,—
And of your choice,—these reverend fathers;
men

Of singular integrity and learning,
Yea, the elect o' the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause: it shall be therefore boot-less

That longer you desire the court; as well
For your own quiet as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king.

Cam. His grace
Hath spoken well and justly: therefore, madam,

It's fit this royal session do proceed;
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produc'd and heard.

Q. Kath. Lord cardinal,—
To you I speak.

Wol. Your pleasure, madam?

Q. Kath. Sir,
I am about to weep; but, thinking that
We are a queen,—or long have dream'd so,— certain

The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol. Be patient yet.

Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble;
nay, before,

Or God will punish me. I do believe,
Induc'd by potent circumstances, that
You are mine enemy; and make my challenge
You shall not be my judge: for it is you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me,—
Which God's dew quench! Therefore I say
again,

I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul
Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.

Wol. I do profess

You speak not like yourself; who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom [wrong:
O'er topping woman's power, Madam, you do me
I have no spleen against you, nor injustice
For you or any: how far I have proceeded,
Or how far further shall, is warranted
By a commission from the consistory, [m.
Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge
That I have blown this coal: I do deny it:
The king is present: if it be known to him
That I ginsay my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood! yea, as much
As you have done my truth. If he know
That I am free of your report, he knows
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me: and the cure is, to [fore
Remove these thoughts from you: the which be-
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking,
And to say so no more.

Q. Kath. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. You're meek and humble-mouth'd;

You sign your place and calling, in full seeming,
With meekness and humility; but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune and his highness' favours,
Gone slightly o'er low steps, and now are mounted Where powers are your retainers; and your
words,

Domestics to you, serve your will as't please
Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour than
Your high profession spiritual: that again
I do refuse you for my judge; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the pope,
To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,
And to be judg'd by him.

[She curtsies to the KING, and offers to depart.

Cam. The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by it: 'tis not well.

She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again.

Crier. Katharine Queen of England, come into the court.

Grif. Madam, you are call'd back.

Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray you,
keep your way:

When you are call'd, return.—Now the Lord
help,

They vex me past my patience! Pray you, pass
on:

I will not tarry; no, nor ever more
Upon this business my appearance make
In any of their courts.

[Exeunt QUEEN, GRIF., and her other Attendants.

K. Hen. Go thy ways, Kate:

That man it the world who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in naught be trusted
For speaking false in that: thou art, alone—
If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government—

Obeying in commanding—and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee
out,—

The queen of earthly queens:—she's noble
born;

And like her true nobility she has Carried herself towards me.

Wol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears,—for where I am robb'd and bound,

There must I be unloos'd; although not there
At once and fully satisfied,—whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness; or Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on't? or ever
Have to you,—but with thanks to God for such A royal lady,—spake one the least word that might

Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?

K. Hen.

My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village curs,
Bark when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You are excus'd:
But will you be more justified? you ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business; never Desir'd it to be stir'd; but oft have hinder'd, oft,

The passages made toward it:—on my honour,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
And thus far clear him. Now, what mov'd me
to't,

I will be bold with time and your attention:—
Then mark the inducement. Thus it came;— give heed to't:—

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Scruple, and prick, on certain speeches utter'd
By the Bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador;

Who had been hither sent on the debating
A marriage 'twixt the Duke of Orleans and

Our daughter Mary: I' the progress of this business,

Ere a determinate resolution, he,—
I mean the bishop,—did require a respite;
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometimes our brother's wife. This respite shook
The bosom of my conscience, enter'd me,
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast; which forc'd such way
That many maz'd considerings did throng,
And press'd in with this caution. First, methought

I stood not in the smile of heaven; who had Commanded nature that my lady's womb,
If it conceiv'd a male child by me, should Do no more offices of life to't than
The grave does to the dead; for her male issue
Or died where they were made, or shortly after
This world had air'd them: hence I took a thought

This was a judgment on me; that my kingdom,
Well worthy the best heir o' the world, should not

Be gladdened in't by me: then follows that I weigh'd the danger which my realms stood in
By this my issue's fail: and that gave to me
Many a groaning throe. Thus hulling in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer Towards this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together; that's to say,
I meant to rectify my conscience,—which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn'd:—first, I began in private
With you, my Lord of Lincoln; you remember
How under my oppression I did reek
When I first mov'd you.

Lin. Very well, my liege.

K. Hen. I have spoke long: be pleas'd yourself to say

How far you satisfied me.

Lin. So please your highness,
The question did at first so stagger me,—
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't,
And consequence of dread,—that I committed
The daring'st counsel which I had to doubt;
And did entreat your highness to this course
Which you are running here.

K. Hen. I then mov'd you,
My Lord of Canterbury; and got your leave
To make this present summons:—unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded
Under your hands and seals: therefore, go on;
For no dislike I' the world against the person
Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points
Of my alleged reasons, drive this forward:
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life
And kingly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come with her,
Katharine our queen, before the primest creature
That's paragon'd o' the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court till further day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness.

[They rise to depart.]

K. Hen. I may perceive
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth and tricks of Rome. [Aside.]

My learn'd and well-belov'd servant, Cranmer,
Pr'ythee, return with thy approach, I know,
My comfort comes along. Break up the court:
I say, set on.

[Exit in manner as they entered.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—LONDON. Palace at Bridewell.
A Room in the QUEEN'S Apartment.

The QUEEN and some of her Women at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles;
Sing and disperse 'em, if thou canst: leave working.

SONG.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,
Bow themselves, when he did sing:
To his music plants and flowers
Ever sprung; as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring.

Everything that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art:
Killing care and grief of heart
Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now? [cardinals
Gent. An't please your grace, the two great Wait in the presence.

Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?
Gent. They will'd me say so, madam.

Q. Kath. Pray their graces
To come near. [Exit Gent.] What can be their business

With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?

I do not like their coming, now I think on't.
They should be good men; their affairs as righteous:

But all hoods make not monks.

Enter WOLSEY and CAMPEIUS.

Wol. Peace to your highness!

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife;

I would be all, against the worst may happen.
What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords? [withdraw

Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to
Into your private chamber, we shall give you.
The full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here;
There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

Deserves a corner: would all other women
Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!
My lords, I care not,—so much I am happy
Above a number,—if my actions
Were tried by every tongue, every eye saw 'em,

Envy and base opinion set against 'em,
I know my life so even. If your business
Seek me out, and that way I am wife in,
Out with it boldly: truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina serenissima,—

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming
As not to know the language I have lived in:
A strange tongue makes my cause more strange,
suspicious;

Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank you, [sake,—

If you speak truth, for their poor mistress'
Believe me, she has had much wrong: lord
cardinal,

The willing'st sin I ever yet committed
May be absolv'd in English.

Wol. Noble lady,
I am sorry my integrity should breed,—
And service to his majesty and you,—
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.
We come not by the way of accusation
To taint that honour every good tongue blesses,
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow,—
You have too much, good lady; but to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference Between the king and you; and to deliver,
Like free and honest men, our just opinions,
And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour'd madam,
My Lord of York,—out of his noble nature,
Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace,—
Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure
Both of his truth and him,—which was too far,— Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace,
His service and his counsel.

Q. Kath. To betray me. [Aside.]
My lords, I thank you both for your good-wills:
Ye speak like honest men,—pray God ye prove
so!

But how to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,—

More near my life, I fear,—with my weak wit,
And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth, I know not. I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking

Either for such men or such business.
For her sake that I have been,—for I feel
The last fit of my greatness,—good your graces,
Let me have time and counsel for my cause:
Alas, I am a woman, friendless, hopeless!

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these fears:

Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Q. Kath. In England
But little for my profit: can you think, lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness'
pleasure,—

Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,—
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here:
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

Cam. I would your grace
Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath.

How, sir?

Cam. Put your main cause into the king's protection;

He's loving and most gracious: 'twill be much
Both for your honour better and your cause;
For if the trial of the law o'ertake ye
You'll part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tells you rightly.

Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both,
—my ruin:

Is this your Christian counsel? out upon ye?
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a Judge
That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.

Q. Kath. The more shame for ye: holy men
I thought ye,

Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues;
But cardinal sins and hollow hearts I fear ye:
Mend them, for shame, my lords. Is this your comfort?

The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady,—
A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd?
I will not wish ye half my miseries;
I have more charity: but say I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at once

The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy.

Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing: woe upon ye, me,—

And all such false professors! would you have
If you have any justice, any pity,
If ye be anything but churchmen's habits,—
Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me?
Alas! has banish'd me his bed already,
His love too long ago! I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me above this wretchedness? all your studies
Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I liv'd thus long,—let me speak myself,
Since virtue finds no friends,—a wife, a true
one?

A woman,—I dare say without vain-glory,—
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven?
obey'd him?

Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'tis not well, lords.
Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure;
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.

Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Wol. Pray, hear me.

Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Ye have angels' faces, but heaven knows your hearts.

What will become of me now, wretched lady?
I am the most unhappy woman living.—

Alas, poor wenches, where are now your fortunes?

[To her Women.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me;
Almost no grave allow'd me:—like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field and flounsh'd,
I'll hang my head and perish.

Wol.

If your grace
Could but be brought to know our ends are honest,

You'd feel more comfort: why should we, good lady,

Upon what cause, wrong you? alas, our places,
The way of our profession is against it:
We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow 'em,
For goodness' sake, consider what you do;
How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly
Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits
They swell, and grow as terrible as storms.
I know you have a gentle, noble temper,
A soul as even as a calm: pray, think us
Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and servants.

Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your virtues

With these weak women's fears: a noble spirit,
As yours was put into you, ever casts
Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves you;

Beware you lose it not: for us, if you please

To trust us in your business, we are ready
To use our utmost studies in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: and,
pray, forgive me

If I have us'd myself unmannerly;
You know I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons.
Pray, do my service to his majesty:
He has my heart yet; and shall have my prayers While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers,

Bestow your counsels on me; she now begs
That little thought, when she set footing here,
She should have bought her dignities so dear.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—LONDON. Ante-chamber to the KING'S Apartment in the Palace.

Enter the DUKE OF NORFOLK, the DUKE OF SUFFOLK, the EARL OF SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them: if you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already.

Sur.

I am joyful
To meet the least occasion that may give me
Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke,
To be reveng'd on him.

Suf.

Which of the peers
Have unconte'mn'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected? when did he regard

The stamp of nobleness in any person
Out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures:
What he deserves of you and me I know;
What we can do to him,—though now the time Gives way to us,—I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt Anything on him; for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in's tongue.

Nor.

O, fear him not;
His spell in that is out: the king hath found
Matter against him that for ever mars
The honey of his language. No, he's settled.
Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur.

Sir,
I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor.

Believe it, this is true:
In the divorce his contrary proceedings
Are all unfolded; wherein he appears
As I would wish mine enemy.

Sur.

How came
His practices to light?

Suf.

Most strangely.

Sur.

O, how, how?
Suf. The cardinal's letters to the pope miscarried,

And came to the eye o' the king: wherein was read

How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness
To stay the judgment o' the divorce; for if
It did take place, I do, quoth he, perceive
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, Lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Has the king this?

Suf.

Believe it.
Sur. Will this work?

Cham. The king in this perceives him how he coasts

And hedges his own way. But in this point
All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic
After his patient's death: the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Sur.

Would he had!

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord!
For, I profess, you have it.

Sur.

Now, all my joy

Trace the conjunction!

Suf.

My amen to't!

Nor.

All men's!

Suf. There's order given for her coronation:
Marry, this is yet but young, and may be left
To some ears unrecounted.—But, my lords,
She is a gallant creature, and complete
In mind and feature: I persuade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall
In it be memoriz'd.

Sur.

But will the king

Digest this letter of the cardinal's?

The Lord forbid!

Nor.

Marry, amen!

Suf.

No, no;

There be more wasps that buzz about his nose
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal
Campeius

Is stol'n away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave;
Has left the cause o' the king unhandled; and
Is posted, as the agent of our cardinal,
To second all his plot. I do assure you
The king cried Hal at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him,
And let him cry Ha! louder!

Nor. But, my lord,
When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd, in his opinions; which
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Together with all famous colleges
Almost in Christendom: shortly, I believe,
His second marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her coronation. Katharine no more
Shall be call'd queen, but princess dowager
And widow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain
In the king's business.

Suf. He has; and we shall see him
For it an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear.

Suf. 'Tis so.—
The cardinal!

Enter WOLSEY and CROMWELL.

Nor. Observe, observe, he's moody.

Wol. The packet, Cromwell,
Gave't you the king?

Crom. To his own hand, in's bedchamber.

Wol. Look'd he o' the inside of the paper?

Crom. Presently
He did unseal them: and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance. You he bade
Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready
To come abroad?

Crom. I think by this he is.

Wol. Leave me awhile. [Exit CROMWELL.]
It shall be to the Duchess of Alençon,
The French king's sister: he shall marry her.— Anne Bullen! No; I'll no Anne Bullens for
him:

There's more in't than fair visage.—Bullen!
No, we'll no Bullens.—Speedily I wish
To hear from Rome.—The Marchioness of Pembroke!

Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be he hears the king
Does whet his anger to him.

Sur. Sharp enough,
Lord, for thy justice!

Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter,
To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's
queen!—

This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it;
Then out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous

And well deserving? yet I know her for
A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of Our hard-ru'd king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one
Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Sur. I would 'twere something that would fret the string,

The master-cord on's heart!

Suf. The king, the king!

Enter the KING, reading a schedule, and LOVELL.

K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated

To his own portion! and what expense by the hour

Seems to flow from him! How, i' the name of Does he rake this together!—Now, my lords,
Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have [tion stood here observing him: some strange commo-
Is in his brain: he bites his lip and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait; then stops again,
Strikes his breast hard; and anon he casts
His eye against the moon: in most strange postures

We have seen him set himself.

K. Hen. It may well be;
There is a mutiny in's mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I requir'd: and wot you what I found
There,—on my conscience, put unwittingly?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,—
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which
I find at such proud rate that it out-speaks
Possession of a subject.

Nor. It's heaven's will:
Some spirit put this paper in the packet
To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual object, he should still Dwell in his musings: but I am afraid
His thinkings are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

[He takes his seat and whispers LOVELL, who goes to WOLSEY.]

Wol. Heaven forgive me!
Ever God bless your highness!

K. Hen. Good, my lord,
You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inventory

Of your best graces in your mind; the which
You were now running o'er: you have scarce
time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span
To keep your earthly audit: sure, in that I deem you an ill husband, and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol. Sir,
For holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business which I bear i' the state; and nature does require
Her times of preservation, which perforce
I, her frail son, amongst my brethern mortal,
Must give my tendance to.

K. Hen. You have said well.
Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,

As I will lend you cause, my doing well
With my well saying!

K. Hen. 'Tis well said again;
And 'tis a kind of good deed to say well:
And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd
you:

He said he did; and with his deed did crown

His word upon you. Since I had my office
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home,

But par'd my present havings to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol. What should this mean? [Aside.

Sur. The Lord increase this business!

[Aside to others.

K. Hen. Have I not made you
The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me
If what I now pronounce you have found true:
And, if you may confess it, say withal
If you are bound to us or no. What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess your royal graces, [could

Show'r'd on me daily, have been more than
My studied purposes requite; which went Beyond all man's endeavours:—my endeavours
Here ever come too short of my desires,
Yet fill'd with my abilities: mine own ends
Have been mine so that evermore they pointed
To the good of your most sacred person and
The profit of the state. For your great graces Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks;
My prayers to heaven for you; my loyalty,
Which ever has and ever shall be growing,
Till death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen. Fairly answer'd;
A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated: the honour of it
Does pay the act of it; as, i' the contrary,
The foulness is the punishment. I presume
That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour, more

On you than any; so your hand and heart,
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in love's particular, be more
To me, your friend, than any.

Wol. I do profess
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own; that am, have, and will be,— [you,

Though all the world should crack their duty to
And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound as thick as thought could make 'em, and Appear in forms more horrid,—yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.

K. Hen. 'Tis nobly spoken:
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast,
For you have seen him open't.—Read o'er this;

[Giving him papers.

And after, this; and then to breakfast with
What appetite you have.

[Exit frowning upon CARDINAL WOLSEY:
the Nobles throng after him, smiling and whispering.

Wol. What should this mean?
What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd
it?

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper;

I fear, the story of his anger.—'Tis so;
This paper has undone me:—'tis the account
Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom,

And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence,
Fit for a fool to fall by! What cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this?
No new device to beat this from his brains?
I know 'twill stir him strongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune,
Will bring me off again.—What's this—To the Pope?

The letter, as I live, with all the business
I writ to's holiness. Nay then, farewell!
I have touch'd the highest point of all my great-
ness;

And from that full meridian of my glory
I haste now to my setting: I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.

Re-enter the DUKES OF NORFOLK and SUFFOLK, the EARL OF SURREY, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal:
who commands you

To render up the great seal presently
Into our hands; and to confine yourself
To Asher House, my Lord of Winchester's,
Till you hear further from his highness.

Wol. Stay,— Where's your commission, lords? words cannot carry Authority so weighty.

Suf. Who dare cross 'em,
Bearing the king's will from his mouth so expressly?

Wol. Till I find more than will or words to do it,—

I mean your malice,—know, officious lords,
I dare and must deny it. Now I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded,—envy
How eagerly ye follow my disgraces,
As if it fed ye! and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in everything may bring my ruin!
Follow your envious courses, men of malice;
You have Christian warrant for them, and, no doubt,

In time will find their fit rewards. That seal,
You ask with such a violence, the king,—
Mine and your master,—with his own hand gave me;—

Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours,
During my life; and, to confirm his goodness,
Tied it by letters-patents: now, who'll take it?
Sur. The king, that gave it.

Wol. It must be himself then.

Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.

Wol. Proud lord, thou liest:

Within these forty hours Surrey durst better
Have burnt that tongue than said so.

Sur. Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law:
The heads of all thy brother cardinals,—
With thee and all thy best parts bound together,—

Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy!
You sent me deputy for Ireland;
Far from his succor, from the king, from all
That might have mercy on the fault thou gav'st
him;

Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe.

Wol. This, and all else
This talking lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The duke by law Found his deserts: how innocent I was
From any private malice in his end,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.
If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell you
You have as little honesty as honour,
That in the way of loyalty and truth
Toward the king, my ever royal master,
Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my soul,
Your long coat, priest, protects you; thou
shouldst feel [lords,
My sword i' the life-blood of thee else.—My
Can ye endure to hear this arrogance?
And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell, nobility; let his grace go forward,
And dare us with his cap like larks.

Wol. All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

Sur. Yes, that goodness
Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion;
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king: your goodness, [ous.—
Since you provoke me, shall be most notori-
My Lord of Norfolk,—as you are truly noble,
As you respect the common good, the state
Of our despis'd nobility, our issues,
Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen,—
Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles
Collected from his life:—I'll startle you Worse than the sacring bell, when the brown wench

Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal.

Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise
this man,

But that I am bound in charity against it!

Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand:

But, thus much, they are foul ones.

Wol. So much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows the truth.

Sur. This cannot save you:
I thank my memory I yet remember
Some of these articles; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush and cry guilty, cardinal,
You'll show a little honesty.

Wol. Speak on, sir;
I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I'd rather want those than my head.—
Have at you! [ledge,

First, that, without the king's assent or know-
You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that in all you writ to Rome, or else

To foreign princes, Ego et Rex meus [king
Was still inscrib'd; in which you brought the
To be your servant.

Suf. Then, that, without the knowledge,
Either of king or council, when you went
Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,
Without the king's will or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Suf. That, out of mere ambition, you have caus'd

Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin.

Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance, [science,

By what means got I leave to your own con-
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities; to the mere undoing
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are,
Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord,
Press not a falling man too far! 'tis virtue:
His faults lie open to the laws; let them,
Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see
him

So little of his great self.

Sur. I forgive him. [is,—

Suf. Lord Cardinal, the king's further pleasure
Because all those things you have done of late,
By your power legate within this kingdom,
Fall into the compass of a præmunire,—
That therefore such a writ be sued against you;
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be
Out of the king's protection:—this is my charge.

Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations

How to live better. For your stubborn answer
About the giving back the great seal to us,
The king shall know it, and no doubt, shall thank you.

So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.
[Exeunt all but WOLSEY.

Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear
me.

Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope; to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And,—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely

His greatness is a-ripening,—nips his root,
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me; and now has left me,
Weary and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.
Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye:
I feel my heart new opened. O, how wretched
Is that poor man that hangs on prince's favours!
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and their ruin,
More pangs and fears than wars or women have:
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.

Enter CROMWELL, amazedly.

Why, how now, Cromwell!

Crom. I have no power to speak, sir.

Wol. What, amaz'd
At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder
A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep,
I am fallen indeed.

Crom. How does your grace?

Wol. Why, well;
Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.
I know myself now; and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd me,
I humbly thank his grace; and from these shoulders,

These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken
A load would sink a navy,—too much honour:
O, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden
Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven!

Crom. I am glad your grace has made that right use of it. [thinks,—

Wol. I hope I have; I am able now, me-
Out of a fortitude of soul I feel,—
To endure more miseries and greater far
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.
What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest and the worst
Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!

Crom. The next is that Sir Thomas More is chosen

Lord Chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden:
But he's a learned man. May he continue
Long in his highness' favour, and do justice,
For truth's sake and his conscience; that his bones, [sings,
When he has run his course and sleeps in bless-
May have a tomb of orphans' tears wept on 'em!
What more?

Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome,

Install'd Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news indeed.

Crom. Last, that the Lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen,
Going to chapel; and the voice is now
Only about her coronation.

Wol. There was the weight that pull'd me down. O Cromwell,

The king has gone beyond me: all my glories
In that one woman I have lost for ever:
No sun shall ever usher forth mine honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me, Crom-
well;

I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now
To be thy lord and master: seek the king;
That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told him [thee;

What and how true thou art: he will advance
Some little memory of me will stir him,—
I know his noble nature,—not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too: good Cromwell, Neglect him not; make use now, and provide
For thy own future safety.

Crom. O my lord,

Must I then leave you? must I needs forego

So good, so noble, and so true a master?

Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.
The king shall have my service; but my prayers
For ever and for ever shall be yours.

Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me,
Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman.

Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me,
Cromwell;

And,—when I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me more must be heard of,—say I taught
thee;

Say Wolsey,—that once trod the ways of glory,
And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour,—

Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.

Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition:
By that sin fell the angels; how can man, then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by it?
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate
thee;

Corruption wins not more than honesty.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear
not:

Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's and truth's; then, if thou fall'st, O,

Cromwell,

Thou fall'st a blessed martyr! Serve the king;
And,—pr'ythee, lead me in:

There take an inventory of all I have,
To the last penny; 'tis the king's: my robe,
And my integrity to heaven, is all [well!
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Crom-
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies.

Crom. Good sir, have patience.

Wol. So I have. Farewell
The hopes of court! my hopes in heaven do dwell. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You are well met once again.

2 Gent. So are you.

1 Gent. You come to take your stand here,
and behold

The Lady Anne pass from her coronation?

2 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter

The Duke of Buckingham came from his trial.

1 Gent. 'Tis very true: but that time offer'd sorrow;

This, general joy.

2 Gent. 'Tis well: the citizens,

I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds;
As, let 'em have their rights, they are ever
forward,

In celebration of this day with shows,
Pageants, and sights of honour.

1 Gent. Never greater,

Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains,

That paper in your hand?

1 Gent. Yes; 'tis the list
Of those that claim their offices this day,
By custom of the coronation.

The Duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
To be high-steward; next, the Duke of Norfolk,
He to be earl marshal: you may read the rest.

2 Gent. I thank you, sir; had I not known those customs,

I should have been beholden to your paper.
But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine,
The princess dowager? how goes her business?

1 Gent. That I can tell you too. The Archbishop

Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off
From Amptill, where the princess lay; to which

She was often cited by them, but appear'd not:
And, to be short, for not appearance and
The king's late scruple, by the main assent
Of all these learned men, she was divorc'd,
And the late marriage made of none effect:
Since which she was remov'd to Kimbolton,
Where she remains now sick.

2 Gent. Alas, good lady!—
[Trumpets.]

The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

THE ORDER OF THE PROCESSION

A lively flourish of trumpets: then enter,

1. Two Judges.
2. Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before him.
3. Choristers singing. [Music.]
4. Mayor of London, bearing the mace. Then Garter, in his coat of arms, and on his head a gilt copper crown.
5. Marquis Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-coronnet of gold. With him, the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crowned with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.
6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high-steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.
7. A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports; under it the Queen in her robe; her hair richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side of her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.
8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.
9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.

A royal train, believe me.—These I know:—
Who's that that bears the sceptre?

1 Gent. Marquis Dorset:
And that the Earl of Surrey, with the rod.

2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman. That should be

The Duke of Suffolk?

1 Gent. 'Tis the same,—high-steward.

2 Gent. And that my Lord of Norfolk?

1 Gent.

2 Gent.

Yes.
Heaven bless thee!
[Looking on the QUEEN.]

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.—
Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel;
Our king has all the Indies in his arms,
And more and richer, when he strains that lady:
I cannot blame his conscience.

1 Gent. They that bear
The cloth of honour over her are four barons
Of the Cinque-ports.

2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all are near her.

I take it, she that carries up the train
Is that old noble lady, Duchess of Norfolk.

1 Gent. It is: and all the rest are countesses.

2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars indeed;

And sometimes falling ones.

1 Gent. No more of that.
[Exit Procession, with a great flourish of trumpets.]

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! where have you been broil-ing? [a finger]

3 Gent. Among the crowd i' the abbey; where Could not be wedg'd in more: I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy.

2 Gent. You saw

The ceremony?

3 Gent. That I did.

1 Gent. How was it?

3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.

2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

3 Gent. Aswellas I amable. Therichstream

Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen

To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off

A distance from her: while her grace sat down

To rest awhile, some half an hour or so,

In a rich chair of state, opposing freely

The beauty of her person to the people.

Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman

That ever lay by man: which when the people

Had the full view of, such a noise arose

As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,

As loud, and to as many tunes: hats, cloaks,—

Doublets, I think,—flew up; and had their faces

Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy

I never saw before. Great-bellied women,

That had not half a week to go, like rams

In the old time of war, would shake the press,

And make 'em reel before 'em. No man living

Could say, This is my wife, there; all were woven

So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But what follow'd?

3 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest paces [saintlike,

Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and,

Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly.

Then rose again, and bow'd her to the people:

When by the Archbishop of Canterbury

She had all the royal makings of a queen:

As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,

The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems

Laid nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,

With all the choicest music of the kingdom,

Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,

And with the same full state pac'd back again
To York Place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent.

Sir,

You must no more call it York Place, that's past:

For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost:
'Tis now the king's and call'd Whitehall.

3 Gent.

I know it;

But 'tis so lately alter'd that the old name
Is fresh about me.

2 Gent.

What two reverend bishops
Were those that went on each side of the queen?

3 Gent. Stokesly and Gardiner; the one of

Winchester,—

Newly prefer'd from the king's secretary,—
The other, London.

2 Gent.

He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,
The virtuous Crammer.

3 Gent.

All the land knows that:
However, yet there is no great breach; when it comes,

[him,

Crammer will find a friend will not shrink from

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

3 Gent.

Thomas Cromwell;
A man in much esteem with the king, and truly
A worthy friend.—The king

Has made him master o' the jewel-house,
And one, already, of the privy council.

2 Gent.

He will deserve more.

3 Gent.

Yes, without all doubt.—
Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests:

Something I can command. As I walk thither
I'll tell ye more.

Both.

You may command us, sir.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter KATHARINE, Dowager, sick; led between GRIFFITH and PATIENCE.

Grif. How does your grace?

Kath.

O Griffith, sick to death!
My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the earth,

Willing to leave their burden. Reach a chair:—
So,—now, methinks, I feel a little ease. [me,
Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou ledd'st
That the great child of honour, Cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?

Grif. Yes, madam; but I think your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to't.

Kath. Pr'ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:

If well, he stepp'd before me, happily,
For my example.

Grif.

Well, the voice goes, madam:
For after the stout Earl Northumberland Arrested him at York, and brought him forward,—

As a man sorely tainted,—to his answer,
He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill
He could not sit his mule.

Kath.

Alas, poor man!

Grif. At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester,

Lodg'd in the abbey; where the reverend abbot,
With all his covent, honourably receiv'd him;

To whom he gave these words,—*O, father abbot,
An old man, broken with the storms of state,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye;
Give him a little earth for charity!*

So went to bed; where eagerly his sickness
Pursu'd him still: and three nights after this,
About the hour of eight,—which he himself
Foretold should be his last,—full of repentance,
Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows,
He gave his honours to the world again,
His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest; his faults lie gently on him! [him,

Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak
And yet with charity. He was a man
Of an unbowed stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes; one that, by suggestion,
Tied all the kingdom: simony was fair play;
His own opinion was his law: 't the presence
He would say untruths; and be ever double
Both in his words and meaning: he was never,
But where he meant to ruin, pitiful:
His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he is now, nothing:
Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example.

Grif.

Noble madam,

Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues
We write in water. May it please your highness
To hear me speak his good now!

Kath.

Yes, good Griffith;

I were malicious else.

Grif.

This cardinal,

Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly
Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle.
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one;
Exceeding wise, fair-spoken, and persuading:
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that sought him sweet as summer.

And though he were unsatisfied in getting,—
Which was a sin,—yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely: ever witness for him
Those twins of learning that he rais'd in you,
Ipswich and Oxford! one of which fell with him,
Unwilling to outlive the good that did it;
The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then; and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little:
And, to add greater honours to his age
Than man could give him, he died fearing God.

Kath. After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me,
With thy religious truth and modesty,
Now in his ashes honour: peace be with him!—
Patience, be near me still; and set me lower:
I have not long to trouble thee.—Good Griffith,
Cause the musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to.

[Sad and solemn music.

Grif. She is asleep; good wench, let's sit down quiet,
For fear we wake her:—softly, gentle Patience.

THE VISION. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of boys, and golden swards on their faces; branches of boys or palm in their hands. They first conee unto her, then dance; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head; at which the other four make reverent courtesies: then the two that held the garland deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head: which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order: at which,—as it were by inspiration,—she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven: and so in their dancing they vanish, carrying the garland with them. The music continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?

And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye?

Grif. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for: Saw ye none enter since I slept?

Grif. None, madam.

Kath. No? Saw you not, even now, a blessed troop

Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun?
They promis'd me eternal happiness;
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall,
Assuredly. [dreams]

Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave,
They are harsh and heavy to me. [Music ceases.]

Pat. Do you note
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?
How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,

And of an earthy cold? Mark you her eyes!

Grif. She is going, wench: pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. An't like your grace.—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow:
Deserve we no more reverence?

Grif. You are to blame.
Knowing she will not lose her wonted greatness,
To use so rude behaviour: go to, kneel.

Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon; [staying]
My haste made me unmannerly. There is
A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: but this fellow

Let me ne'er see again.

[Exeunt GRIFFITH and Messenger.]

Re-enter GRIFFITH, with CAPUCIUS.

If his sight fail not,
You should be lord ambassador from the emperor,

My royal nephew, and your name Capucius.

Cap. Madam, the same,—your servant.

Kath. O, my Lord,
The times and titles now are alter'd strangely
With me since first you knew me. But, I pray you,
What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble lady,
First, mine own service to your grace; the next,
The king's request that I would visit you:

Who grieves much for your weakness, and by
me

Sends you his princely commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O, my good lord, that comfort comes too late;

'Tis like a pardon after execution:

That gentle physic, given in time, had cur'd me;
But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.

How does his highness?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do! and ever flourish;
When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor
name

Banish'd the kingdom!—Patience, is that letter
I caus'd you write yet sent away?

Pat. No, madam.
[Giving it to KATHARINE.]

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my lord the king.

Cap. Most willing, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness

The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter,—

The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on
her!—

Beseeching him to give her virtuous breeding;
She is young, and of a noble modest nature,—
I hope she will deserve well;—and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him, [petition]

Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long

Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully:
Of which there is not one, I dare avow,—

And now I should not lie,—but will deserve,
For virtue and true beauty of the soul,
For honesty and decent carriage,
A right good husband, let him be a noble;
And, sure, those men are happy that shall have
them.

The last is, for my men,—they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw 'em from me,—
That they may have their wages duly paid 'em,
And something over to remember me by:
If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer
life

And able means, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole contents:—and, good my
lord,

By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to souls departed, Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the
king

To do me this last right.

Cap. By heaven, I will,
Or let me lose the fashion of a man! [me]
Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember
In all humility unto his highness:

Say his long trouble now is passing [him],
Out of this world; tell him, in death I bless'd
For so I will,—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell,
My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet: I must to bed;

Call in more women.—When I am dead, good wench,
 Let me be us'd with honour: strew me over
 With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
 I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm me,
 Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like
 A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
 I can no more. [Exeunt, leading KATHARINE.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—LONDON. A Gallery in the Palace.

Enter GARDINER, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a torch before him.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy, is't not?

Boy. It has struck.

Gar. These should be hours for necessities,
 Not for delights; times to repair our nature
 With comforting repose, and not for us
 To waste these times.

Enter SIR THOMAS LOVELL.

Good hour of night, Sir Thomas!

Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my Lord?

Gar. I did, Sir Thomas; and left him at primero

With the Duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too,
 Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gar. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovell. What's the matter?

It seems you are in haste: an if there be
 No great offence belongs to't, give your friend
 Some touch of your late business: affairs that walk,—

As they say spirits do,—at midnight, have
 In them a wilder nature than the business
 That seeks despatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you;
 And durst commend a secret to your ear Much weightier than this work. The queen's in labour,

They say in great extremity; and fear'd
 She'll with the labour end.

Gar. The fruit she goes with
 I pray for heartily, that it may find [Thomas,
 Good time, and live: but for the stock, Sir
 I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks I could
 Cry thee amen; and yet my conscience says
 She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does Deserve our better wishes.

Gar. But, sir, sir,—
 Hear me, Sir Thomas: you are a gentleman
 Of mine own way; I know you wise, religious;
 And, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well,—
 'Twill not, Sir Thomas Lovell, take't of me,— Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and
 she,
 Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two
 The most remark'd i' the kingdom. As for Cromwell,—[master
 Beside that of the jewel-house, he's made
 O' the rolls, and the king's secretary; further,
 sir,

Stands in the gap and trade of more prefer-
 ments,
 With which the time will load him. The archbishop [speak
 Is the king's hand and tongue; and who dare
 One syllable against him?

Gar. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas,
 There are that dare; and I myself have ventur'd
 To speak my mind of him; and indeed this day,
 Sir,—I may tell it you,—I think I have Incens'd the lords o' the council, that he is,—
 For so I know he is, they know he is,—

A most arch heretic, a pestilence [moved,
 That does infect the land: with which they
 Have broken with the king; who hath so far
 Given ear to our complaint,—of his great grace
 And princely care; foreseeing those fell mis-chiefs

Our reasons laid before him,—hath commanded
 To-morrow morning to the council-board

He be convened. He's a rank weed, Sir
 Thomas,

And we must root him out. From your affairs
 I hinder you too long: good night, Sir Thomas.

Lov. Many good nights, my lord: I rest your servant.

[Exeunt GARDINER and Page.]

As LOVELL is going out, enter the KING and the DUKE OF SUFFOLK.

K. Hen. Charles, I will play no more to-night;
 My mind's not on't; you are too hard for me.

Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before.

K. Hen. But little, Charles;

Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play.—
 Now, Lovell, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her
 What you commanded me, but by her woman
 I sent your message; who return'd her thanks
 In the greatest humbleness, and desir'd your highness

Most heartily to pray for her.

K. Hen. What say'st thou, ha?

To pray for her? what, is she crying out?

Lov. So said her woman: and that her sufferance made

Almost each pang a death.

K. Hen. Alas, good lady!

Suf. God safely quit her of her burden, and
 With gentle travail, to the gladding of
 Your highness with an heir!

K. Hen. 'Tis midnight, Charles;
 Prythee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember
 The estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone;
 For I must think of that which company
 Will not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your highness
 A quiet night; and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

K. Hen. Charles, good-night.

[Exit SUFFOLK.]

Enter SIR ANTHONY DENNY.

Well, sir, what follows? [bishop,

Den. Sir, I have brought my lord the arch-
 As you commanded me.

K. Hen. Hal Canterbury?

Den. Ay, my good lord.

K. Hen. 'Tis true: where is he, Denny?

Den. He attends your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Bring him to us.

[Exit DENNY.]

Lov. This is about that which the bishop spake:

I am happily come hither. [Aside.]

Re-enter DENNY, with CRANMER.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery.

[LOVELL seems to stay.]

Ha! I have said. Be gone.

What! [Exit LOVELL and DENNY.]

Cran. I am fearful:—wherefore frowns he thus?

'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well. [Aside.]

K. Hen. How now, my lord? you do desire to know

Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. It is my duty

To attend your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Pray you, arise.

My good and gracious Lord of Canterbury.

Come, you and I must walk a turn together;

I have news to tell you: come, come, give me your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,

And am right sorry to repeat what follows:

I have, and most unwillingly, of late

Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord,

Grievous complaints of you; which, being consider'd,

Have mov'd us and our council that you shall

This morning come before us; where, I know,

You cannot with such freedom purge yourself

But that, till further trial in those charges

Which will require your answer, you must take

Your patience to you, and be well contented

To make your house our Tower: you a brother of us,

It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness

Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness;

And am right glad to catch this good occasion

Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff

And corn shall fly asunder: for I know

There's none stands under more calumnious tongues

Than I myself, poor man.

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury:

Thy truth and thy integrity is rooted

In us, thy friend: give me thy hand, stand up:

Prythee, let's walk. Now, by my holy-dame,

What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd

You would have given me your petition that

I should have ta'en some pains to bring together

Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you,

Without indurance, further.

Cran. Most dread liege,

The good I stand on is my truth and honesty:

If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies, [not,

Will triumph o'er my person; which I weigh

Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing

What can be said against me.

K. Hen. Know you not

How your state stands i' the world, with the whole world?

Your enemies are many, and not small; their practices

Must bear the same proportion; and not ever

The justice and the truth o' the question carries

The due o' the verdict with it: at what ease

Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt

To swear against you? such things have been done.

You are potentially oppos'd; and with a malice

Of as great size. Ween you of better luck,

I mean in perjur'd witness, than your Master,

Whose minister you are, whiles here he liv'd

Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to;

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,

And woo your own destruction.

Cran. God and your majesty

Protect mine innocence, or I fall into

The trap is laid for me!

K. Hen. Be of good cheer;

They shall no more prevail than we give way to.

Keep comfort to you; and this morning see

You do appear before them: if they shall chance,

In charging you with matters, to commit you,

The best persuasions to the contrary

Fail not to use, and with what vehemency

The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties

Will render you no remedy, this ring

Deliver them, and your appeal to us

There make before them.—Look, the good man weeps!

He's honest, on mine honour. God's bless'd mother!

I swear he is true-hearted; and a soul

None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone,

And do as I have bid you. [Exit CRANMER.]

—He has strangled

His language in his tears.

Enter an Old Lady.

Gent. [Within.] Come back: what mean you?

Old L. I'll not come back; the tidings that

I bring [angels

Will make my boldness manners.—Now, good

Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person

Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen. Now, by thy looks

I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd?

Say ay; and of a boy.

Old L.

Ay, ay, my liege;

And of a lovely boy: the God of Heaven

Both now and ever bless her!—'tis a girl,—

Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen

Desires your visitation, and to be

Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you

As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen. Lovell,—

Re-enter LOVELL.

Lov. Sir?

K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks. I'll to the queen. [Exit.]

Old L. An hundred marks! By this light,

I'll ha' more.

An ordinary groom is for such payment.

I will have more, or scold it out of him.

Said I for this, the girl was like to him?

I will have more, or else unsay't; and now,

While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Lobby before the Council Chamber.

Enter CRANMER; Servants, Door-keeper, &c., attending.

Cran. I hope I am not too late; and yet the gentleman

That was sent to me from the council pray'd me To make great haste. All fast? what means this?—Ho!

Who waits there?—Sure, you know me?

D. Keep. Yes, my lord;

But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?

D. Keep. Your grace must wait till you be call'd for.

Enter DOCTOR BUTTS.

Cran. So.

Butts. [Aside.] This is a piece of malice. I am glad

I came this way so happily: the king Shall understand it presently. [Exit.]

Cran. [Aside.] 'Tis Butts, The King's physician: as he pass'd along, How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me! Pray, heaven, he sound not my disgrace! For certain,

This is of purpose laid by some that hate me,— God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice,—

To quench mine honour: they would shame to Wait else at door, a fellow-counsellor, Among boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures

Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

The KING and BUTTS appear at a window above

Butts. I'll show your grace the strangest sight,—

K. Hen. What's that, Butts?

Butts. I think your highness saw this many a day.

K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it?

Butts. There my lord: The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury; Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants, Pages, and footboys.

K. Hen. Ha! 'tis he indeed:

Is this the honour they do one another?

'Tis well there's one above them yet. I had thought

They had parted so much honesty among 'em,— At least good manners,—as not thus to suffer A man of his place, and so near our favour, To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures,

And at the door too, like a post with packets.

By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery:

Let 'em alone, and draw the curtain close;

We shall hear more anon. [Exeunt.]

The Council Chamber.

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the DUKE OF SUF-FOLK, the DUKE OF NORFOLK, EARL OF SURREY, Lord Chamberlain, GARDINER, and CROMWELL. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left void above him,

as for the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY
The rest seat themselves in order on each side.
CROMWELL at the lower end, as Secretary.

Chan. Speak to the business, master secretary:

Why are we met in council?

Crom.

Please your honours,
The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gar. Has he had knowledge of it?

Crom.

Yes.

Nor.

Who waits there?

D. Keep. Without, my noble lords?

Gar.

Yes.

D. Keep. My lord archbishop;

And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now.

[CRAN. approaches the Council-table.

Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry

To sit here at this present, and behold

That chair stand empty: but we all are men,
In our own natures frail, and capable

Of our flesh; few are angels: out of which frailty

And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,

Have misdeem'd yourself, and not a little,

Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling

The whole realm, by your teaching and your chaplains,—

For so we are inform'd,—with new opinions,

Divers and dangerous; which are heresies,

And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gar. Which reformation must be sudden too,

My noble lords; for those that tame wild horses

Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle,

But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur 'em,

Till they obey the manage. If we suffer,—

Out of our easiness, and childish pity

To one man's honour,—this contagious sickness,

Farewell all physic: and what follows then?

Commotions, uproars, with a general taint

Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours,

The upper Germany, can dearly witness,

Yet freshly pitied in our memories. [Gress

Cran. My good lords, hitherto in all the pro-

Both of my life and office, I have labour'd,

And with no little study, that my teaching

And the strong course of my authority

Might go one way, and safely; and the end

Was ever to do well: nor is there living,—

I speak it with a single heart, my lords,—

A man that more detests, more stirs against,

Both in his private conscience and his place,

Defacers of a public peace, than I do.

Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart

With less allegiance in it! Men that make

Envy and crooked malice nourishment

Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships

That, in this case of justice, my accusers,

Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,

And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord,
That cannot be: you are a counsellor,
And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment, [pleasure,
We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness'
And our consent, for better trial of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower;
Where, being but a private man again,
You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,
More than, I fear, you are provided for.

Cran. Ah, my good Lord of Winchester, I thank you; [pass

You are always my good friend; if your will
I shall both find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful: I see your end,—
'Tis my undoing: love and meekness, lord,
Become a churchman better than ambition:
Win straying souls with modesty again,
Cast none away. That I shall clear myself,
Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,
I make as little doubt as you do conscience
In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,
But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gar. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary.
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers, [ness,

To men that understand you, words and weak-Crom. My Lord of Winchester, you are a little,

By your good favour, too sharp; men so noble,
However faulty, yet should find respect
For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty
To load a falling man.

Gar. Good master secretary,
I cry your honour mercy; you may, worst
Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?
Gar. Do not I know you for a favourer
Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound?
Gar. Not sound, I say.

Crom. Would you were half so honest!
Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

Gar. I shall remember this bold language.
Crom. Do.

Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;
Forbear, for shame, my lords.

Gar. I have done.

Crom. And I.

Chan. Then thus for you, my lord: it stands agreed,

I take it, by all voices, that forthwith
You be conveyed to the Tower a prisoner;
There to remain till the king's further pleasure
Be known unto us:—are you all agreed, lords?

All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

Gar. What other
Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome.—

Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

Cran.
Must I go like a traitor thither?

For me?

Gar. Receive him,
And see him safe i' the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords,
I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords;
By virtue of that ring I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Chan. This is the king's ring.

Suf. 'Tis no counterfeit.

Suf. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven: I told ye
all,

When we first put this dangerous stone a-rolling,
'Twould fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords,
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Chan. 'Tis now too certain:
How much more is his life in value with him?
Would I were fairly out on't!

Crom. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales and informations
Against this man,—whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,—
Ye blew the fire that burns ye: now have at ye.

Enter the KING frowning on them; he takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince;
Not only good and wise, but most religious:
One that, in all obedience, makes the church
The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen
That holy duty, out of dear respect,
His royal self in judgment comes to hear
The cause betwixt her and this great offender.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations,
Bishop of Winchester. But know, I come not
To hear such flattery now, and in my presence;

They are too thin and bare to hide offences.
To me you cannot reach: you play the spaniel,
And think with wagging of your tongue to win
me;

But whatso'er thou tak'st me for, I am sure
Thou hast a cruel nature, and a bloody.— Good man [to CRANMER], sit down. Now let me see the proudest,

He that dares most, but wag his finger at thee:
By all that's holy, he had better starve [not.
Than but once think this place becomes thee

Suf. May it please your grace,—

K. Hen. No, sir, it does not please me.
I had thought I had had men of some understanding

And wisdom of my council; but I find none.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This good man,—few of you deserve that title,—

This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy
At chamber door? and one as great as you are?
Why, what a shame was this! Did my commission

Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye Power as he was a counsellor to try him,
Not as a groom: there's some of ye, I see,
More out of malice than integrity,
Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean;
Which ye shall never have while I live.

Chan.
My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace
To let my tongue excuse all. What was pur-Concerning his imprisonment was rather,—
If there be faith in men,—meant for his trial,
And fair purgation to the world, than malice,—
I'm sure in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him;
Take him, and use him well, he's worthy of it.
I will say thus much for him,—if a prince
May be beholding to a subject, I
Am, for his love and service, so to him.
Make me no more ado, but all embrace him:
Be friends, for shame, my lords!—My Lord of Canterbury,

I have a suit which you must not deny me;
That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism,
You must be godfather, and answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory

In such an honour: how may I deserve it,
That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spoons: you shall have

Two noble partners with you: the old Duchess of Norfolk

And Lady Marquis Dorset: will these please
Once more, my Lord of Winchester, I charge
you,

Embrace and love this man.

Gar. With a true heart
And brother-love I do it.

Cran. And let heaven
Witness how dear I hold this confirmation.

K. Hen. Good man, those joyful tears show thy true heart:

The common voice, I see, is verified
Of thee, which says thus,—Do my Lord of Canterbury

A shrewd turn, and he is your friend forever.—
Come, lords, we trifle time away; I long
To have this young one made a Christian.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Palace Yard.

Noise and tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals: do you take the court for Paris garden?
ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.

[Within.] Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you rogue! is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones:
these are but switches to them.—I'll scratch your heads: you must be seeing christenings?
do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Man. Pray, sir, be patient: 'tis as much impossible,— [cannons,— Unless we sweep them from the door with
To scatter 'em as 'tis to make 'em sleep
On May-day morning; which will never be:
We may as well push against Paul's as stir 'em.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?
Man. Alas, I know not; how gets the tide in?
As much as one sound cudgel of four foot,—
You see the poor remainder,—could distribute,
I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.
Man. I am not Samson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colbrand,

To mow 'em down before me: but if I spar'd
That had a head to hit, either young or old,
He or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker,
Let me ne'er hope to see a chine again;
And that I would not for a cow, God save her!
[Within.] Do you hear, master porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy.—Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock them down by the dozens? In this Moorfields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a fry of fornication is at door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand:
here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir.
There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brazier by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in's nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: that fire-drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharged against me; he stands there, like a mortar-piece, to blow us.
There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pink'd porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I mis'd the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out Clubs!
when I might see from far some forty trun-cheoners draw to her succor, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quartered.
They fell on: I made good my place: at length they came to the broomstaff to me; I defied them still: when suddenly a file of boys behind them, loose shot, delivered such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let them win the work: the devil was amongst them, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a play-house and fight for bitten apples; that, no audience, but the Tribulation of Tower-hill or the limbs of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of them in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days; besides the running banquet of two beadies that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! [coming]
They grow still too; from all parts they are
As if we kept a fair here! Where are these porters,
These lazy knaves?—Ye have made a fine hand,
fellows.

There's a trim rabble let in: are all these Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall have

Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies,

When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honour,
We are but men; and what so many may do,
Not being torn a pieces, we have done:
An army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I live,
If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all
By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads
Clap round fines for neglect; you're lazy knaves;
And here ye lie baiting of bombards, when Ye should do service. Hark! the trumpets
sound;

They are come already from the christening:
Go, break among the press, and find a way out
To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marshalsea shall hold you play these two months.

Port. Make way there for the princess.

Man. You great fellow,
Stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.

Port. You i' the camlet, get up o' the rail;
I'll pick you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Palace.

Enter trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, CRANMER, DUKE OF NORFOLK, with his marshal's staff, DUKE OF SUFFOLK, two Noblemen bearing great standing-bowls for the christening gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the DUCHESS OF NORFOLK, godmother, bearing the child richly habited in a mantle, &c. Train borne by a Lady; then follows the MARCHIONESS OF DORSET, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heaven, from thy endless send prosperous life, long, and ever-the high and mighty princess of Elizabeth!

Flourish. Enter KING and Train.

Cran. [Kneeling.] And to your royal grace and the good queen,
My noble partners and myself thus pray;—
All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady,
Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy,
May hourly fall upon ye!

K. Hen. Thank you, good lord archbishop.
What is her name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

K. Hen. Stand up, lord.—

[The KING kisses the child.]

With this kiss take my blessing: God protect
thee!

Into whose hand I give thy life.

Cran. Amen.

K. Hen. My noble gossips, ye have been too prodigal.

I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady,
When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir,
For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter Let none think flattery, for they'll find 'em truth.

This royal infant,—Heaven still move about
her!—

Though in her cradle, yet now promises
Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings,
Which time shall bring to ripeness: she shall
be,—

But few now living can behold that goodness,—
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed: Saba was never
More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue
Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces,
That mould up such a mighty piece as this is,
With all the virtues that attend the good,
Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse
her,

Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her:
She shall be lov'd and fear'd: her own shall bless her;

Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn,
And hang their heads with sorrow: good grows with her:

In her days every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours:
God shall be truly known; and those about her
From her shall read the perfect ways of honour,
And by those claim their greatness, not by blood.
Nor shall this peace sleep with her: but as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
Her ashes new create another heir,
As great in admiration as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one,—
When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness,—

Who from the sacred ashes of her honour
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
And so stand fix'd: peace, plenty, love, truth,
terror,

That were the servants to this chosen infant,
Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him:
Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine,
His honour and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations: he shall
flourish,

And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches
To all the plains about him:—our children's children

Shall see this and bless Heaven.

K. Hen. Thou speak'st wonders.

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England,

An aged princess; many days shall see her,
And yet no day without a deed to crown it.
Would I had known no more! but she must die,
She must, the saints must have her,—yet a virgin;

A most unspotted lily shall she pass
To the ground, and all the world shall mourn
her.

K. Hen. O lord archbishop,
Thou hast made me now a man; never, before
This happy child, did I get anything:
This oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me
That when I am in heaven I shall desire
To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.—

I thank ye all.—To you, my good lord mayor,
And you, good brethren, I am much beholding;
I have received much honour by your presence,

And ye shall find me thankful.—Lead the way,
lords:—

[ye,
Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank
She will be sick else. This day, no man think
Has business at his house; for all shall stay:
This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.]

EPILOGUE

'Tis ten to one this play can never please
All that are here: some come to take their ease,
And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,

We have frightened with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear,

They'll say 'tis naught: others to hear the city
Abus'd extremely, and to cry,—That's witty!
Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,
All the expected good we're like to hear
For this play at this time, is only in
The merciful construction of good women;
For such a one we show'd 'em: if they smile,
And say 'twill do, I know, within awhile
All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap
If they hold when their ladies bid 'em clap.

PROLOGUE.

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece

The princes orgulous, their high blood chaf'd,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: sixty and nine, that wore
Their crownets regal, from the Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia: and their vow is made

To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.

To Tenedos they come;
And the deep-drawing barks do there discharge

Their warlike fraughtage: now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenorides, with massy staples
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr up the sons of Troy.

Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard:—and hither am I come
A prologue arm'd,—but not in confidence
Of author's pen or actor's voice; but suited
In like conditions as our argument,—
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those
broils,

Beginning in the middle; starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play.
Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
Now good or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—TROY. Before PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter TROILUS armed, and PANDARUS.

Tro. Call here my varlet; I'll unarm again;
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?
Each Trojan that is master of his heart,
Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength, [valiant;
Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness
But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance,
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skillless as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this:
for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no further. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must needs tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening; but here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips. [be,

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she Doth lesser blench at sufferance than I do.
At Priam's royal table do I sit;
And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,— So, traitor!—when she comes!—When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—when my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain;
Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,
I have,—as when the sun doth light a storm,—
Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile:
But sorrow that is couch'd in seeming gladness
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's,—well, go to,—there were no more comparison between the women,—but, for my part, she is my kinswoman; I would not, as they term it, praise her,—but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did.
I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit;
but,—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tell thee there my hopes lie drown'd,
Reply not in how many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressid's love: thou answer'st, she is fair;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart [voice;
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her
Handlest in thy discourse, O, that her hand,

In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach; to whose soft seizure

The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense
Hard as the palm of ploughman!—This thou tell'st me,

As true thou tell'st me, when I say I love her;
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm, [me
Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given
The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus,—how now, Pandarus!

Pan. I have had my labour for my travail;
ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you:
gone between and between, but small thanks for my labour.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus?
what, with me?

Pan. Because she is kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not an she were a blackamoor; 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I, she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no.
She's a fool to stay behind her father; let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me: I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit. An alarm.

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamours! peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair,
When with your blood you daily paint her thus.
I cannot fight upon this argument;
It is too starv'd a subject for my sword.

But Pandarus,—O gods, how do you plague
me!

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar;
And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo.
As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit.
Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we?
Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl:
Between our Ilium and where she resides
Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood;
Ourself the merchant; and this sailing Pandar
Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark.

Alarm. Enter AENEAS.

Aene. How now, Prince Troilus! wherefore not afield? [sorts,

Tro. Because not there: this woman's answer
For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Aeneas, from the field to-day?

Aene. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Aeneas?

Aene.

Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: 'tis but a scar to scorn;
Paris is gor'd with Menelaus' horn. [Alarm.

Hark, what good sport is out of town to-day!

Tro. Better at home, if would I might were may.— [thither]

But to the sport abroad;—are you bound

Ene. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we, then, together. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—TROY. A Street.

Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower, Whose height commands as subject all the vale, To see the battle. Hector, whose patience Is as a virtue fix'd, to-day was mov'd:

He chid Andromache, and struck his armourer; And, like as there were husbandry in war, Before the sun rose he was harness'd light, And to the field goes he, where every flower Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, this: there is among the Greeks

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector;

They call him Ajax.

Cres. Good, and what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se, And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men,—unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions: he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humours that his valour is crushed into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of; nor any man an attain, but he carries some stain of it: he is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of everything; but everything so out of joint that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say he yesterday coped Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Enter PANDARUS.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good-morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good-morrow, cousin Cressid: what do you talk of?—Good-morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hector armed and gone ere ye came to Ilium? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so: Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too; he'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that: and there is Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector? Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Ay, if I ever saw him before, and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for I am sure he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself! Alas, poor Troilus! I would he were,— Cres. So he is.

Pan. Condition, I had gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself! no, he's not himself,—would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; time must friend or end: well, Troilus, well,—I would my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. The other's not come to't; you shall tell me another tale when the other's come to't. Hector shall not have his wit this year,—

Cres. He shall not need it if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities,—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him,—his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore the other day that Troilus, for a brown favour,—for so 'tis, I must confess,—not brown neither,— Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She praised his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his; he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into the compassed window,—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin,—

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will he, within three pounds, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man and so old a Pan. But to prove to you that Helen loves him,—she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin,—

Cres. Juno have mercy! how came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to, then:—but to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,— Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus! why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh to think how she tickled his chin;—indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess,— Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing!—Queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er,— Cres. With millstones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed,—

Cres. But there was more tempest fire under the pot of her eyes.—Did her eyes run o'er too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, Here's but one and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white.

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that. One and fifty hairs, quoth he, and one white: that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons.—Jupiter! quoth she, which of these hairs is Paris my husband?—The forked one, quoth he; pluck it out and give it him. But there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed; and all the rest so laughed that it passed.

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn 'tis true; he will weep you, an 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettle against May. [A retreat sounded.]

Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field: shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Ilium? good niece, do; sweet Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

ÆNEAS passes.

Pan. That's Æneas: is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you. But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

ANTENOR passes.

Cres. Who's that?

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person. When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

HECTOR passes.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector!—There's a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!—Look how he looks!—There's a countenance! Is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

Pan. Is 'a not? It does a man's heart good.—Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there: there's no jesting; there's laying on; take't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

Pan. Swords! anything, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: by god's lid, it does one's heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris:

PARIS passes.

look ye yonder, niece; is't not a gallant man too, is't not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who said he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now, ha!—Would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon.

HELENUS passes.

Cres. Who's that?

Pan. That's Helenus:—I marvel where Troilus is:—that's Helenus:—I think he went not forth to-day:—that's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus! no;—yes, he'll fight indifferently well.—I marvel where Troilus is.—Hark! do you not hear the people cry Troilus?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus:—'tis Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him:—O brave Troilus!—look well upon him, niece; look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hack'd than Hector's; and how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty.—Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way!—Had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

Cres. Here come more.

Forces pass.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat!—I could live and die i' the eyes of Troilus.—Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone: crows and daws, crows and daws!—I had rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles, a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well!—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be baked with no date in the pie,—for then the man's date's out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding, and then it is past watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit boy.] I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle.

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token—you are a bawd.

[Exit PANDARUS]

Words, vows, gifts, tears, and love's full sacrifice,

He offers in another's enterprise:

But more in Troilus thousand-fold I see

Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be;

Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing:

Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing:

That she belov'd knows naught that knows not this,—

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is:

That she was never yet that ever knew

Love got so sweet as when desire did sue:

Therefore this maxim out of love I teach,—

Achievement is command; ungain'd beseech:

Then though my heart's content firm love doth bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—THE GRECIAN CAMP. Before
AGAMEMNON'S Tent.

Sennet. Enter AGAMEMNON, NESTOR,
ULYSSES, MENELAUS, and others.

Agam. Princes, [checks?]

What grief hath set the jaundice on your
The ample proposition that hope makes

In all designs begun on earth below [disasters]

Fails in the promis'd largeness: checks and

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd;

As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,

Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain

Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Nor, princes, is it matter new to us

That we come short of our suppose so far

That, after seven years' siege, yet Troy walls

stand;

Sith every action that hath gone before,

Whereof we have record, trial did draw

Bias and thwart, not answering the aim,

And that unbodied figure of the thought

That gav't surmised shape. Why, then, you princes,

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works;

And call them shames, which are, indeed,

naught else

But the protractive trials of great Jove

To find persisive constancy in men?

The fineness of which metal is not found

In fortune's love: for then the bold and coward,

The wise and fool, the artist and unread,

The hard and soft, seem all affin'd and kin:

But, in the wind and tempest of her frown,

Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,

Puffing at all, winnows the light away,

And what hath mass or matter, by itself

Lies rich in virtue and unmingled. [seat,

Nest.] With due observance of thy godlike

Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply

Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance

Lies the true proof of men: the sea being smooth,

How many shallow bauble boats dare sail

Upon her patient breast, making their way

With those of nobler bulk!

But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage

The gentle Thetis, and, anon, behold
The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut,
Bounding between the two moist elements,
Like Perseus' horse: where's then the saucy boat,

Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now
Co-rival'd greatness? either to harbour fled
Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so Doth valour's show and valour's worth divide
In storms of fortune: for in her ray and brightness

The herd hath more annoyance by the breeze
Than by the tiger: but when the splitting wind
Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks,
And flies fled under shade,—why, then the thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,
And with an accent tun'd in self-same key
Retorts to chiding fortune.

Ulyss.

Agamemnon,—

Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece,

Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit,
In whom the tempers and the minds of all
Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks.
Besides the applause and approbation

The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,—

[To AGAMEMNON.

And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,—

[To NESTOR.

I give to both your speeches,—which were such
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in brass; and such again
As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver, [tree
Should with a bond of air,—strong as the axle-
On which heaven rides,—knit all the Greekish ears

[both,—

To his experienc'd tongue,—yet let it please
Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Agam. Speak, Prince of Ithaca; and be't of less expect,

That matter needless, of importless burden,
Divide thy lips, than we are confident,
When rank Thersites opes his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,

[master,

And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a
But for these instances.

The specialty of rule hath been neglected:
And look, how many Grecian tents do stand
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.

When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected? Degree being vizarded,

The unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.
The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,

Observe degree, priority, and place,
Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
Office, and custom, in all line of order:
And therefore is the glorious planet Sol
In noble eminence enthron'd and spheer'd
Amidst the other; whose medicinal eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
Sans check to good and bad: but when the planets,

In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
What plagues and what portents! what mutiny
What raging of the sea! shaking of earth!
Commotion in the winds! frights, changes
horrors,

Divert and crack, rend and deracinate

The unity and married calm of states [shak'd

Quite from their fixture! O, when degree is

Which is the ladder to all high designs,

The enterprise is sick! How could communities,

Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,

Peaceful commerce from dividable shores,

The primogenitive and due of birth,

Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,

But by degree, stand in authentic place?

Take but degree away, untune that string,

And, hark, what discord follows! each thing

meets

In mere oppugnancy: the bounded waters

Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,

And make a sop of all this solid globe:

Strength should be lord of imbecility,

And the rude son should strike his father dead:

Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong,—

Between whose endless jar justice resides,—

Should lose their names, and so should justice

too.

Then everything includes itself in power,

Power into will, will into appetite;

And appetite, an universal wolf,

So doubly seconded with will and power,

Must make perforce an universal prey,

And last eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,

This chaos, when degree is suffocate,

Follows the choking.

And this neglect of degree it is

That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose

It hath to climb. The general's disdain'd

By him one step below; he by the next;

That next by him beneath: so every step,

Exemplary by the first pace that is sick

Of his superior, grows to an envious fever

Of pale and bloodless emulation;

And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot,

Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,

Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here dis-cover'd

The fever whereof all our power is sick.

Agam. The nature of the sickness found,

Ulysses,

What is the remedy? [crowns

Ulyss. The great Achilles,—whom opinion

The sinew and the forehead of our host,—

Having his ear full of his airy fame,

Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent

Lies mocking our designs: with him Patroclus,

Upon a lazy bed, the livelong day

Breaks scurril jests;

And with ridiculous and awkward action,—

Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,—

Hepageantsus. Sometime, great Agamemnon,

Thy topos deputation he puts on;

And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit

Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich

To hear the wooden dialogue and sound

'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,—

Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming

He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks
'Tis like a chime a-mending; with terms unsuar'd, [dropp'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon
Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff
The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
Cries, Excellent! 'tis Agamemnon just.

*Now play me Nestor; hem, and stroke thy beard,
As he being drest to some oration.*

That's done;—as near as the extremest ends
Of parallels; as like as Vulcan and his wife :
Yet god Achilles still cries, Excellent!

'Tis Nestor right. Now play him me, Patroclus, Arming to answer in a night alarm.

And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth; to cough and spit,
And, with a palsy-fumbling on his gorget,
Shake in and out the rivet: and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries, *O, enough, Patroclus;
Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleen.* And in this fashion
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Severals and generals of grace exact,
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field or speech for truce,
Success or loss, what is or is not, serves
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain,—
Who, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice,—many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-willed; and bears his head
In such a rein, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him;
Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war
Bold as an oracle; and sets Thersites,—
A slave, whose gall coins slanders like a munt,—
To match us in comparisons with dirt,
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;

Count wisdom as no member of the war;
Foretell prescience, and esteem no act
But that of hand: the still and mental parts,—
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
When fitness calls them on; and know, by measure

Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity:
They call this bed-work, mappery, closet-war;
So that the ram that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine,

Or those that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse Makes many Thetis' sons. [Trumpet sounds.

Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.

Men. From Troy.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Agam. What would you fore our tent?

Æne. Is this great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?

Agam. Even this.

Æne. May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm [voice

'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one
Call Agamemnon head and general. [may

Æne. Fair leave and large security. Ho

A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. How!

Æne. Ay;
I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phœbus:

Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of Troy

Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonair, un-arm'd,

As bending angels; that's their fame in peace:
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls, [Jove's accord,

Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and,
Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Æneas,
Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips!

The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If that the prais'd himself bring the praise forth:
But what the repining enemy commends,
That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure, transcends. [Æneas'

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself

Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?

Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Agam. He hears not privately that comes from Troy. [him:

Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper

I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;

To set his sense on the attentive bent,

And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly as the wind;

It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:

That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,

He tells thee so himself.

Æne. Trumpet, blow loud,

Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;

And every Greek of mettle, let him know

What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy

A prince called Hector,—Priam is his father,—

Who in this dull and long-continued truce

Is rusty grown: he bade me take a trumpet

And to this purpose speak. Kings, prin es,

lords!

If there be one among the fair'st of Greece

That holds his honour higher than his ease;

That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;

That knows his valour and knows not his fear;

That loves his mistress more than in confession,—

With truant vows to her own lips he loves,—

And dare avow her beauty and her worth

In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.

Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,

Shall make it good, or do his best to do it,

He hath a lady wiser, fairer, truer

Than ever Greek did compass in his arms

And will to-morrow with his trumpet call

Mid-way between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love:
If any come, Hector shall honour him;
If none, he'll say in Troy when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sunburnt, and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, Lord
Aeneas;

If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home: but we are soldiers;
And may that soldier a mere recreant prove
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd: he is old now;
But if there be not in our Grecian host
One noble man that hath one spark of fire
To answer for his love, tell him from me—
I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver,
And in my vantage put thus wither'd brawn;
And, meeting him, will tell him that my lady
Was fairer than his grandame, and as chaste
As may be in the world: his youth in flood, I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood. [youth!]

Ene. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of Ulyss. Amen. [hand;

Agam. Fair Lord Aeneas, let me touch your
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir.
Achilles shall have word of this intent;
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent:
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but ULYSS. and NEST.]

Ulyss. Nestor,—

Nest. What says Ulysses? [brain;

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is't?

Ulyss. This 'tis:—

Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded pride
That hath to this maturity blown up
In rank Achilles must or now be cropp'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how? [sends,

Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector
However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles. [stance,

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as sub-
Whose grossness little characters sum up:
And, in the publication, make no strain
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Libya—though, Apollo knows,
'Tis dry enough,—will, with great speed of
judgment,

ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you? [else oppose

Nest. Yes, 'tis most meet: whom may you
That can from Hector bring his honour off,
If not Achilles? Though't be a sportful combat,
Yet in the trial much opinion dwells;
For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute
With their fin'st palate: and trust to me, Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action; for the success,
Although particular, shall give a scantling

Of good or bad unto the general;
And in such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd
He that meets Hector issues from our choice:
And choice being mutual act of all our souls,
Makes merit her election; and doth boil,
As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd
Out of our virtues; who miscarrying, [part,
What heart receives from hence the conquering
To steal a strong opinion to themselves?
Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments.
In no less working than are swords and bows
Directive by the limbs.

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech;—
Therefore 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector.
Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think perchance they'll sell; if not,
The lustre of the better shall exceed,
By showing the worst first. Do not consent
That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
For both our honour and our shame in this
Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are they?

Ulyss. What glory cur Achilles shares from Hector, [him:

Were he not proud, we all should share with
But he already is too insolent;
And we were better parch in Afric sun
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,
Should he 'scape Hector far: if he were foul'd,
Why, then we did our main opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery;
And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector: among ourselves,
Give him allowance for the better man;
For that will physic the great Myrmidon
Who broils in loud applause, and make him fall
His crest that prouder than blue Iris bends.
If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices: if he fail,
Yet go we under our opinion still
That we have better men. But, hit or miss,
Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,— Ajax employ'd plucks down Achilles' plumes.

Nest. Now, Ulysses, I begin to relish thy advice;

And I will give a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.
Two curs shall tame each other: pride alone
Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II

SCENE I.—Another part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. Agamemnon,—how if he had boils,— full, all over, generally?—

Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. And those boils did run?—Say so,— did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core?—

Ajax. Dog,— Ther. Then would come some matter from him; I see none now.

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear? Feel, then. [Beating him.]

Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrell! beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak, then, thou vinewedst leaven, speak: I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: but I think thy horse will sooner con an oration than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murrain o' thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. Toadstool, learn me the proclamation.

Ther. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou striketh me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation,—

Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not; my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee; I would make thee the loathsome scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou striketh as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation,—

Ther. Thou grumblest and raillest every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou barkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites:

Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobloaf!

Ther. He would pun thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. You whorson cur! [Beating him.]

Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!

Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assinego may tutor thee: thou scurvy valiant ass! thou art here but to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!

Ajax. You dog!

Ther. You scurvy lord!

Ajax. You cur!

Ther. Mars his idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do. [Beating him.]

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax! wherefore do you thus?—

How now, Thersites! what's the matter, man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. Ay; what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, look upon him.

Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.

Achil. Well! why, I do so.

Ther. But yet you look not well upon him; for whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that, fool.

Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.

Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters! his evasions have ears thus long. I have bobbed his brain more than he has beat my bones: I will buy nine sparrows for a penny, and his pia mater is not worth the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles, Ajax,—who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head,—I'll tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say, this Ajax,—

[AJAX offers to beat him, ACHILLES interposes.]

Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

Ther. Has not so much wit,—

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace, fool!

Ther. I would have peace and quietness, but the fool will not: he there; that he; look you there.

Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall,—

Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will shame it.

Patr. Good words, Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrel?

Ajax. I bade the vile owl go learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary,—no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. E'en so; a great deal of your wit, too, lies in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch if he knock out either of your brains: 'a were as good crack a rusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor,—whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on their toes,—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.

Achil. What, what? [Ajax! to!]

Ther. Yes, good sooth: to, Achilles! to,

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace!

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brach bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools. [Exit.]

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaim'd through all our host:—

That Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun, Will, with a trumpet, 'twixt our tents and Troy, To-morrow morning call some knight to arms That hath a stomach; and such a one that dare Maintain I know not what; 'tis trash. Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not, it is put to lottery; otherwise He knew his man.

Ajax. O, meaning you.—I'll go learn more of it. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—TROY. A Room in PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter PRIAM, HECTOR, TROILUS, PARIS, and HELENUS.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,

Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:—
Deliver Helen, and all damage else,—
As honour, loss of time, travail, expense,
Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consum'd

In hot digestion of this cormorant war,—
Shall be struck off.—Hector, what say you to't?

Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I,

As far as toucheth my particular,
Yet, dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out, Who knows what follows?
Than Hector is: the wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Every tittle soul, 'mongst many thousand dismes,
Hath been as dear as Helen,—I mean, of ours:
If we have lost so many tenths of ours,
To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us,
Had it our name, the value of one ten,—
What ment's in that reason which denies
The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie, my brother!

Weigh you the worth and honour of a king,
So great as our dread father, in a scale
Of common ounces? will you with counters sum
The past-proportion of his infinite?
And buckle-in a waist most fathomless
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? fie, for godly shame!

Hel. No marvel though you bite so sharp at reasons: [father]

You are so empty of them. Should not our Bear the great sway of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest; [reasons:]

You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your
You know an enemy intends you harm;
You know a sword employ'd is perilous,
And reason flies the object of all harm:
Who marvels, then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels,
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star disrob'd?—Nay if we talk of reason [honour]

Let's shut our gates and sleep: manhood and Should have hearts would they but fat their thoughts

With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect
Make livers pale and lusthood deject.

Hect. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost

The holding.

Tro. What is aught but as 'tis valued?
Hect. But value dwells not in particular will;
It holds his estimate and dignity
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself
As in the prize: 'tis mad idolatry
To make the service greater than the god;
And the will dotes, that is attributive
To what infection itself affects,
Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment: how may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
To blench from this, and to stand firm by honour:

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant
When we have soul'd them; nor the remainder viands

We do not throw in unrespective sieve,
Because we now are full. It was thought meet
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:
Your breath of full consent belied his sails;
The seas and winds,—old wranglers,—took a truce, [desir'd;
And did him service: he touch'd the ports
And for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive, [freshness
He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and Winkles Apollo's, and makes stale the morning.

Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:
Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,
Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,

And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.
If you'll avouch 'twas wisdom Paris went,—
As you must needs, for you all cried, Go, go,—
If you'll confess he brought home noble prize,—
As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,

And cried, Inestimable!—why do you now
The issue of your proper wisdoms rate,
And do a deed that fortune never did,— Beggar the estimation which you priz'd
Richer than sea and land? O theft most base,
That we have stol'n what we do fear to keep!
But thieves, unworthy of a thing so stol'n,
That in their country did them that disgrace,
We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!

Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?

Pro. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voice.

Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!

Hect. It is Cassandra.

Enter CASSANDRA, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,

And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hect. Peace, sister, peace. [old,

Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled
Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of moan to come.

Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears!
Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand;

Our firebrand brother, Paris, burns us all.
Cry, Trojans, cry! an Helen and a woe:
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go.

[Exit.]

Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains

Of divination in our sister work
Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
So madly hot that no discourse of reason,
Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
Can qualify the same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it;
Nor once deject the courage of our minds
Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures

Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel
Which hath our several honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid there should be done amongst us

Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity
As well my undertakings as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project.
For what, alas, can these my single arms?
What propugnation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faunt in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.

What treason were it to the ransack'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up
On terms of base compulsion! Can it be
That so degenerate a strain as this [bosoms]
Should once set footing in your generous
There's not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd or death unfam'd,
Where Helen is the subject; then, I say, [well],
Well may we fight for her, whom, we know
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hect. Paris and Troilus, you have both said well;

And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glaz'd,—but superficially; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy:
The reasons you allege do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure and revenge

Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves
All dues be render'd to their owners: now,
What nearer debt in all humanity

Than wife is to the husband? If this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection;
And that great minds, of partial indulgence
To their benumbed wills, resist the same;
There is a law in each well-order'd nation
To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory.

If Helen, then, be wife to Sparta's king,—
As it is known she is,—these moral laws
Of nature and of nations speak aloud
To have her back return'd: thus to persist
In doing wrong extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion

Is this, in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless,
My spritely brethren, I propend to you
In resolution to keep Helen still,
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence
Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:

Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector,
She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds;
Whose present courage may beat down our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize us:
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Priamus.—
I have a roasting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advertis'd their great general slept,
Whilst emulation in the army crept:
This, I presume, will wake him. [Exitunt.]

SCENE III.—THE GRECIAN CAMP. Before
ACHILLES' Tent.

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. How now, Thersites! what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury! Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me. 'Sfoot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles,— a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove, the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy caduceus; if ye take not that little little less-than-little wit from them that they have! which short-aimed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather, the bone-ache! for that, methinks, is the curse dependent on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers; and devil envy say Amen.—What, ho! my Lord Achilles!

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites! Good Thersites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contemplation: but is is no matter; thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then if she that lays thee out says thou art a fair corpse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't she never shrouded any but lazars. Amen.—Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Ay, the heavens hear me!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come,—what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles:—then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites: then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus: then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayst tell that knowest.

Achil. O, tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool! I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileged man.—Proceed, Thersites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Thersites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this; come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover. It suffices me thou art.—Look you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody.—Come in with me, Thersites. [Exit.]

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold and a whore; a good quarrel to draw emulous factions and bleed to death upon. Now the dry serpio on the subject! and war and lechery confound all! [Exit.]

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and AJAX.

Agam. Where is Achilles? [Iord.]

Patr. Within his tent; but ill-dispos'd, my Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here.

He shent our messengers; and we lay by Our appertainments, visiting of him: Let him be told so; lest, perchance, he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit.]

Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent: He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favour the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: but why, why? let him show us the cause.—A word, my lord. [Takes AGAMEMNON aside.]

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

Nest. Who, Thersites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see, he is his argument that has his argument,—Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their faction is more our wish than their faction. But it was a strong composure a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie. Here comes Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for flexure.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry If anything more than your sport and pleasure Did move your greatness and this noble state To call upon him; he hopes it is no other But for your health and your digestion sake,—An after-dinner's breath.

Agam. Hear you, Patroclus:—We are too well acquainted with these answers: But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn, Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath; and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him: yet all his virtues,—Not virtuously on his own part beheld,—Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss;

Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish, Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin

If you do say we think him over-proud And under-honest; in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment, and worthier than himself

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on, Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch His pettish lures, his ebbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Go tell him this; and add,

That if he overhold his price so much,
We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine
Not portable, lie under this report.—
Bring action hither, thus cannot go to war:
A stirring dwarf we do allowance give
Before a sleeping giant:—tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.

[Exit]

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied
We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter
you.

[Exit ULYSSES]

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind is the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud eats up himself: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man as I hate the engendering of toads.

Nest. Yet he loves himself: is't not strange?

[Aside.]

Re-enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none;
But carries on the stream of his dispose,
Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request,

Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only, [greatness:

He makes important: possess'd he is with
And speaks not to himself but with a pride,
That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth
Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse
That 'twixt his mental and his active parts
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
And batters down himself: what should I say?
He is so plaguily proud that the death tokens of it Cry, No recovery.

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent:
'Tis said he holds you well; and will be led,
At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!

We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes
When they go from Achilles. Shall the proud
lord,

That bastes his arrogance with his own seam,
And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts,—save such as do resolve
And ruminate himself,—shall he be worshipp'd
Of that we hold an idol more than he?
No, this thrice-worthy and right valiant lord
Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;

Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is,
By going to Achilles:
That were to enlarge his fat-already pride,
And add more coals to Cancer when he burns
With entertaining great Hyperion.
Thus lord go to him! Jupiter forbid;
And say in thunder, Achilles go to him.

Nest. O, this is well; he rubs the vein of him.

[Aside.]

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause!

[Aside.]

Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed fist
I'll pash him o'er the face.

Agam. O, no, you shall not go.

[pride]

Ajax. An' a be proud with me I'll pheeze his

Let me go to him.

[quarrel.]

Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!

Nest. How he describes himself! [Aside.]

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulyss. The raven chides blackness. [Aside.]

Ajax. I'll let his humours blood.

Agam. He will be the physician that should be the patient. [Aside.]

Ajax. An all men were o' my mind,—

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion. [Aside.]

Ajax. 'A should not bear it so, 'a should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. An 'twould, you'd carry half. [Aside.]

Ulyss. 'A would have ten shares. [Aside.]

Ajax. I will knead him, I'll make him supple.

Nest. He's not yet thorough warm; force him with praises: pour in, pour in: his ambition is dry. [Aside.]

Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike. [To AGAMEMNON.]

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles. [harm.]

Ulyss. Why 'tis this naming of him does him
Here is a man—but 'tis before his face;
I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus with us!

Would he were a Trojan!

Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now,—

Ulyss. If he were proud,—

Dio. Or covetous of praise,—

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne,—

Dio. Or strange, or self-affected!

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure; [suck;]

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee
Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice-fam'd, beyond all erudition:
But he that disciplin'd thy arms to fight,
Let Mars divide eternity in twain,
And give him half: and, for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield
To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,
Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines
Thy spacious and dilated parts: here's Nestor,— Instructed by the antiquary times,
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise;—
But pardon, father Nestor, were your days

As green as Ajax', and your brain so temper'd,
You should not have the eminence of him,
But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Nest. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be rul'd by him, Lord Ajax.

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the hart

Achilles

Keeps thicket. Please it our great general
To call together all his state of war;
Fresh kings are come to Troy. To-morrow
We must with all our main of power stand fast:
And here's a lord,—come knights from east to west,

And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.

Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep:
Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks
draw deep. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—TROY. A Room in PRIAM'S
Palace.

Enter PANDARUS and a Servant.

Pan. Friend, you,—pray you, a word: do not you follow the young Lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You depend upon him, I mean?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You depend upon a noble gentleman,
I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. Faith, sir, superficially.

Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the Lord Pandarus.

Serv. I hope I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace.

[Music within.]

Pan. Grace! not so, friend; honour and lordship are my titles.—What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir: it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love music.

Pan. Command, I mean, friend.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another:
I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning.
At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir. Marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul.—

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen: could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a complimentary assault upon him, for my business seethes.

Serv. Sudden business! there's a stewed phrase indeed!

Enter PARIS and HELEN, attended.

Pan. Fair be, to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them!—especially to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.—Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Pan. You have broke it, cousin: and by my life, you shall make it whole again; you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance.
—Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O, sir,—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude. [fits.]

Par. Well said, my lord! well, you say so in Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen.
—My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out:
we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.—But, marry, thus, my lord,—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus,—

Helen. My Lord Pandarus; honey-sweet
lord,—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends himself most affectionately to you,—

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody: if you do, our melancholy upon your head!

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen, i' faith.

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sour offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve you turn;
that shall it not, in truth, la. Nay, I care not for such words; no, no.—And, my lord, he desires you that, if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My Lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups
he to-night?

Helen. Nay, but, my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Par. I'll lay my life, with my disposer
Cressida.

Pan. No, no, no such matter; you are wide:
come, your disposer is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse.

Pan. Ay, good my lord. Why should you say Cressida? no, your poor disposer's sick.

Par. I spy.

Pan. You spy! what do you spy?—Come, give me an instrument.—Now, sweet queen.

Helen. Why, this is kindly done.

Pan. My niece is horribly in love with a thing you have, sweet queen.

Helen. She shall have it, my lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pan. He! no, she'll none of him; they two are twain.

Helen. Falling in, after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, I'll hear no more of this; I'll sing you a song now.

Helen. Ay, ay, pr'ythee now. By my troth sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Ay, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! ay, that it shall, i' faith. [love.]

Par. Ay, good now, love, love, nothing but!

Pan. In good troth, it begins so:

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, oh, love's bow

Shoots buck and doe:

The shaft confounds,

Not that it wounds,

But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!

Yet that which seems the would to kill,

Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!

So dying love lives still:

Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!

Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Heigh ho!

Helen. In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deeds? Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers?—Sweet lord, who's a-field to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-day, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something:—you know all, Lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day. You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen. [Exit.]

[A retreat sounded.]

Par. They are come from field; let us to Priam's hall [two you,

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles, [touch'd,

With these your white enchanting fingers Shall more obey than to the edge of steel, Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings,—disarm great Hector.

Helen. Twill make me proud to be his servant, Paris;

Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty Gives us more palm in beauty than we have, Yea, overshines ourself.

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—TROY. PANDARUS' Orchard.

Enter PANDARUS and TROILUS' Boy meeting

Pan. How now! where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Boy. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Pan. O, here he comes.

Enter TROILUS.

How now, how now!

Tro. Sirrah, walk off.

[Exit Boy.]

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door, Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon, And give me swift transportance to those fields Where I may wallow in the hly beds Propos'd for the deserfer! O gentle Pandarus, From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings, And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here i' the orchard, I'll bring her straight. [Exit.]

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirls me round.

The imaginary relish is so sweet That it enchants my sense: what will it be, When that the wat'ry palate tastes indeed Love's thrice-repured nectar? death, I fear me; Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine, Too subtle-potent, tun'd too sharp in sweetness, For the capacity of my ruder powers: I fear it much; and I do fear besides That I shall lose distinction in my joys; As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps The enemy flying.

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were frayed with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow. [Exit.]

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:

My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse; And all my powers do their bestowing lose, Like vassalage at unawares encount'ring The eye of majesty.

Re-enter PANDARUS with CRESSIDA.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me.—What, are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.—Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loth you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress. How now, a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' the river: go to, go to.

Tro. You have beret me of all words, lady. Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you o' the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's—In witness whereof the parties interchangeably—Come in, come in: I'll go get a fire. [Exit.]

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished me thus!

Cres. Wished, my lord!—The gods grant,—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abrupt? What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils of cherubims; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear: to fear the worst oft cures the worse.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstruosity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are they such? such are not we: praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert before his birth; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid as what envy can say worst shall be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truest not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me. Be true to my lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too: our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant being won: they are burs, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart:—

Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid, then, so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord

With the first glance that ever—Pardon me,—If I confess much, you will play the tyrant. I love you now; but not, till now, so much. But I might master it:—in faith, I lie; My thoughts were like unbridl'd children, grown Too headstrong for their mother:—see, we fools! Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us, When we are so unsecret to ourselves?—But, though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not; And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man, Or that we women had men's privilege Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue;

For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence, Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws My very soul of conscience!—Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence.

Pan. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me; 'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kiss: I am asham'd;—O heavens! what have I done? For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid!

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning,—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try:

I have a kind of self resides with you; But an unkind self, that itself will leave To be another's fool. I would be gone:—Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord. I show more craft than love;

And fell so roundly to a large confession, To angle for your thoughts: but you are wise; Or else you love not; for to be wise and love Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

Tro. O that I thought it could be a woman,—As if it can, I will presume in you,—To feed for aye her lamp and flames of love; To keep her constancy in plight and youth, Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind That doth renew swifter than blood decays! Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me,—

That my integrity and truth to you Might be affronted with the match and weight Of such a winnow'd purty in love; How were I then uplifted! but, alas! I am as true as truth's simplicity, And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O virtuous fight, When right with right wars who shall be most right!

True swains in love shall, in the world to come, Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes, Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,

Want smiles, truth tir'd with iteration,—
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,—
Yet, after all comparisons of truth.
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
As true as Troilus shall crown up the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing; yet let memory
From false to false, among false maids in love, Upbraid my falsehood! when they have said—
as false

As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son;
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,

As false as Cressid.

Par. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it;
I'll be the witness. Here I hold your hand;
here my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all Pandars; let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers between Pandars! say, amen.

Tro. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Par. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber and a bed; which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press
it to death: away!

And Cupid grant all tongue-tied maidens here,
Bed, chamber, Pandar to provide this gear!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—THE GRECIAN CAMP.

Enter AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES
NESTOR, AJAX, MENELAUS, and CALCHAS.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you

The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind
That, through the sight I bear in things to Jove,
I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession,
Incurr'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself,
From certain and possess'd conveniences,
To doubtful fortunes; sequest'ring from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition
Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become
As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

Agam. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan?
make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd
Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you,—often have you thanks therefore,—

Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange,
Whom Troy hath still denied: but this Antenor,
I know, is such a wrest in their affairs
That their negotiations all must slack
Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done
In most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have
What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
Withal, bring word if Hector will to-morrow
Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.
Dio. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.

[Exeunt DIOMEDES and CALCHAS.]

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, before then tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands i' the entrance of his tent:—

Please it our general to pass strangely by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:
I will come last. 'Tis like he'll question me
Why such unplausible eyes are bent on him:
If so, I have derision med'cinable,
To use between your strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink:
It may do good: pride hath no other glass
To show itself but pride; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.
Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on

A form of strangeness as we pass along;—
So do each lord; and either greet him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him
more

Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me? [Troy.]

You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst
Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us? [general?]

Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agam. The better.

[Exeunt AGAMEMNON and NESTOR]

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How do you? how do you? [Exit.]

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus?

Achil. Good-morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good-morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. [Exit.]

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles? [to bend,]

Patr. They pass by strangely: they were us'd
To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
To come as humbly as they us'd to creep
To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late?

'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,

Must fall out with men too. What the declin'd is,

He shall as soon read in the eyes of others
As feel on his own fall: for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mealy wings but to the summer;
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honour; but honour for those honours
That are without him, as place, riches, and favour,

Prizes of accident as oft as merit:
Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends; I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess [out
Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses:
I'll interrupt his reading.—
How now, Ulysses!

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son!

Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here
Writes me, That man,—how dearly ever parted,
How much in having, or without or in,—
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection;
As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they retort that heat again
To the first giver.

Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses.
The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
To others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself,—
That most pure spirit of sense,—behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd:
Salutes each other with each other's form:
For speculation turns not to itself
Till it hath travell'd, and is mirror'd there Where it may see itself. This is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position,—
It is familiar,—but at the author's drift;
Who, in his circumstance, expressly proves
That no man is the lord of anything,—
Though in and of him there be much consisting,— Till he communicates his parts to others;
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they're extended; who, like an arch, reverberates

The voice again; or, like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in
this;

And apprehended here immediately
The unknown Ajax.
Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse;
That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are

Most abject in regard and dear in use!
What things again most dear in the esteem
And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow
An act that very chance doth throw upon him,
Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
While some men leave to do!
How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,

While pride is fasting in his wantonness!
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I do believe it; for they pass'd by me
As musers do by beggars,—neither gave to me
Good word nor look. What, are my deeds forgot? [back,

Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,
A great-siz'd monster of ingratitude:
Those scraps are good deeds past: which are devour'd

As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honour bright: to have done is to hang
Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail [way;
In monumental mockery. Take the instant
For honour travels in a strait so narrow [path;
Where one but goes abreast: keep, then, the
For emulation hath a thousand sons
That one by one pursue: if you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by.
And leave you hindmost;

Or, like a gallant horse fall'n in first rank,
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
O'er-run and trampled on: then what they do in present, [yours;
Though less than yours in past, must o'er-top
For time is like a fashionable host, [hand;
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the
And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would
fly,

Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue seek

Remuneration for the thing it was;
For beauty, wit,
High birth, vigour of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time. [kin,—
One touch of nature makes the whole world
That all, with one consent, praise new-born gawds, [past;

Though they are made and moulded of things
And give to dust that is a little gilt [eye
More laud that gilt o'er-dusted. The present
Praises the present object:
Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,
That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax;
Since things in motion sooner catch the eye
Than what not stirs. The cry went once on
thee,

And still it might; and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in thy tent;
Whose glorious deeds but in these fields of late
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods
themselves,

And drove great Mars to faction.

Achil. Of this my privacy
I have strong reasons.

Ulyss. But 'gainst your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroic:
'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.

Achil. Ha! known!

Ulyss. Is that a wonder?

The providence that's in a watchful state
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps;
Keeps place with thought, and almost, like the gods,

Does thoughts unved in their dumb cradles.
There is a mystery—with whom relation
Durst never meddle—in the soul of state;
Which hath an operation more divine
Than breath or pen can give expressure to:
All the commerce that you have had with Troy
As perfectly is ours as yours, my lord;
And better would it fit Achilles much
To throw down Hector than Polyxena:
But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home,
When fame shall in our island sound her trumpet;
And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing,
Great Hector's sister did Achilles win;
But our brave Ajax bravely beat down him.
Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak;
The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break. [Exit.]

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I moved
you.

A woman impudent and mannish grown
Is not more loath'd than an effeminate man
In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this;
They think my little stomach to the war,
And your great love to me, restrains you thus:
Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton
Cupid

Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

Patr. Ay, and perhaps receive much honour by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake;
My fame is shrewdly gor'd.

Patr. O, then, beware;
Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves;

Omission to do what is necessary
Seals a commission to a blank of danger;
And danger, like an ague, subtly taints
Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet

Patroclus:

I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
To invite the Trojan lords, after the combat,
To see us here unarm'd: I have a woman's longing,

An appetite that I am sick withal,
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;
To talk with him, and to behold his visage,
Even to my full of view. A labour sav'd!

Enter THERSITES.

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field asking for himself.

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector; and is so prophetically proud of an her-oical cudgelling that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock,—a stride and a stand: ruminates like an hostess that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say, There were wit in this head, an 'twould out; and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for if Hector break not his neck i' the combat, he'll break it himself in vain-glory. He knows not me. I said Good-morrow, Ajax; and he replies, Thanks, Agamemnon.

What think you of this man, that takes me for the general? He is grown a very land fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him,
Thersites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody;
he professes not answering: speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in's arms. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarm'd to my tent; and to procure safe conduct for his person of the magnanimous and most illustrious six-or-seven-times-honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax!

Ther. Hum!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent,—

Ther. Hum!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon!

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other: howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?
Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains I know not: but, I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubl'd, like a fountain stirr'd;

And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt ACHIL. and PATROCLUS.]

Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—TROY. A Street

Enter, at one side, ÆNEAS, and Servant with a torch; at the other, PARIS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTENOR, DIOMEDES, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who's that there?

Dei. 'Tis the Lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lie long [business
As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly
Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dio. That's my mind too.—Good-morrow,
Lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas,—take his Witness the process of your speech, wherein
You told how Diomed, a whole week by days,
Did haunt you in the field.

Æne. Health to you, valiant sir,
During all question of the gentle fruce;
But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance
As heart can think or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.
Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long,
health;

But when contention and occasion meet,
By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life
With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly [ness,

With his face backward.—In humane gentle-
Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises' life,
Welcome indeed! By Venus' hand I swear
No man alive can love, in such a sort,
The thing he means to kill, more excellently.

Dio. We sympathise.—Jove, let Æneas live
If to my sword his fate be not the glory,
A thousand complete courses of the sun!
But, in mine emulous honour, let him die,
With every joint a wound, and that to-morrow!

Æne. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most spiteful gentle greet-
ing,
The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—
What business, lord, so early?

Æne. I was sent for to the king; but why,
I know not. [this Greek

Par. His purpose meets you: 'twas to bring
To Calchas' house; and there to render him,
For the enfréed Antenor, the fair Cressid.
Let's have your company; or, if you please,
Haste there before us: I constantly do think,—
Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge,—

My brother Troilus lodges there to-night:
Rouse him, and give him note of our approach,
With the whole quality wherefore; I fear
We shall be much unwelcome.

Æne. That I assure you:
Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece
Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help;
The bitter disposition of the time
Will have it so. On, lord; we'll follow you.

Æne. Good-morrow, all.

[Exit, with Servant.

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed,—faith,
tell me true,

Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship,—
Who, in your thoughts, merits fair Helen best, Myself or Menelaus?

Dio. Both alike:

He merits well to have her, that doth seek her,—
Not making any scruple of her soileure,—
With such a hell of pain and world of charge;
And you as well to keep her, that defend her,—
Not palating the taste of her dishonour,—
With such a costly loss of wealth and friends:
He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece;
You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors:

Both merits pois'd, each weighs nor less nor
more;

But he as he, each heavier for a whore.

Par. You are too bitter to your country-
woman.

Dio. She's bitter to her country. Hear me,
Paris.—

For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple
Of her contaminated carrion weight [speak,
A Trojan hath been slain: since she could
She hath not given so many good words breath
As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy:
But we in silence hold this virtue well.—

We'll not commend what we intend to sell.

Here lies our way.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—TROY. Court of PANDARUS' House.Enter TROILUS and CRESSIDA.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold. [uncle down;

Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine
He shall unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;

To bed, to bed: sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses
As infants empty of all thought!

Cres. Good-morrow, then.

Tro. I pry'thee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you aweary of me?

Tro. O Cressid! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, hath rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights she stays

As tediously as hell; but flies the grasps of love
With wings more momentary-swift than thought.
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Pry'thee, tarry;—

You men will never tarry.—

O foolish Cressid!—I might have still held off,
And then you would have tarried. Hark!
there's one up. [here?

Pan. [Within.] What, 's all the doors open

Tro. It is your uncle. [mocking:

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be
I shall have such a life!—

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

[ACT IV.]

Enter PANDARUS.

Pan. How now, how now? how go maiden-heads?
—Here you maid! where's my cousin Cressid?
Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle!

You bring me to do, and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what?—let her say what: what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come, beshrew your heart! you'll ne'er be good,
Nor suffer others.

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! ah, poor capocchia! hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him!

Cres. Did not I tell you?—would he were knock'd i' the head!—[Knocking.]
Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—
My lord, come you again into my chamber:
You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.
Tro. Ha! ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd, I think of no such thing.—[Knocking.]
How earnestly they knock!—Pray you, come in: I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exit TROILUS and CRESSIDA]
Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now? what's the matter?

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. Good-morrow, lord, good-morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Æneas? By my troth, I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Æne. Is not Prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Æne. Come, he is here, my lord; do not deny him:

It doth import him much to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know, I'll be sworn.—For my own part, I came in late. What should he do here?

Æne. Who!—nay, then:—come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are ware: you'll be so true to him to be false to him: do not you know of him, but yet go fetch him hither; go.

As PANDARUS is going out, re-enter TROILUS

Tro. How now! what's the matter?

Æne. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,

My matter is so rash. There is at hand Paris your brother, and Deiphobus, The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith, Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour, We must give up to Diomedes' hand The Lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Æne. By Priam, and the general state of Troy:

They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!

I will go meet them:—and, my lord Æneas, We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Æne. Good, good, my lord; the secrets of nature

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exit TROILUS and ÆNEAS.]

Pan. Is't possible? no sooner got but lost? The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad: a plague upon Antenor! I would they had broke's neck!

Re-enter CRESSIDA.

Cres. How now! what is the matter? who was here?

Pan. Ah, ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord? gone! tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?

Pan. Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods! what's the matter?

Pan. Pr'ythee, get thee in. Would thou hadst ne'er been born? I knew thou wouldst be his death!—O, poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you, on my knees I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus: 'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.

Cres. O you immortal gods!—I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father;

I know no touch of consanguinity;
No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me
As the sweet Troilus—O you gods divine!
Make Cressid's name the very crown of falsehood

If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and Do to this body what extremes you can;
But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very centre of the earth,
Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in and weep.—

Pan. Do, do.

Cres. Tear my bright hair, and scratch my praised cheeks;

Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my
With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—TROY. Street before PANDARUS' House.

Enter PARIS, TROILUS, ÆNEAS, DEIPHOBUS, ANTEHOR, and DIOMEDES.

Par. It is great morning; and the hour prefix'd

Of her delivery to this valiant Greek
Comes fast upon:—good my brother Troilus,
Tell you the lady what she is to do,
And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk in to her house;
I'll bring her to the Grecian presently:

And to his hand when I deliver her,
Think it an altar; and thy brother Troilus
A priest, there offering to it his own heart.

[Exit.]

Par. I know what 'tis to love;
And would, as I shall pity, I could help!—
Please you walk in, my lords. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—TROY. A Room in PANDARUS' House.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?
The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste,
And violenteth in a sense as strong [it?
As that which causeth it: how can I moderate
If I could temperize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment could I give my grief:
My love admits no qualifying dross;
No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes.

Enter TROILUS.

Ah, sweet ducks!

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus! [Embracing him.

Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too. O heart, as the goodly saying is,—

O heart, heavy heart,
Why sigh'st thou without breaking?

where he answers again,

Because thou canst not ease thy smart
By silence nor by speaking.

There was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it.—How now, lambs! [purity

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a
That the bless'd gods,—as angry with my fancy,
More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from
me.

Cres. Have the gods envy?

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents
Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows
Even in the burth of our own lab'ring breath:
We too, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
With the rude brevity and discharge of one.
Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how:
As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to
them,

He fumbles up into a loose adieu;
And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,
Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Aene. [Within.] My lord, is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd. Some say the Genius so

Cries, Come! to him that instantly must die.—
Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root? [Exit.

Cres. I must, then, to the Grecians?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woeful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!

When shall we see again?

Tro. Hear me, my love. Be thou but true of heart,— [is this?

Cres. I true! how now! what wicked deem
Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,
For it is parting from us:

I speak not be thou true, as fearing thee;
For I will throw my glove to death himself
That there's no maculation in thy heart:
But be thou true, say I, to fashion in
My sequent protestation; be thou true,
And I will see thee. [dangers

Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to
As infinite as imminent! but I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger.
Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true, again!

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love:

The Grecian youths are full of quality;
They're loving, well compos'd, with gifts of nature flowing,

And swelling o'er with arts and exercise:
How novelty may move, and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy,—
Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin,—
Makes me afear'd.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain, then!

In this I do not call your faith in question
So mainly as my merit; I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavoit, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:

But I can tell, that in each grace of these
There lurks a still and dumb-discursive devil
That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.

But something may be done that we will not:
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,
When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeful potency.

Aene. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
And bring Aeneas and the Grecian with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:
While others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper
crowns,

With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
Fear not my truth: the moral of my wit
Is—plain and true; there's all the reach of it.

Enter ÆNEAS, PARIS, ANTEOR, DEIPHOBUS and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand;
And by the way possess thee what she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Ilium.

Dio. Fair Lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:

The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,

To shame the zeal of my petition to thee
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O, be not mov'd, Prince Troilus:
Let me be privileg'd by my place and message
To be a speaker free; when I am hence
I'll answer to my lust; and know you, lord,
I'll nothing do on charge: to her own worth
She shall be priz'd; but that you say, be't so,
I'll speak it in my spirit and honour, no.

Tro. Come, to the port.—I'll tell thee,
Diomed, [head.—
This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk,
To our own selves bend me our needful talk.

[Exeunt TRO., CRES., and DIOMEDES
[Trumpet within.]

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning?
The prince must think me tardy and remiss,
That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault. Come, come, to field with him.

Dio. Let us make ready straight.

Æne. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity
Let us address to tend on Hector's heels:
The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
On his fair worth and single chivalry.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—THE GRECIAN CAMP. Lists set out.

Enter AJAX, armed; AGAMEMNON, ACHILLES, PATROCLUS, MENELAUS, ULYSSES, NESTOR
and others.

Agam. Here art thou in appointment fresh and fair,

Anticipating time. With starting courage
Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air
May pierce the head of the great combatant,
And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse,
Now crack thy lungs and split thy brazen pipe:
Blow, villain, till thy spher'd bias cheek
Out-swell the colic of puff'd Aquilon:

Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout
blood;

Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.]

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Achil, 'Tis but early day.

Agam. Is not you Diomed, with Calchas'
daughter?

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the toe: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter DIOMEDES, with CRESSIDA.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she?

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular;

'Twere better she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin.—

So much for Nestor. [fair lady.]

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips,

Achilles bids you welcome.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing

now;

For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment,

And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns!

For which we lose our heads to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—this,

mine;

Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!

Patr. Paris and I kiss evermore for him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir.—Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive?

Patr. Both take and give.

Cres. I'll make my match to live,

The kiss you take is better than you give;

Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one. [none.]

Cres. You're an odd man; give even or give

Men. An odd man, lady? every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true,

That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You filip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.—

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

Cres. Why, beg then, do.

Ulyss. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me

When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I am your debtor, claim it when 'tis

due. [you.]

Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of Dio. Lady, a word.—I'll bring you to your father.

[DIOMEDES leads out CRESSIDA.]

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulyss. Fie, fie upon her!

There's language in her eye, her cheeks, her lip,

Nay, her foot speaks: her wanton spirits look out

At every joint and motive of her body.

O, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give a coasting welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader! set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity,
And daughters of the game. [Trumpet within.]

All. The Trojans' trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter HECTOR, armed; ÆNEAS, TROILUS, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Æne. Hail, all you state of Greece! what shall be done [purpose]
To him that victory commands? Or do you
A victor shall be known? will you the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other: or shall be divided
By any voice or order of the field?
Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Æne. He cares not; he'll obey conditions.

Achil. 'Tis done like Hector; but securely done,

A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
The knight oppos'd.

Æne. If not Achilles, sir,

What is your name?

Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.

Æne. Therefore Achilles. But, whate'er, know this:—

In the extremity of great and little
Valour and pride excel themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all,
The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
And that which looks like pride is courtesy.
This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:
In love whereof, half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek [Greek.]

This blended knight, half Trojan and half

Achil. A maiden battle then?—O, I perceive you.

Re-enter DIOMEDES.

Agam. Here is Sir Diomed.—Go, gentle knight,

Stand by our Ajax; as you and Lord Æneas
Consent upon the order of their fight
So be it; either to the uttermost,
Or else a breath: the combatants being kin
Half stunts their strife before their strokes begin.

[AJAX and HECTOR enter the lists.]

Ulyss. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so heavy? [knight;]

Ulyss. The youngest son of Priam, a true
Not yet mature, yet matchless: firm of word;
Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon
calm'd:

His heart and hand both open and both free;
For what he has he gives, what thinks he shows;

A A

Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impure thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindictive than jealous love:
They call him Troilus; and on him erect
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.
Thus says Æneas; one that knows the youth
Even to his inches, and, with private soul,
Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. HECTOR and AJAX fight.]

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!

Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;

Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there, Ajax!

Dio. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.]

Æne. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why, then will I no more:—

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain;
Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so,
That thou could'st say This hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood
Runs in the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my father's; by Jove multipotent, Thou shouldst not bear from me a Greekish member

Wherein my sword had not impressure made
Of our rank feud: but the just gods gainsay
That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword
Be drain'd! Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:
Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:

Thou art too gentle and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable,—

On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st
Oyes

Cries, This is he,—could promise to himself
A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Æne. There is expectance here from both the sides

What further you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it;

The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,—
As seld' I have the chance,—I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great
Achilles

Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector,
Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to me:

And signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part; [cousin;] Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my
I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us
here.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by name;

But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy;
But that's no welcome: understand more clear,
What's past and what's to come is strew'd with husks

And formless ruin of oblivion;
But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Aga-memnon. [to you.]

Agam. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less
[To TROILUS.]

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting;—

You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.
Hect. Who must we answer?

Æne. The noble Menelaus.

Hect. O you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!

Mock not, that I affect the untraded oath;
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus'
glove:

She's well, but bade me not commend her to
you. [thence.]

Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly

Hect. O, pardon; I offend. [off.]

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee
Labouring for destiny, make cruel way Through ranks of Greekish youth; and I have seen thee,

As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Despising many forfeits and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' the air,

Not letting it decline on the declin'd,
That I have said to some my standers-by,
Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!

And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath, [in]

When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee
Like an Olympian wrestling; this have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire,

And once fought with him: he was a soldier
good;

But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.

Æne. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,

That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with
time:—

Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.

Nest. I would my arms could match thee in contention,

As they contend with thee in courtesy.

Hect. I would they could.

Nest. Ha! [morrow:—]

By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time.

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I know your favour, Lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed

In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy. [ensue:]

Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that pertly front your town, Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,

Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you:
There they stand yet; and modestly I think
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome:
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses,
thou!—

Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee;
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.

Hect. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles. [thence.]

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second
time,

As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. O, like a book of sport thou'lt read me o'er;

But there's more in me than thou understand'st
Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?

Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body [there,

Shall I destroy him? whither there, or there, or
That I may give the local wound a name,
And make distinct the very breach whereout
Hector's great spirit flew: answer me, heavens!

Hect. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud man,

To answer such a question: stand again:
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly.

As to prenominate in nice conjecture
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee
well;

For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there;
But, by the forge that stithied Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee everywhere, yea, o'er and o'er.—

You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag,
His insolence draws folly from my lips;

But I'll endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I never,—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee, cousin:—
And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till accident or purpose bring you to't:

You may have every day enough of Hector,
If you have stomach; the general state, I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field:
We have had pelted wars since you refus'd
The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector?
To-morrow do I meet thee, fell as death;
To-night all friends.

Hect. Thy hand upon that match.

Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent;

There in the full convive we: afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat him.—
Beat loud the tabourines, let the trumpets blow,
That this great soldier may his welcome know.

[Exeunt all but TRO. and ULYSSES.]

Tro. My Lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,
In what place of the field doth Calchas keep?

Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus:

There Diomed doth feast with him to-night;
Who neither looks upon the heaven nor earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the fair Cressid.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,
After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither?

Ulyss. You shall command me, sir.
As gentle tell me, of what honour was
This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there
That wails her absence?

Tro. O, sir, to such as boasting show their scars
A mock is due. Will you walk on my lord?
She was below'd, she lov'd; she is, and doth:
But, still, sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—THE GRECIAN CAMP. Before
ACHILLES' Tent.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.—
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter THERSITES.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy!
Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol of idiot worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, fragment?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now? [wound.]

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's Patr. Well said Adversity! and what need these tricks?

Ther. Pr'ythee, be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk; thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! what's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now, the rotten diseases of the south, the guts griping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads o' gravel i' the back, lethargies, cold palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume, sciaticas, limekilns i' the palm, incurable bone-ache, and the rivelled fee-simple of the letter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!

Patr. Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt; you whore-son indistinguishable cur, no.

Ther. No! why art thou, then, exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleeve-silk, thou green saracen flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou? Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such water-flies,—diminutives of nature!

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Finch egg!

[quite]
Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted
From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.
Here is a letter from Queen Hecuba;

A token from her daughter, my fair love;
Both taxing me and gaging me to keep
An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:

Fall, Greeks; fall, fame; honour; or go or stay;
My major vow lies here, this I'll obey.—

Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent;
This night in banqueting must all be spent.—
Away, Patroclus!

[Exeunt ACHIL. and PATR.]
Ther. With too much blood and too little brain these two may run mad; but, if with too much brain and too little blood they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon,—an honest fellow enough, and one that loves quails; but he has not so much brain as ear-wax: and the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull,—the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckolds; a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form, but that he is, should wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing; he is both ass and ox: to an ox, were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew, a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe, I would not care; but to be Menelaus,—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites; for I care not to be the louse of a lazar, so I were not Menelaus.—Hoy-day! spirits and fires!

Enter HECTOR, TROILUS, AJAX, AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, MENELAUS, and DIOMEDES, with lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No, yonder 'tis;

There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulyss. Here comes himself to guide you.

Re-enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all. [good night:]

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid
Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and good night to the Greeks' general.

Men. Good-night, my lord.

Hect. Good-night, sweet Lord Menelaus.
Ther. Sweet draught: sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good-night. [or tarry.
 And welcome, both at once, to those that go Agam. Good-night.

[Exeunt AGAM. and MEN.]

Achil. Old Nestor tarries; and you too,
 Diomed,
 Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business, [Hector.

The tide whereof is now.—Good-night, great Hect. Give me your hand. [tent.

Ulyss. Follow his torch; he goes to Calchas'
 I'll keep you company. [Aside to TROILUS.

Tro. Sweet sir, you honour me.
Hect. And so good-night.

[Exit Dio.; ULYSS. and TRO. following.
Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exeunt ACHIL., HECT., AJAX, and NEST.
Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he lears than I will a serpent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth and promise, like Brabblers the hound; but when he performs astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious, there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector than not to dog him: they say he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after.—Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets! [Exit.

SCENE II.—THE GRECIAN CAMP. Before CALCHAS' Tent.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. What, are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within.] She comes to you.

*Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at a distance;
 after them THERSITES.*

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter CRESSIDA.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.

Dio. How now, my charge!

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian!—Hark, a word with you. [Whispers.

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff; she's noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember? yes.

Dio. Nay, but do, then;

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List! [to folly

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more

Ther. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cres. I'll tell you what,—

Dio. Pho! pho! come, tell a pin: you are forsworn. [have me do?

Cres. In faith, I cannot: what would you
Ther. A juggling trick, to be secretly open.

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow
 on me?

Cres. I pr'ythee, do not hold me to mine oath:
 Bid me do anything but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good-night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulyss. How now, Trojan!

Cres. Diomed,—

Dio. No, no, good-night: I'll be your fool
 no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness! [I pray you,

Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince; let us depart,
 Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself

To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Ulyss. Nay, good my lord, go off:
 You flow to great destruction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pray thee, stay.

Ulyss. You have not patience; come.

Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell and all hell's torments,

I will not speak a word.

Dio. And so, good-night.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Ulyss. Why, how now, lord?

Tro. By Jove,

I will be patient.

Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!

Dio. Pho, pho! adieu; you palter.

Cres. In faith, I do not: come hither once again. [will you go?

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something:

You will break out.

Tro. She strokes his cheek!

Ulyss. Come, come.

Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a
 word:

There is between my will and all offences

A guard of patience:—stay a little while.

Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump and potato finger, tickles these together!

Fry, lechery, fry!

Dio. But will you, then?

Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.

Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.

Ulyss. You have sworn patience.

Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord:

I will not be myself, nor have cognition

Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter CRESSIDA.

Ther. Now the pledge; now, now, now!

Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

Tro. O, beauty! where's thy faith?

Ulyss. My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.

Cres. You look upon that sleeve; behold it
 well.—

He lov'd me—O false wench!—Give't me again.

Dio. Whose was't?

Cres. It is no matter, now I have 't again.

I will not meet with you to-morrow night:

I pr'ythee, Diomed, visit me no more. [stone.

Ther. Now she sharpens:—Well said, Whet-

Dio. I shall have it.

Cres. What, this?

Dio. Ay, that.

Cres. O, all you gods?—O pretty, pretty pledge!

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed

Of thee and me; and sighs, and takes my glove,

And gives memorial dainty kisses to it,

As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me;

He that takes that doth take my heart withal.

Dio. I had your heart before, this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; faith, you shall not;

I'll give you something else.

Dio. I will have this: whose was it?

Cres. It is no matter.

Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.

Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you will.

But, now you have it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it?

Cres. By all Diana's waiting women yond,

And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm;

And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.

Tro. Wert thou the devil, and wor'st it on thy horn.

It should be challeng'd.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—and yet it is not;

I will not keep my word.

Dio. Why, then, farewell;

Thou never shalt mock Diomed again. [word

Cres. You shall not go:—one cannot speak a But it straight starts you.

Dio. I do not like this fooling.

Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you pleases me best.

Dio. What, shall I come? the hour?

Cres. Ay, come:—O Jove!

Do come:—I shall be plagu'd.

Dio. Farewell till then.

Cres. Good-night: I pr'ythee, come. [Exit DIOMEDES.

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee;

But with my heart the other eye doth see.

Ah, poor our sex! this fault in us I find,

The error of our eye directs our mind:

What error leads must err; O, then conclude,

Minds sway'd by eyes are full of turpitude. [Exit.

Ther. A proof of strength she could not publish more,

Unless she said, My mind is now turn'd whore.

Ulyss. All's done, my lord.

Tro. It is.

Ulyss. Why stay we, then?

Tro. To make a recordation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke.

But if I tell how these two did co-act,

Shall I not lie in publishing a truth?

Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,

An asperance so obstinately strong,

That doth invert the attest of eyes and ears;

As if those organs had deceptive functions
Created only to calumniate.

Was Cressid here?

Ulyss. I cannot conjure, Trojan.

Tro. She was not, sure.

Ulyss. Most sure she was.

Tro. Why, my negation hath no taste of madness. [but now.

Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here

Tro. Let it not be believ'd for womanhood!

Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage

To stubborn critics,—apt, without a theme,

For depravation,—to square the general sex

By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were
she. [eyes!

Ther. Will he swagger himself out on's own

Tro. This she? no; this is Diomed's Cressida

If beauty have a soul, this is not she;

If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimonies,

If sanctimony be the gods' delight,

If there be rule in unty itself,

This is not she. O madness of discourse,

That cause sets up with and against itself!

Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt

Without perdition, and loss assume all reason

Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid!

Within my soul there doth conduce a fight

Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparate

Divides more wider than the sky and earth;

And yet the spacious breadth of this division

Admits no orifer for a point, as subtle

As Ariadne's broken woof, to enter.

Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates;

Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:

Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;

The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd;

And with another note, five-finger-tied,

The fractions of her faith, ors of her love,

The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy relics

Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be but half-
attach'd

With that which here his passion doth express?

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged
well

In characters as red as Mars his heart [fancy

Inflam'd with Venus: never did young man

With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek; as much as I do Cressid love,

So much by weight hate I her Diomed:

That sleeve is mine that he'll bear on his helm;

Were it a casque compos'd by Vulcan's skill

My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout

Which shipmen do the hurricano call,

Constrin'd in mass by the almighty sun,

Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear

In his descent, than shall my prompted sword

Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his concupy.

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false,
false!

Let all untruths stand by thy stained name,

And they'll seem glorious.

Ulyss. O, contain yourself:

Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. I have been seeking you this hour,
my lord:

Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy;
Ajax, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince.—My courteous lord, adieu.—

Farewell, revolted fair!—and, Diomed,
Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head!

Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exit TRO., ÆNEAS, and ULYSS.]

Ther. Would I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would croak like a raven; I would bode, I would bode. Patroclus will give me anything for the intelligence of this whore:
the parrot will not do more for an almond than he for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery; still wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion: a burning devil take them! [Exit.]

SCENE III.—TROY. Before PRIAM'S Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd

To stop his ears against admonishment?
Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in:
By all the everlasting gods, I'll go!

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.

Hect. No more, I say.

Enter CASSANDRA.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent.

Consort with me in loud and dear petition,
Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd
Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O, 'tis true.

Hect. Hol bid my trumpet sound!
Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother. [me swear.]

Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows:

They are polluted offerings, more abhorr'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O, be persuaded! do not count it holy
To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,
For we would give much, to use violent thefts,
And rob in the behalf of charity. [vows;]

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the
But vows to every purpose must not hold:
Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;
Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds dear; but the dear man
Holds honour far more precious dear than life.

Enter TROILUS.

How now, young man! mean'st thou to fight
to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.
[Exit CASSANDRA.]

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth;

I am to-day i'the vein of chivalry:

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.

Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,
I'll stand to-day for thee, and me, and Troy,

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it. [fall,]

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians
Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,
You bid them rise and live.

Hect. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by Heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now! how now!

Tro. For the love of all the gods,
Let's leave the hermit pity with our mothers;
And when we have our armours buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;
Spur them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

Hect. Fie, savage, fie!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight
to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire;

Not Pnamus and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears;

Nor you, my brother, with your true sword
drawn,

Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

Re-enter CASSANDRA, with PRIAM.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him
fast:

He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning and all Troy on thee,
Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back:
Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions;

Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt,
To tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore, come back.

Hect. Aeneas is a-field;
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valour, to appear
This morning to them.

Pri. Ay, but thou shalt not go.

Hect. I must not break my faith.

You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice
Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yield not to him!

And. Do not, dear father.

Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you:
Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit ANDROMACHE.]

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl

Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O, farewell, dear Hector!

Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!

Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents!
Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out!
How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth!

Behold, destruction, frenzy, and amazement,
Like witless antics, one another meet,
And all cry, Hector! Hector's dead! O
Hector!

Tro. Away! away! [my leave:

Cas. Farewell:—yet, soft!—Hector I take
Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive.

Hect. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim: [fight;

Go in, and cheer the town: we'll forth, and Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night. [about thee!

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand

[Exeunt severally PRIAM and HECTOR.
Alarums.

Tro. They are at it, hark! Proud Diomed, believe,
I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As TROILUS is going out, enter from the other side PANDARUS.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now? [girl.

Pan. Here's a letter come from yond poor

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whoreson phtisick, a whoreson rascally phtisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o' these days: and I have a rheum in mine eyes too;
and such an ache in my bones, that unless a man were curs'd I cannot tell what to think on't.—What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart;

The effect doth operate another way.—

[Tearing the letter.
Go, wind, to wind, there turn and change together.—

My love with words and errors still she feeds;
But edifies another with her deeds.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE IV.—Plains between Troy and the Grecian Camp.

Alarums: excursions. Enter THERSITES.

Ther. Now they are clapper-chawing one another; I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy dotting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm: I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, of a sleeve-less errand. O' the t'other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals,—that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor, and that same dog-fox, Ulysses,—is not proved worth a blackberry:—they set me up, in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles: and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm to-day;

whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion.
Soft! here come sleeve, and t'other.

Enter DIOMEDES, TROILUS following.

Tro. Fly not; for shouldst thou take the river Styx
I would swim after.

Dio. Thou dost miscall retire:
I do not fly; but advantageous care

Withdrew me from the odds of multitude:
Have at thee!

Ther. Hold thy whore, Grecian! now for thy whore, Trojan!—now the sleeve, now the sleeve! [Exeunt TRO. and DIO., fighting.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. What art thou, Greek! art thou for Hector's match?
Art thou of blood and honour?

Ther. No, no,—I am a rascal; a scurvy railing knave; a very filthy rogue.

Hect. I do believe thee;—live [Exit.

Ther. God-a-mercy, that thou wilt believe me; but a plague break thy neck for frightening me!—What's become of the wenching rogues?
I think they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle. Yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Another part of the Plains.

Enter DIOMEDES and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus'
horse;

Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid:
Fellow, commend my service to her beauty;
Tell her I have chastis'd the amorous Trojan,
And am her knight by proof.

Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit.

Enter AGAMEMNON.

Agan. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamus
Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner,
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,
Upon the pashed corpses of the kings
Epistrophus and Cediüs: Polixenes is slain;
Amphimachus and Thoas deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta'en, or slain; and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary
Appals our numbers:—haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcement, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles;
And bid the snail-pac'd Ajax arm for shame.—
There is a thousand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathea his horse,
And there lacks work; anon he's there afoot,
And there they fly or die, like scaled skulls
Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him like the mower's swath:
Here, there, and everywhere he leaves and takes;
Dexterity so obeying appetite
That what he will he does; and does so much
That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles
Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance:
Patroclus' wounds have rous'd his drowsy blood,
Together with his mangl'd Myrmidons,
That noiseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd,
come to him,
Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd and at it,
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day
Mad and fantastic execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himself
With such a careless force and forceless care
As if that luck, in very spite of cunning,
Bade him win all.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! [Exit.
Dio. Ay, there, there.
Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector?
Come, come, thou boy-queller, show thy face;
Know what it is to meet Achilles angry:—
Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter AJAX.

Ajax. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Troilus, I say! where's Troilus?
Ajax. What wouldst thou?
Dio. I would correct him.
Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldst have my office [Troilus!
Ere that correction.—Troilus, I say! what,

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. O traitor Diomed!—turn thy false face,
thou traitor,
And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse!
Dio. Ha! art thou there?
Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand,
Diomed.
Dio. He is my prize. I will not look upon.
Tro. Come, both, you cogging Greeks; have at you both. [Exeunt fighting.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee, ha! have at thee,
Hector!
Hect. Pause, if thou wilt. [Trojan:
Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud
Be happy that my arms are out of use:

My rest and negligence befriended thee now,
But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit.
Hect. Fare thee well:
I would have been much more a fresher man
Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother!

Re-enter TROILUS.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Aeneas: shall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him; I'll be ta'en too,
Or bring him off:—fate, hear me what I say!
I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.

Enter one in sumptuous armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark:—
No? wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all. [abide?
But I'll be master of it.—Wilt thou not, beast,
Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter ACHILLES, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myr-midons;
Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel:
Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath:
And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about;
In fellest manner execute your aims.
Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:—
It is decreed Hector the great must die. [Exeunt.

*Enter MENELAUS and PARIS, fighting; then
THERSITES*

Ther. The cuckold and the cuckold-maker are at it. Now, bull! now, dog! 'Loo, Paris,
'loo! now my double-henned sparrow! 'loo,
Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game:—ware horns, ho! [Exeunt PARIS and MENELAUS.

Enter MARGARELON.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.
Ther. What art thou?
Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.
Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards:
I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed,
bastard in mind, bastard in valour, in everything illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore he tempts judgment:
farewell, bastard. [Exit.
Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exit.

SCENE VIII.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Most putrified core, so fair without,
Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.
Now is my day's work done: I'll take good
breath:

Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!

[Puts off his helmet and hangs his shield behind him.]

Enter ACHILLES and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;

How ugly night comes breathing at his heels; Even with the veil and dark'ning of the sun, To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd; forego this vantage, Greek. [I seek.]

Achil. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man [HECTOR falls.]

So, Ilion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down! Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.— On, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain, Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

[A retreat sounded.]

Hark! a retire upon our Grecian part. [my lord.]

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like,

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,

And, stickler-like, the armies separate.

My half-suppl'd sword, that frankly would have fed, [bed.—]

Pleas'd with this dainty bait, thus goes to [Sheathes his sword.]

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;

Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Another Part of the Plains.

Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR

DIOMEDES, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that?

Nest. Prace, drums! [Achilles!]

[Within.] Achilles! Achilles! Hector's slain,

Dio. The bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be;

Great Hector was a man as good as he. [sent]

Agam. March patiently along.—Let one be To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—

If in his death the gods have us befriended; Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended. [Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE X.—Another Part of the Plains

Enter ÆNEAS and Trojans.

Æne. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field:

Never go home; here starve we out the night.

Enter TROILUS.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector!—the gods forbid!

Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail, field.—

In beastly sort, dragg'd, through the shameful

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed! [Troy!]

Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy. And linger not our sure destructions on!

Æne. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.

Tro. You understand me not that tell me so:

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death; But dare all imminence that gods and men Address their dangers in. Hector is gone: Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?

Let him that will a screech-owl aye be call'd Go in to Troy, and say there, Hector's dead:

There is a word will Priam turn to stone;

Make wells and Niobes of the maids and wives,

Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word,

Scare Troy out of itself. But, march away:

Hector is dead; there is no more to say.

Stay yet.—You vile abominable tents,

Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plains,

Let Titan rise as early as he dare,

I'll through and through you!—And, thou great-siz'd coward,

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates:

I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,

That mouldeth goblins swift as frenzy's thoughts.—

Strike a free march to Troy!—with comfort go:

Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

[Exeunt ÆNEAS and Trojans.]

As TROILUS is going out, enter, from the other side, PANDARUS.

Pan. But hear you, hear you!

Tro. Hence, broker lackey! ignomy and shame pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name! [Exit.]

Pan. A goodly medicine for my aching bones!—O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set at work, and how ill requited! Why should our endeavour be so loved, and the performance so loathed? what verse for it? what instance for it?—Let me see:—

Full merrily the humble-bee doth sing
Till he hath lost his honey and his sting;
And being once subdued in armed tail,
Sweet honey and sweet notes together fail—

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.

As many as be here of pander's hall,
Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall;
Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans.
Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.
Brethren and sisters of the old-door trade,
Some two months hence my will shall here be made:

It should be now, but that my fear is this,—
Some galled goose of Winchester would hiss:
Till then I'll swear, and seek about for eases;
And, at that time, bequeath you my diseases.

[Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—ATHENS. A Hall in TIMON'S House.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several doors.

Poet. Good-day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you are well.

Poet. I have not seen you long: how goes the world?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that's well known:

But what particular rarity? what strange,
Which manifold record not matches? See,
Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power
Hath conjur'd to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both; the other's a jeweller.

Mer. O, 'tis a worthy lord!

Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd.

Mer. A most incomparable man; breath'd, as it were,

To an untirable and continue goodness:
He passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here.

Mer. O, pray, let's see't: for the Lord
Timon, sir? [that—

Jew. If he will touch the estimate: but, for Poet. [Reciting to himself.] *When we for recompense have prais'd the vile,

It stains the glory in that happy verse
Which aptly sings the good.*

Mer.

'Tis a good form.

[Looking at the jewel.

Jew. And rich: here is a water, look ye.

Pain. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication

To the great lord.

Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me. Our poesy is as a gum, which oozes From whence 'tis nourish'd: the fire i' the flint Shows not till it be struck; our gentle flame Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies Each bound it chafes. What have you there?

Pain. A picture, sir.—And, when comes your book forth? [sir,—

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, Let's see your piece.

Pain. 'Tis a good piece.

Poet. So 'tis: this comes off well and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable: how this grace Speaks his own standing! what a mental power This eye shoots forth! how big imagination Moves in this lip! to the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life. Here is a touch; is't good?

Poet. I will say of it It tutors nature: artificial strife Lives in these touches. livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators, and pass over.

Pain. How this lord is follow'd!

Poet. The senators of Athens:—happy man!

Pain. Look, more! [of visitors.

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man, Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug

With amplest entertainment: my free drift Halts not particularly, but moves itself In a wide sea of wax: no levell'd malice Infects one comma in the course I hold; But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on, Leaving no track behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you?

Poet. I will unbolt to you.

You see how all conditions, how all minds,— As well of glib and slippery creatures as Of grave and austere quality,—tender down Their services to Lord Timon: his large fortune, Upon his good and gracious nature hanging, Subdues and properties to his love and tendance All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glass-fac'd flatterer

To Apemantus, that few things loves better Than to abhor himself: even he drops down The knee before him, and returns in peace Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill [mount

Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd: the base o' the Is rank'd with all deserts, all kinds of natures, That labour on the bosom of this sphere

To propagate their states: amongst them all, Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd, One do I personate of Lord Timon's frame, Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her; [servants

Whose present grace to present slaves and Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis conceiv'd to scope.

This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, me-thinks,

With one man beckon'd from the rest below, Bowing his head against the steepy mount To climb his happiness, would be well express'd In our condition.

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on. All those which were his fellows but of late,— Some better than his value,—on the moment Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance, Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear, Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him Drink the free air.

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of mood, Spurns down her late below'd, all his dependents,

Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top, Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,

Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:

A thousand moral paintings I can show That shall demonstrate these quick blows of Fortune's

More pregnantly than words. Yet you do well To show Lord Timon that mean eyes have seen The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter TIMON, attended, the Servant of VENTIDIUS talking with him.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt;

His means most short, his creditors most strait: Your honourable letter he desires To those have shut him up; which failing him, Perends his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well; I am not of that feather to shake off [him My friend when he most needs me. I do know A gentleman that well deserves a help,— Which he shall have: I'll pay the debt, and free him.

Ven. Serv. Your lordship ever binds him.

Tim. Commend me to him: I will send his ransom;

And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me:— 'Tis not enough to help the feeble up, But to support him after.—Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour! [Exit.

Enter an Old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius

Tim. I have so: what of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he here, or no?—Lucilius!

LUCILIUS comes forward from among the Attendants.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, Lord Timon, this thy creature, By night frequents my house. I am a man

That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift;
And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd
Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin
else,

On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I pry'thee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself;
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young and apt:
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To LUCILIUS.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord; and she accepts of
it. [mussing]

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be
I call the gods to witness, I will choose
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,
If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents on the present; in future all. [long]

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me
To build his fortune I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter:
What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,

Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise. [may]

Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship: never
That state or fortune fall unto my keeping
Which is not ow'd to you!

[Exeunt LUCILIUS and Old Athenian.]

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship! [anon:]

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me
Go not away.—What have you there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.

The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: these pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work;
And you shall find I like it: wait attendance
Till you hear further from me.

Pain. The gods preserve you!

Tim. Well fare you, gentleman: give me your hand:

We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord! dispraise?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations,
If I should pay you for't as 'tis extoll'd
It would uncleave me quite.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated
As those which sell would give. But you well
know,

Things of light value, differing in the owners,
Are prized by their masters: believe't, dear lord,
You mend the jewel by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd. [common tongue,

Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the

Which all men speak with him. [chid?]

Tim. Look, who comes here: will you be

Enter APEMANTUS.

Jew. We'll bear, with your lordship.

Mer. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good-morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus! [good-morrow;

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy
When thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves honest. [know'st them not.

Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves? thou

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus?

Apem. Thou knowest I do; I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.

Apem. Of nothing so much as that I am not like Timon.

Tim. Whither art going? [brains.]

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's

Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for. [law.]

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the

Tim. How lik'st thou this picture, Apemantus?

Apem. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it?

Apem. He wrought better that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. You are a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation:
what's she, if I be a dog?

Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

Tim. An thou shouldst, thou'dst anger ladies.

Apem. O, they eat lords; so they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Apem. So thou apprehendest it: take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?

Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth?

Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet!

Poet. How now, philosopher!

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd,—he is so.

Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: he that loves to be flattered is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What wouldst do then, Apemantus?

Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.—
Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apem. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!

Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffic's thy god, and thy god confound thee!

Trumpet sounds. Enter a Servant.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Serv. 'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty horse,
All of companionship.

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us.—[Exeunt some Attendants.]
You must needs dine with me:—go not you hence

Till I have thank'd you:—when dinner's done
Show me this piece.—I am joyful of your sights.

Enter ALCIBIADES, with his company.

Most welcome, sir! [They salute.]

Apem. So, so, there!—
Aches contract and starve your supple joints!—
That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knaves, [bred out]
And all this court'sy! The strain of man's Into baboon and monkey.

Alcib. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I feed

Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir!
Ere we depart we'll share a bounteous time
In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.
[Exeunt all but APEMANTUS.]

Enter Two Lords.

1 Lord. What time o' day is't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still. [omitt'st it.]

Apem. The more accursed thou, that still

2 Lord. Thou art going to Lord Timon's feast.

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding:
make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels o' the ass. [Exit.]

1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in

And taste Lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes
The very heart of kindness. [gold,]

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of
Is but his steward: no need but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him

But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance.

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries That ever govern'd man. [Shall we in?]

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes!

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ATHENS. A Room of State in TIMON'S House.

*Hautboys playing loud music. A great banquet served in; FLAVIUS and others attending;
then enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, LUCIUS,
LUCULLUS, SEMPRONIUS, and other Athenian
Senators, with VENTIDIUS, and Attendants.
Then comes, dropping after all, APEMANTUS, discontentedly.*

Ven. Most honour'd Timon, [father's age,
It hath pleas'd the gods to remember my
And call him to long peace.

He is gone happy, and has left me rich:
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To your free heart, I do return those talents, Doubled with thanks and service, from whose
help

I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. O, by no means,
Honest Ventidius; you mistake my love:
I gave it freely ever; and there's none
Can truly say he gives if he receives: [dare]
If our betters play at that game, we must not
To imitate them; faults that are rich are fair.

Ven. A noble spirit!

[They all stand ceremoniously looking on TIMON.]

Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony was but devis'd at first

To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodness, sorry ere 'tis shown;
But where there is true friendship there needs
none.

Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes
Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.]

1 Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.

Apem. Ho, ho, confess'd it! hang'd it, have you not?

Tim. O, Apemantus!—you are welcome.

Apem. No;

You shall not make me welcome.

I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fie, thou art a churl; you have got a humour there

Does not become a man, 'tis much to blame.—

They say, my lords, ira furor brevis est;

But yond man is ever angry.

Go, let him have a table by himself;

For he does neither affect company

Nor is he fit for't indeed.

Apem. Let me stay at thine apparel. Timon:
I come to observe; I give thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian, therefore welcome: I myself would have no power; pry'thee, let my meat make thee silent.

Apem. I scorn thy meat; 'twould choke me,
for I should ne'er flatter thee.—O you gods, what a number of men eat Timon, and he sees
'em not! it grieves me to see
So many dip their meat in one man's blood;
And all the madness is, he cheers them up too.

I wonder men dare trust themselves with men;
Methinks they should invite them without knives;

Good for their meat and safer for their lives.
There's much example for't; the fellow that sits next him now, parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a divided draught, is the readiest man to kill him: 't has been prov'd. If I were a huge man I should fear to drink at meals,
Lest they should spy my windpipe's dangerous notes: [throats.]

Great men should drink with harness on their Tim. My lord, in heart; and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apem. Flow this way! A brave fellow! he keeps his tides well.—Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon.

Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner,
Honest water, which ne'er left man 't the mire:
This and my food are equals; there's no odds:
Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

APEMANTUS' GRACE.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man but myself:
Grant I may never prove so fond,
To trust man on his oath or bond;
Or a harlot for her weeping,
Or a dog that seems a-sleeping;
Or a keeper with my freedom;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em.
Amen. So fall to't!
Rich men sin, and I eat root.

[Eats and drinks.]

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus!

Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field now.

Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my
lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies than a dinner of friends.

Alcib. So they were bleeding-new, my lord, there's no meat like them; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apem. Would all those flatterers were thine enemies, then; that then thou might'st kill em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeals, we should think ourselves forever perfect.

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: how had you been my friends else? why have you that charitable title from thousands, did not you chiefly belong to my heart? I have told more of you to myself than you can with modesty speak in your own behalf; and thus far I confirm you. O you gods, think, I what need we have any friends if we should ne'er have need of 'em? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for 'em; and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits: and what better or properer can we call our own than the riches of our friends?
O, what a precious comfort 'tis to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes! O joy, e'en made away ere it can be born! Mine eyes cannot hold out water, methinks: to forget their faults I drink to you.

Apem. Thou weepest to make them drink,
Timon. [eyes,

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in our
And at that instant like a babe sprung up.

Apem. Ho, ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard. [me much.]

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd
Apem. Much! [Tucket sounded.]

Tim. What means that trumpet?

Enter a Servant.

How now!

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies! what are their wills?

Serv. There comes with them a forerunner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter CUPID.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all
That of his bounties taste!—The five best senses

Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely
To gratulate thy plenteous bosom:

The ear, taste, touch, smell, pleas'd from thy table rise;

They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They welcome all; let 'em have kind admittance.

Music, make their welcome! [Exit CUPID.]

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how ample you're belov'd.

Music. Re-enter CUPID, with a mask of Ladies as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Apem. Hoy-day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way!

They dance! they are mad women.

Like madness is the glory of this life,

As this pomp shows to a little oil and root.

We make ourselves fools to disport ourselves,

And spend our flatteries to drink those men

Upon whose age we void it up again,

With poisonous spite and envy.

Who lives that's not depraved or depraves?

Who dies that bears not one spurn to their graves

Of their friends' gift?

I should fear those that dance before me now

Would one day stamp upon me: 't has been done;

Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table, with much adoring of TIMON; and, to show their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women, a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment,

Which was not half so beautiful and kind;

You have added worth unto't and lustre,

And entertain'd me with mine own device;

I am to thank you for't. [best.

1 Lady. My lord, you take us even at the Apem. Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me. [you;

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends
Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Ladies. Most thankfully, my lord.

[Exeunt CUPID and Ladies.

Tim. Flavius,—

Flav. My lord?

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—[Aside.] More jewels
yet!

There is no crossing him in his humour,
Else I should tell him,—well, i'faith, I should,
When all's spent, he'd be cross'd then, an he could.

'Tis pity bounty had not eyes behind,
That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.

[Exit, and returns with the casket.

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses!

Tim. O my friends,

I have one word to say to you. Look you,
my good lord,

I must entreat you, honour me so much
As to advance this jewel; accept it, and wear it.
Kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—

All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate

Newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour,
Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near; why, then, another time I'll hear thee: [entertainment.

I pr'ythee, let's be provided to show 'em

Flav. I scarce know how. [Aside.

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please you honour, Lord
Lucius,

Out of his free love, hath presented to you
Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Be worthily entertained.

Enter a third Servant.

How now! what news?

3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be receiv'd,

Not without fair reward.

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to?
He commands us to provide, and give great
gifts,

And all out of an empty coffer:

Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this,
To show him what a beggar his heart is,
Being of no power to make his wishes good:

His promises fly so beyond his state

That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes

For every word: he is so kind that he now

Pays interest for't; his land's put to their books.

Well, would I were gently put out of office

Before I were forc'd out!

Happier is he that has no friend to feed

Than such that do e'en enemies exceed.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit.

Tim.

You do yourselves
Much wrong, you bate too much of your own merits:

Here, my lord, a trifle of our love.

2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty!

Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave

Good words the other day of a bay courser

I rode on: it is yours because you lik'd it.

3 Lord. O, I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that. [know no man

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I Can justly praise but what he does affect:

I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;

I'll tell you true. I'll call to you.

All Lords. O, none so welcome.

Tim. I take all and your several visitations

So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give;

Methinks I could deal kingdoms to my friends

And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,

Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich;

It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living

Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast
Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, devil'd land, my lord.

1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—

Tim. And so

Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endear'd,—

Tim. All to you.—Lights, more lights.

1 Lord. The vest of happiness,

Honour, and fortunes keep with you, Lord
Timon!

Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exeunt ALCIBIADES, Lords, &c.

Apem.

What a coil's here!

Serving of becks and jutting-out of bums!

I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums

That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of degs: [legs.

Methinks false hearts should never have sound

Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court'sies. [sullen

Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not

I would be good to thee.

Apem. No, I'll nothing: for if I should be bribed to, there would be none left to rail upon thee; and then thou wouldst sin the faster.

Thou givest so long, Timon, I fear me thou wilt give away thyself in paper shortly: what need these feasts, pomps, and vain glories?

Tim. Nay, an you begin to rail on society once, I am sworn not to give regard to you.

Farewell, and come with better music. [Exit.

Apem. So;—thou'lt not hear me now,— thou shalt not then, I'll lock thy heaven from

thee.

O, that men's ears should be

To counsel deaf, but not to flattery!

[Exit.

ACT. II.

SCENE I.—ATHENS. A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter a Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand;—to Varro and to Isidore ^{[sum,}
He owes nine thousand; besides my former Which makes it five-and twenty.—Still in notion

Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not.
If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog.
And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold:
If I would sell my horse and buy twenty more
Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,
Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight,
And able horses: no porter at his gate;
But rather one that smiles, and still invites
All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason
Can found his state in safety. Caphis, ho!
Caphis, I say!

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. Here, sir; what is your pleasure?

Sen. Get on your cloak and haste you to Lord Timon;

Importune him for my moneys; be not ceas'd
With slight denial; nor then silenc'd, when—
Commend me to your master—and the cap
Plays in the right hand, thus: but tell him
My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn
Out of mine own, his days and times are past,
And my reliances on his fracted dates
Have smut my credit: I love and honour him;
But must not break my back to heal his finger:
Immediate are my needs; and my relief
Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Get you gone:
Put on a most importunate aspect,
A visage of demand; for, I do fear,
When every feather sticks in his own wing
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.

Sen. Take the bonds along with you,
And have the dates in compt.

Caph.

Sen.

I will, sir.

Go.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ATHENS. A Hall in TIMON'S House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with many bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of expense

That he will neither know how to maintain it
Nor cease his flow of riot: takes no account
How things go from him; nor resumes no care
Of what is to continue: never mind
Was to be so unwise to be so kind.
What shall be done? he will not hear, till feel:
I must be round with him now he comes from hunting.
Fie, fie, fie, fie!

Enter CAPHIS, and the Servants of ISIDORE and VARRO, Caph. Good-even, Varro: what,

You come for money?

Var. Serv. Is't not your business too?

Caph. It is:—and yours too, Isidore?

Isid. Serv. It is so.

Caph. Would we were all discharg'd!

Var. Serv. I fear it.

Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, and Lords, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done we'll forth
again,

My Alcibiades.—With me? what is your will?

Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.

Tim. Dues! whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward. ^{[me off}

Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put

To the succession of new days this month:

My master is awak'd by great occasion

To call upon his own; and humbly prays you

That, with your other noble parts, you'll suit

In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,

I pry'thee but repair to me next morning.

Caph. Nay, good my lord,—

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.

Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, my good
lord,—

Isid. Serv. From Isidore;

He humbly prays your speedy payment,—

Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants,— ^{[six weeks}

Var. Serv. 'Twas due on forfeiture, my lord,
And past,—

Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my
lord,

And I am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath.—

I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;

I'll wait upon you instantly.—

[Exeunt ALCIBIADES and Lords.]

Come hither: pray you, ^{[To FLAVIUS.}

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd

With clamorous demands of date-broke bonds,

And the detention of long-since-due debts,

Against my honour?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen,

The time is unagreeable to this business:

Your importunacy cease till after dinner;

That I may make his lordship understand

Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends.—

See them well entertained. ^{[Exit.}

Flav. Pray, draw near. ^{[Exit.}

Enter APEMANTUS and Fool.

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus: let's ha' some sport with 'em.

Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!

Var. Serv. How dost, fool?

Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.

Apem. No, 'tis to thyself.—Come away.

^{[To the Fool.}

Isid. Serv. [To Var. Serv.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet.

Caph. Where's the fool now?

Apem. He last asked the question.—Poor rogues and usurers' men! bawds between gold and want!

All Serv. What are we, Apemantus?

Apem. Asses.

All Serv. Why?

Apem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All Serv. Gramercies, good fool: how does your mistress?

Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald such chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth.

Apem. Good! gramercy.

[page.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress'

Enter Page.

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain? what do you in this wise company? How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apem. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Pr'ythee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters: I know not which is which.

Apem. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apem. There will little learning die, then, that day thou art hanged. This is to Lord Timon; thus to Alcibiades. Go, thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog, and thou shalt famish a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone.

[Exit Page.

Apem. E'en so thou outrun'st grace.

Fool. I will go with you to Lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers?

All Serv. Ay; would they served us!

Apem. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think no usurer but has a fool to his servant; my mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters they approach sadly and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily and go away sadly: the reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apem. Do it, then, that we may account thee a whoremaster and a knave; which, notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime it appears like a lord; sometime like a lawyer, sometime like a philosopher, with two stones more than's artificial one. He is very often like a knight; and, generally, in all shapes that man goes up and down in from fourscore to thirteen this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

[Timon

Var. Serv. Aside, aside; here comes Lord

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, and woman; sometime the philosopher.

[Exeunt APEMANTUS and Fool.

Flav. Pray you, walk near; I'll speak with you anon.

[Exeunt Serv.

Tim. You make me marvel: wherefore, ere this time,

Had you not fully laid my state before me;

That I might so have rated my expense

As I had leave of means?

Flav.

You would not hear me

At many leisures I propos'd.

Tim.

Go to:

Perchance some single vantages you took

When my indisposition put you back;

And that unaptness made you minister

Thus to excuse yourself.

Flav.

O my good lord

At many times I brought in my accounts,

[off, Laid them before you; you would throw them

And say you found them in mine honesty.

When, for some trifling present, you have bid

me

[weep;

Return so much, I have shook my head and

Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd

you

To hold your hand more close: I did endure

Not seldom, nor no slight checks, when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate,

And your great flow of debts. My loved lord,

Though you hear now,—too late!—yet now's

a time,

The greatest of your having lacks a half

To pay your present debts.

Tim.

Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone;

And what remains will hardly stop the mouth

Of present dues: the future comes apace:

What shall defend the interim? and at length

How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Lacedaemon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but a

world:

Were it all yours to give it in a breath,

How quickly were it gone!

Tim.

You tell me true.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry of falsehood,

Call me before the exactest auditors

And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me,

When all our offices have been oppress'd

With notorious feeders; when our vaults have wept

With drunken spilth of wine; when every room

Hath blaz'd with lights and bray'd with minstrelsy;

I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,

And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim.

Pr'ythee, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this lord!

[ants

How many prodigal bits have slaves and peas-

This night englutted! Who is not Timon's?

What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is Lord Timon's?

Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon!

Ah! when the means are gone that buy this praise

The breath is gone whereof this praise is made:
Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter
showers,

These flies are couch'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no further:
No villainous bounty yet hath passed my heart;
Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given.
Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack

To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy
heart;

If I would broach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts by borrowing,
Men and men's fortunes could I frankly use
As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd

That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends: you shall perceive how you Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends.
Within there! Flaminus! Servilius!

Enter FLAMINIUS, SERVILIUS, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord? my lord?—

Tim. I will despatch you severally:—you to Lord Lucius;—to Lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his honour to-day;—you to Sempromius:
commend me to their loves; and I am proud,
say, that my occasions have found time to use
'em toward a supply of money: let the request be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. Lord Lucius and Lucullus? hum!

[Aside.

Tim. Go you, sir, [to another Serv.] to the senators,—

Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing, bid 'em send o' the instant

A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold,—
For that I knew it the most general way,—
To them to use your signet and your name;
But they do shake their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can't be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall, want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry—you are honourable,— [not—

But yet they could have wish'd—they know
Something hath been amiss—a noble nature
May catch a wrench—would all were well—
'tis pity;—

And so, intending other serious matters,
After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions,
With certain half-caps and cold-moving nods,
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them?
Prythee, man, look cheerly. These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it seldom flows;
'Tis lack of kindly warmth they are not kind;
And nature, as it grows again toward earth,

Is fashion'd for the journey dull and heavy.—
Go to Ventidius [to a Serv.]; prythee, [to FLAVIUS] be not sad,

Thou art true and honest; ingeniously I speak,
No blame belongs to thee:—[To Serv.] Ven-tidius lately

Buried his father; by whose death he's stepp'd
Into a great estate: when he was poor,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends, [me;
I clear'd him with five talents: greet him from Bid him suppose some good necessity [ber'd
Touches his friend, which craves to be remem-With those five talents:—[To FLAV.]—That had,—give'these fellows

To whom 'tis instant due. Ne'er speak or think

That Timon's fortunes 'mong his friends can Flav. I would I could not think it: that thought is bounty's foe;

Being free itself it thinks all others so. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—ATHENS. A Room in LUCULLUS'
House.

FLAMINIUS waiting. *Enter a Servant to
him.*

Serv. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter LUCULLUS.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. [Aside.] One of Lord Timon's men?
a gift, I warrant. Why, thus hits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and ewer to-night.—
Flaminus, honest Flaminus; you are very respectively welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.
[Exit Servant.]—And how does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir,

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well,
sir; and what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminus?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir;
which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him, nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? Alas, good lord! a noble gentleman
'tis, if he would not keep so good a house.
Many a time and often I ha'e dined with him and told him on't; and come again to supper to him of purpose to have him spend less; and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his: I ha'e told him on't, but I could ne'er get him from 't.

Re-enter Servant, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.
Lucul. Flaminus, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucul. I have observed thee always for a to-wardly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah [to the Servant, who goes out].—Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman: but thou art wise; and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidaires for thee: good boy, wink at me, and say thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible the world should so much differ:

And we alive that liv'd! Fly, damned baseness, To him that worships thee.

[Throwing the money back.

Lucul. Ha! now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit.

Flam. May these add to the number that may scald thee!

Let molten coin be thy damnation,
Thou disease of a friend and not himself!
Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns in less than two nights? O you gods,
I feel my master's passion! This slave
Unto his honour has my lord's meat in him.
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment
When he is turn'd to poison?
O, may diseases only work upon't! [of nature
And when he's sick to death, let not that part
Which my lord paid for, be of any power
To expel sickness, but prolong his hour!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—ATHENS. A public Place.

Enter LUCIUS, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who, the Lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honourable gentleman.

1 Stran. We know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumours,—now Lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fie, no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2 Stran. But believe you this, my lord, that not long ago, one of his men was with the Lord Lucilius to borrow so many talents; nay, urged extremely for't, and showed, what necessity be- longed to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

3 Stran. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that! now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honourable man! there was very little honour showed in't. For my own part, I must needs confess I have received some small kind- nesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured lord,—

[To LUCIUS.

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well: commend me to thy honourable- virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent,—

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that Lord; he's ever sending: how shall I thank him, thinkest thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. Has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents. [me;

Luc. I know his lordship is but merry with He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the meantime he wants less, my lord.

If his occasion were not virtuous I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I to disfigure myself against such a good time, when I might ha' shown myself honourable! how unluckily it happened that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour! —Servilius, now, before the gods, I am not able to do't,—the more beast, I say. I was sending to use Lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind: and tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far as to use mine own words to him?

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I'll look you out a good turn, Servilius.

[Exit SERVILIUS.

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk indeed; And he that's once denied will hardly speed.

[Exit.

1 Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2 Stran. Ay, too well.

1 Stran. Why, this is the world's soul; and just of the same piece

Is every flatterer's spirit. Who can call him His friend that dips in the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been this lord's father, And kept his credit with his purse; Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money Has paid his men their wages: he ne'er drinks But Timon's silver treads upon his lip; And yet,—O see the monstrousness of man When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!— He does deny him, in respect of this, What charitable men afford to beggars.

3 Stran. Religion groans at it.

1 Stran. For mine own part,

I never tasted Timon in my life, Nor came any of his bounties over me To mark me for his friend; yet I protest, For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue, And honourable carriage, Had his necessity made use of me, I would have put my wealth into donation, And the best half should have return'd to him, So much I love his heart: but, I perceive,

Men must learn now with pity to dispense:
For policy sits above conscience. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—ATHENS. A Room in SEMPRONIUS' House.

Enter SEMPRONIUS and a Servant of TIMON'S.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in't,—hum!
—'bove all others?

He might have tried Lord Lucius or Lucullus;
And now Ventidius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeem'd from prison: all these Owe their estates unto him.

Serv. My lord,
They have all been touch'd and found base metal; for

They have all denied him.

Sem. How! have they denied him?
Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him?
And does he send to me? Three? hum!—
It shows but little love or judgment in him:
Must I be his last refuge! His friends, like physicians,

Thrive, give him over: must I take the cure
upon me? [him,

Has much disgrac'd me in't; I am angry at That might have known my place: I see no sense for't,

But his occasions might have woo'd me first;
For, in my conscience, I was the first man
That e'er received gift from him:

And does he think so backwardly of me now
That I'll requite it last? No:

So it may prove an argument of laughter
To the rest, and 'mongst the lords I be thought a fool.

I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum
Had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake;
I had such a courage to do him good. But now
return,

And with their faint reply this answer join;
Who bates mine honour shall not know my coin. [Exit.]

Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did when he made man politic,—he cross'd himself by't:
and I cannot think but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! takes virtuous copies to be wicked, like those that under hot ardent zeal would set whole realms on fire:
Of such a nature is his politic love.

This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled,
Save only the gods: now his friends are dead,
Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their wards

Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their master.

And this is all a liberal course allows;
Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—ATHENS. A Hall in TIMON'S
House.

Enter two Servants of VARRO and the Servant of LUCIUS, meeting TITUS, HORTENSIVUS, and other Servants of TIMON'S creditors, waiting his coming out.

1 Var. Serv. Well met; good-morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. What, do we meet together? Lucius!

Luc. Serv. Ay, and I think
One business does command us all; for mine
Is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter PHILOTUS.

Luc. Serv. And Sir Philotus too!

Phi. Good-day at once,

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother.

What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phi. Is not my lord seen yet?

Luc. Serv. Not yet.

Phi. I wonder on't: he was wont to shine at seven.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter
with him:

You must consider that a prodigal course
Is like the sun's; but not, like his, recoverable.

I fear

'Tis deepest winter in Lord Timon's purse;

That is, one may reach deep enough and yet
Find little.

Phi. I am of your fear for that. [event.

Tit. I'll show you how to observe a strange
Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true, he does.

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's gift,

For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark how strange it shows,

Timon in this should pay more than he owes:

And e'en as if your lord should wear rich jewels
And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I am weary of this charge, the gods can witness:

I know my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth,

And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.

1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand crowns: what's yours?

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

1 Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep: and it should seem by the sum

Your master's confidence was above mine;

Else, surely, his had equal'd.

Enter FLAMINIUS.

Tit. One of Lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! sir, a word: pray, is my lord ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship; pray, signify
so much.

Flam. I need not tell him that; he knows you are too diligent.

[Exit.]

Enter FLAVIUS, in a cloak, muffled.

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward muffled so?

He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.

Tit. Do you hear, sir?

Both Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friends?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.

Flav. Ay,
If money were as certain as your waiting
'Twere sure enough.

Why then prefer'd you not your sums and bills
When your false masters eat of my lord's meat?
Then they could smile, and fawn upon his debts, [maws]

And take down th' interest into their gluttonous
You do yourselves but wrong to stir me up;
Let me pass quietly:

Believe't my lord and I have made an end;
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.

Flav. If 'twill not serve 'tis not so base as
you,

For you serve knaves. [Exit.]

1 Var. Serv. How! What does his cashier'd worship mutter?

2 Var. Serv. No matter what; he's poor, and that's revenge enough. Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such may rail against great buildings.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Tit. O, here's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.

Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair some other hour, I should much derive from 't; for, take't of my soul, my lord leans wonderfully to discontent: his comfortable temper has forsook him; he is much out of health, and keeps his chamber. [not sick:]

Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers are
And, if it be so far beyond his health,
Methinks he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a clear way to the gods.

Ser. Good gods!

Tit. We cannot take this for answer, sir.

Flam. [Within.] Servilius, help!—my lord!
my lord!

Enter TIMON, in a rage; FLAMINIUS following.

Tim. What, are my doors oppos'd against my passage?

Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol?
The place which I have feasted, does it now,
Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?

Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus.

Tit. My lord, here is my bill.

Luc. Serv. Here's mine.

Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord.

Both. Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.

Phi. All our bills. [to the girdle.]

Tim. Knock me down with 'em: cleave me

Luc. Serv. Alas, my lord,—

Tim. Cut my heart in sums.

Tit. Mine, fifty talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops pays that.—

What yours?—and yours?—

1 Var. Serv. My lord,—

2 Var. Serv. My lord,—

Tim. Tear me, take me, and the gods fall upon you! [Exit.]

Hor. Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money: these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the slaves.

Creditors!—devils.

Flav. My dear lord,—

Tim. What if it should be so?

Flam. My lord,—

Tim. I'll have it so.—My steward!

Flav. Here, my lord.

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my friends again,
Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all:
I'll once more feast the rascals.

Flav. O my lord,

You only speak from your distracted soul;
There is not so much left to furnish out
A moderate table.

Tim. Be't not in thy care; go,
I charge thee, invite them all: let in the tide
Of knaves once more; my cook and I'll provide. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—ATHENS. The Senate House.

The Senate sitting.

1 Sen. My lords, you have my voice to it;
the fault's

Bloody; 'tis necessary he should die:
Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Enter ALCIBIADES, attended.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

1 Sen. Now, captain?

Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues;
For pity is the virtue of the law,
And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time and fortune to lie heavy
Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,
Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past death

To those that without heed do plunge into 't.
He is a man, setting his fate aside,
Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice,—
An honour in him which buys out his fault,—

But with a noble fury and fair spirit,
Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe:
And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox.
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:

Your words have took such pains, as if they labour'd [quarrelling]

To bring manslaughter into form, and set
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,

Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born:

He's truly valiant that can wisely suffer
The worst that man can breathe; and make his wrongs [carelessly];

His outides,—to wear them like his raiment,
And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,

To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill,
What folly 'tis to hazard life for ill!

Alcib. My lord,— [clear:

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look
To revenge is no valour, but to bear. [me,

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon
If I speak like a captain:—

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And not endure all threats? sleep upon 't,
And let the foes quietly cut their throats,

Without repugnancy? but if there be
Such valour in the bearing, what make me

Abroad? why, then, women are more valiant,
That stay at home, if bearing carry it;

And th' ass more captain than the lion; the fellow

Loaden with irons wiser than the judge,
If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,

As you are great, be pitifully good:
Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;
But, in defence, by mercy, 'tis most just.

To be in anger is impiety;
But who is man that is not angry?

Weight but the crime with this.
2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib. In vain! his service done
At Lacedaemon and Byzantium

Were a sufficient briber for his life.
1 Sen. What's that?

Alcib. Why, I say, my lords, h'as done fair
service,

And slain in fight many of your enemies:
How full of valour did he bear himself

In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds!
2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em, he

Is a sworn rioter: he has a sin that often
Drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner:

If there were no foes, that were enough
To overcome him: in that beastly fury

He has been known to commit outrages
And cherish factions: 'tis inferr'd to us

His days are foul and his drink dangerous.
1 Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fate! he might have died in war.
My lords, if not for any parts in him,—

Though his right arm might purchase his own
time,

And be in debt to none,—yet, more to move
you,

Take my deserts to his, and join them both:
And, for I know your reverend ages love

Security, I'll pawn my victories, all
My honours to you, upon his good returns.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receiv't in valiant gore;

For law is strict, and war is nothing more.
1 Sen. We are for law,—he dies; urge it no

more,
On height of our displeasure: friend or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.

Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How!
Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.

3 Sen. What!
Alcib. I cannot think but your age has forgot me;

It could not else be I should prove so base
To sue, and be denied such common grace:
My wounds ache at you.

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?
'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect;

We banish thee forever.
Alcib. Banish me!

Banish your dotage; banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.

1 Sen. If, after two days' shine, Athens contain thee,

Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit,

He shall be executed presently.
[Exeunt Senators.

Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough;
that you may live

Only in bone, that none may look on you!
I am worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,

While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon large interest; I myself

Rich only in large hurts;—all those for this?
Is this the balsam that the usuring senate

Pours into captain's wounds? Ha! banishment?
It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd;

It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may stike at Athens. I'll cheer up

My discontented troops, and lay for hearts.
'Tis honour with most lands to be at odds;

Soldiers should brook as little wrongs as gods.
[Exit.

SCENE VI.—ATHENS. A magnificent Room in TIMON'S House.

Music. Tables set out: Servants attending.
Enter divers Lords at several doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.

2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tri-ng when we encountered: I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1 Lord. I should think so: he hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.

2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?

1 Lord. A thousand pieces.
2 Lord. A thousand pieces!

1 Lord. What of you?
3 Lord. He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.

Enter TIMON and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both.—
And how fare you?

1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more willingly than we your lordship.

Tim. No more willingly leaves winter; such summer-birds are men. [Aside.]—Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay: feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly o' the trumpet's sound; we shall to't presently.

1 Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly with your lordship that I returned you an empty messenger.

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you.

2 Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah, my good friend! what cheer?

2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am e'en sick of shame that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on't, sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours before,—

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance.—Come, bring in all together.

[The banquet brought in.]

2 Lord. All covered dishes!

1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

3 Lord. Doubt not that, if money and the season can yield it.

1 Lord. How do you? What's the news?

3 Lord. Alcibiades is banished: hear you of it?

1 & 2 Lord. Alcibiades banished!

3 Lord. 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1 Lord. How! how!

2 Lord. I pray you, upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw near?

3 Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here's a noble feast toward.

2 Lord. This is the old man still.

3 Lord. Will't hold? will't hold?

2 Lord. It does: but time will—and so,—

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool with that spur as he would to the lip of his mistress: your diet shall be in all places alike. Make not a city feast of it, to let the meat cool ere we can agree upon the first place: sit, sit. The gods require our thanks.—

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society with thankfulness. For your own gifts make yourselves praised: but reverse still to give, lest your duties be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one need not lend to another; for, were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Make the meat be loved more than the man that gives it. Let no assembly of twenty be without a score of villains: if there sit twelve women at the table, let a dozen of them be—as they are. The rest of your fees, O gods,—the senators of Athens, together, with the common tag of people,—what is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable for destruction. For these my present friends,—as they are to me nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Uncover, dogs, and lap.

[The dishes, when uncovered, are seen to be full of warm water.]

Some speak. What does his lordship mean?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better feast never behold, You knot of mouth-friends! smoke and luke-warm water

Is your perfection. This is Timon's last; Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries, Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces

[Throwing the water in their faces.]

Your reeking villainy. Live loath'd and long, Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites, Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,

You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's Cap and knee slaves, vapours, and minute-jacks! Of man and beast the infinite malady

Crust you quite o'er!—What, dost you go?

Soft, take thy physic first,—thou too,—and thou;—

Stay, I will lend thee money, borrow none.—

[Throws the dishes at them, and drives them out.]

What, all in motion? Henceforth be no feast Whereat a villain's not a welcome guest.

Burn, house! sink, Athens! henceforth hated be Of Timon, man, and all humanity! [Exit.]

Re-enter the Lords.

1 Lord. How now, my lords!

2 Lord. Know you the quality of Lord Timon's fury?

3 Lord. Pish! did you see my cap?

4 Lord. I have lost my gown.

1 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and naught but humour sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat:—did you see my jewel?

3 Lord. Did you see my cap?

2 Lord. Here 'tis.

4 Lord. Here lies my gown.

1 Lord. Let's make no stay.

2 Lord. Lord Timon's mad.

3 Lord. I feel't upon my bones.

4 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Walls of ATHENS.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall

That girdest in those wolves, dive in the earth And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent!

Obedience fail in children! slaves and fools, Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench And minister in their steads! to general filths Convert, o' the instant, green virginity,—

Do't in your parent's eyes! bankrupts, hold fast,

Rather than render back, out with your knives And cut your trusters' throats! bound servants steal!

Large-handed robbers your grave masters are, And pill by law! maid, to thy master's bed,— Thy mistress is o' the brothel! son of sixteen,

Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire, With it beat out his brains! piety and fear, Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth, Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood, Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries.

And let confusion live!—Plagues incident to men,
 Your potent and infectious fevers heap
 On Athens, ripe for stroke! thou cold sciatica,
 Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
 As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty
 Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth,
 That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive
 And drown themselves in not! itches, blains,
 Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop
 Be general leprosy! breath infect breath;
 That their society, as their friendship, may
 Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee
 But nakedness, thou detestable town!
 Take thou that too, with multiplying banes!
 Timon will to the woods; where he shall find
 The unkindest beast more kinder than mankind.
 The gods confound,—hear me, ye good gods
 all,—

The Athenians both within and out that wall!
 And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
 To the whole race of mankind, high and low!
 Amen. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—ATHENS. A Room in TIMON'S House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with two or Three Servants.

1 Serv. Here you, master steward, where's our master?

Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?

Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you?

Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
 I am as poor as you

1 Serv. Such a house broke!

So noble a master fall'n! All gone! and not
 One friend to take his fortune by the arm
 And go along with him!

2 Serv. As we do turn our backs

To our companion thrown into his grave,
 So his familiars from his buried fortunes
 Slink all away; leave their false vows with him,
 Like empty purses pick'd; and his poor self,
 A dedicated beggar to the air,
 With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty, Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin'd house. [livery,

3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's
 That see I by our faces; we are fellows still,
 Serving alike in sorrow: leak'd is our bark;
 And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck
 Hearing the surges threat: we must all part
 Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,
 The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.
 Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake,
 Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads,
 and say,

As 'twere a knell unto our master's fortune,
 We have seen better days. Let each take some.

[Giving them money,
 Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word
 more:

Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.
 [Servants embrace, and part several ways.]

O, the fierce wretchedness that glory brings us!
 Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt
 Since riches point to misery and contempt?
 Who would be so mock'd with glory? or to live
 But in a dream of friendship? [pounds,
 To have his pomp, and all what state com-
 But only painted, like his varnish'd friends?
 Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart,
 Undone by goodness! strange, unusual blood,
 When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!

Who then dares to be half so kind again?
 For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar
 men.

My dearest lord,—bless'd to be most accurs'd,
 Rich only to be wretched,—thy great fortunes
 Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord!
 He's flung in rage from this ingrateful seat
 Of monstrous friends; nor has he with him to Supply his life, or that which can command it.
 I'll follow and enquire him out:
 I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
 Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Woods. Before TIMON'S Cave.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth

Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb
 Infect the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,—
 Whose procreation, residence, and birth Scarce is dividant,—touch them with several fortunes;

The greater scorns the lesser: not nature,
 To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great fortune

But by contempt of nature.

Raise me this beggar and deny't that lord;
 The senator shall bear contempt hereditary
 The beggar native honour.

It is the pasture lards the other's sides,
 The want that makes him lean. Who dares,
 who dares,

In purity of manhood stand upright,
 And say, This man's a flatterer? if one be,
 So are they all; for every guise of fortune
 Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate
 Ducks to the golden fool: all is oblique;

There's nothing level in our cursed natures
 But direct villainy. Therefore, be abhorr'd
 All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
 His semblable, yea, himself Timon disdains:
 Destruction fang mankind!—Earth, yield me
 roots! [Digging.]

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
 With thy most operant poison! What is here?
 Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold? No,
 gods,

I am no idle votarist. Roots, you clear heavens!
 Thus much of this will make black, white;
 foul, fair; [valiant.

Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward,
 Ha, you gods! why this? what this, you gods?
 why, this [sides;

Will lug your priests and servants from your Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads:

This yellow slave
Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd;
Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves,
And give them title, knee, and approbation,
With senators on the bench: this is it
That makes the wappen'd widow wed again;
She whom the spital-house and ulcerous sores
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices

To the April day again. Come, damned earth, Thou common whore of mankind, that putt'st odds

Among the rout of nations, I will make thee
Do thy right nature.—[March afar off.] Ha!
a drum?—Thou'rt quick,
But yet I'll bury thee: thou'lt go, strong thief,
When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand:—
Nay, stay thou out for earnest.

[Keeping some gold.]

Enter ALCIBIADES, with drum and fife, in warlike manner; PERYNIA and TIMANDRA.

Alcib. What art thou there? speak.
Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker gnaw thy heart

For showing me again the eyes of man!

Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to thee,

That art thyself a man?

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.
For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog,
That I might love thee something.

Alcib. I know thee well;

But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.
Tim. I know thee too; and more than that

I know thee

I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? This fell whore of thine

Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look.

Phry. Thy lips rot off!

Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot returns

To thine own lips again. [change?]

Alcib. How came the noble Timon to this

Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give:

But then renew I could not, like the moon;
There were no suns to borrow of.

Alcib. Noble Timon,

What friendship may I do thee?

Tim. None, but to Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?

Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none: if thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee, for thou art a man!

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.

Tim. Thou saw'st them when I had pros-

Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed
time.

Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of Timan. Is this the Athenian minion whom the world

Voic'd so regardfully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra?

Timan. Yes. [that use thee;

Tim. Be a whore still! they love thee not Give them diseases, leaving with thee their lust
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd youth to

The tub-fast and the diet.

Timan. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra; for his wits

Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.—
I have but little gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious band: I have heard and griev'd,

How curs'd Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbour states,

But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them.—

Tim. I pry thee, beat thy drum, and get thee
gone.

Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear

Tim. How dost thou pity him whom thou dost trouble?

I had rather be alone.

Alcib. Why, fare thee well:

Here is some gold for thee.

Tim. Keep it, I cannot eat it.

Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—

Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens?

Alcib. Ay, Timon, and have cause.

Tim. The gods confound them all in thy conquest;

And thee after, when thou hast conquer'd!

Alcib. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That by killing of villains,

Thou wast born to conquer my country.

Put up thy gold: go on,—here's gold,—go on;

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove

Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison

In the sick air: let not thy sword skip one:

Pity not honour'd age for his white beard,

He is an usurer: strike me the counterfeit matron:

It is her habit only that is honest,

Herself's a bawd: let not the virgin's cheek

Make soft thy treachant sword; for those milk
paps, eyes,

That through the window-bars bore at men's

Are not within the leaf of pity wr't,

But set them down horrible traitors: spare not the babe, mercy;

Whose dumpled smiles from fools exhaust their

Think it a bastard, whom the oracle

Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut,

And mince it sans remorse: swear against objects;

Put armour on thine ears and on thine eyes;

Whose proof nor yells of mothers, maids, nor
babes,

Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding,

Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers:

Make large confusion; and, thy fury spent,

Confounded be thyself! Speak not, be gone.

Alcib. Hast thou gold yet? I'll take the gold thou giv'st me,

Not all thy counsel.

Tim. Dost thou, or dost thou not, heaven's curse upon thee!

Phr. & Tim. Give us some gold, good Timon: hast thou more?

Tim. Enough to make a whore forswear her trade, [sits, And to make whores a bawd. Hold up, you Your aprons mountant: you are not oathable,— Although I know you'll swear, terribly swear, Into strong shudders and to heavenly agues, The immortal gods that hear you,—spare your oaths,

I'll trust to your conditions: be whores still; And he whose pious breath seeks to convert you,

Be strong in whore, allure him, burn him up; Let your close fire predominate his smoke, And be no turncoats: yet may your pains six months [roofs

Be quite contrary: and thatch your poor thin With burdens of the dead;—some that were hang'd,

No matter:—wear them, betray with them: whore still;

Paint till a horse may mire upon your face: A pox of wrinkles!

Phr. & Timan. Well, more gold.—What then?—

Believe't, that we'll do anything for gold.

Tim. Consumptions sow [shins, In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice,

That he may never more false title plead, Nor sound his quillets shrilly: hoar the flamen, That scolds against the quality of flesh And not believes himself: down with the nose, Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away Of him that, his particular to foresee, Smells from the general weal: make curl'd-pate ruffians bald;

And let the unscar'd braggarts of the war Derive some pain from you: plague all; That your activity may defeat and quell The source of all erection.—There's more gold:—

Do you damn others and let this damn you, And ditches grave you all!

Phr. & Timan. More counsel with more money, bounteous Timon.

Tim. More whore, more mischief first; I have given you earnest.

Alcib. Strike up the drum towards Athens! Farewell, Timon:

If I thrive well I'll visit thee again.

Tim. If I hope well I'll never see thee more. Alcib. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alcib. Call'st thou that harm?

Tim. Men daily find it. Get thee away, and take Thy beagles with thee.

Alcib. We but offend him.—Strike. [Drum beats. Exeunt ALCIBIADES, PHRYNIA, and TIMANDRA.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness,

Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou, [Digging. Whose womb unmeasurable and infinite breast

Teems and feeds all; whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,

Engenders the black toad and adder blue, The gilded newt and eyeless venom'd worm, With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine;

Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate, From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root! Ensear thy fertile and conception womb, Let it no more bring out ingrateful man!

Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears; [face

Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward Hath to the marbled mansion all above

Never presented!—O, a root,—dear thanks! Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas;

Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind, That from it all consideration slips!

Enter APEMANTUS.

More man? plague, plague!

Apem. I was directed hither: men report Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them. [a dog

Tim. 'Tis, then, because thou dost not keep Whom I would imitate: consumption catch thee!

Apem. This is in thee a nature but affected; A poor unmanly melancholy sprung

From change of fortune. Why this spade? this place?

This slave-like habit? and these looks of care? Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft; Hug their diseases'd perfumes, and have forgot That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods By putting on the cunning of a carper.

Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive By that which has undone thee: hinge thy knee, And let his very breath whom thou'lt observe Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strain, And call it excellent: thou wast told thus; Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters that bid welcome,

To knaves and all approachers: 'tis most just That thou turn rascal; hadst thou wealth again Rascals should have't. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away myself. [like thyself;

Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being A madman so long, now a fool. What, think'st That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain, Will put thy shirt on warm? Will these moss'd trees,

That have outliv'd the eagle, page thy heels, And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brook,

Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste To cure thy o'ernight's surfeit? call the creatures,—

Whose naked natures live in all the spite Of wreckful heaven; whose bare unhoused trunks,

To the conflicting elements expos'd, Answer mere nature,—bid them flatter thee; O, thou shalt find,—

Tim. A fool of thee: depart.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem.

Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Apem. I flatter not; but say thou art a caitiff.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office or a fool's.

Dost please thyself in't?

Apem.

Ay.

Tim. What! a knave too?

Apem. If thou didst put this sour-cold habit
on

To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Dost it enforcedly; thou'dst courtier be again
Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery
Outlives uncertain pomp, is crown'd before:
The one is filling still, never complete;
The other, at high wish: best state, contentless,
Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse than the worst, content.

Thou should'st desire to die, being miserable.
Tim. Not by his breath that is more miserable.

Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm
With favour never clasp'd; but bred a dog.
Hadst thou, like us from our first swath, proceeded

The sweet degrees that this brief world affords
To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command, thou wouldst have plung'd
thyself

In general riot; melted down thy youth

In different beds of lust; and never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd

The sugar'd game before thee. But myself,

Who had the world as my confectionary;

The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts
of men

At duty, more than I could frame employment;
That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves
Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush
Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare
For every storm that blows;—I, to bear this,
That never knew but better, is some burden:
Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time
Hath made thee hard in't. Why shouldst thou hate men? [given?

They never flatter'd thee: what hast thou
If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag,
Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff
To some she beggar, and compounded thee
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!—
If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been a knave and flatterer.

Apem.

Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.

Apem.

I, that I was

No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now:

Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee,
I'd give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.—
That the whole life of Athens were in this!
Thou wouldst I eat it. [Eating a root.

Apem.

Here; I will mend thy feast.

[Offering him something.

Tim. First mend my company, take away
thyself.

Apem. So I shall mend mine own by the lack of thine. [botch'd;

Tim. 'Tis not well mended so, it is but if not, I would it were.

Apem. What wouldst thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,

Tell them there I have gold; look, so I have.

Apem. Here is no use for gold.

Tim. The best and truest:

For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

Apem. Where ly'st o' nights, Timon?

Tim. Under that's above me.

Where feed'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

Apem. Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather, where I eat it.

Tim. Would poison were obedient, and knew my mind!

Apem. Where wouldst thou send it?

Tim. To sauce thy dishes.

Apem. The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends: when thou wast in thy gilt and thy perfume they mocked thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a mediator for thee, eat it.

Tim. On what I hate I feed not.

Apem. Dost hate a medlar?

Tim. Ay, though it look like thee.

Apem. An thou hadst hated medlars sooner, thou shouldst have loved thyself better now.
What man didst thou ever know unthrift that was beloved after his means?

Tim. Who without those means thou talkest of didst thou ever know beloved?

Apem. Myself.

Tim. I understand thee; thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou nearest compare to thy flatterers?

Tim. Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What wouldst thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Apem. Give it the beasts, to be rid of the
men.

Tim. Wouldst thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

Apem. Ay, Timon.

Tim. A beastly ambition, which the gods grant thee t' attain to! If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dulness would torment thee; and still thou livedst but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou shouldst hazard thy life for thy dinner: wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury:
wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be killed by the horse; wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be seized by the leopard; wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life: all thy safety were remotion; and thy defence absence.
What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast? and what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation!

Apem. If thou couldst please me with speaking to me, thou might'st have hit upon it here: the commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

Tim. How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

Apem. Yonder comes a poet and a painter: the plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way: when I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog than Apemantus.

Apem. Thou art the cap of all the fools alive.

Tim. Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon!

Apem. A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.

Tim. All villains that do stand by thee are pure.

Apem. There is no leprosy but what thou speak'st.

Tim. If I name thee.—

I'll beat thee, but I should infect my hands.

Apem. I would my tongue could rot them off!

Tim. Away, thou issue of a mangy dog! Cholera does kill me that thou art alive; I swoon to see thee.

Apem. Would thou wouldst burst!

Tim. Away, Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry I shall lose A stone by thee. [Throws a stone at him.]

Apem. Beast!

Tim. Slave!

Apem. Toad!

Tim. Rogue, rogue, rogue!

[APEM. retreats backward, as going.]
I am sick of this false world; and will love naught

But even the mere necessities upon't.

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat
Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in me at others' lives may laugh.
O thou sweet king-killer and dear divorce

[Looking on the gold.]
'Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright defiler

Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
Thou ever young, fresh, lov'd and delicate wooer,

Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow
That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god,
That sould'er'st close impossibilities,
And mak'st them kiss! that speak'st with every tongue

To every purpose! O thou touch of hearts!
Think, thy slave, man, rebels; and by thy virtue

Set them into confounding odds, that beasts
May have the world in empire!

Apem. Would 'twere so!—
But not till I am dead.—I'll say thou'st gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd to shortly.

Tim. Throng'd to?
Apem. Ay.

Tim. Thy back, I pr'ythee.

Apem. Live, and love thy misery!
Tim. Long live so, and so die! [Exit APE-
MANTUS.] I am quit.

More things like men?—Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

Enter Thieves.

1 Thief. Where should he have this gold?
It is some poor fragment, some slender ort of his remainder: the mere want of gold and the falling-from of his friends drove him into this melancholy.

2 Thief. It is noised he hath a mass of treasure.

3 Thief. Let us make the assay upon him:
if he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall's get it?

2 Thief. True; for he bears it not about him,
'tis hid.

1 Thief. Is not this he?

Thieves. Where?

2 Thief. 'Tis his description.

3 Thief. He; I know him.

Thieves. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves?

Thieves. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too; and women's sons.

Thieves. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;

Within this mile break forth a hundred springs:
The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips!
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want?

1 Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries,
As beasts and birds and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes;

You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con,
That you are thieves profess'd; that you work
not

In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft
In limited professions. Rascal thieves, Here's gold. Go, suck the subtle blood o' the grape

Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging: trust not the physician;
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob: take wealth and lives
together;

Do villainy, do, since you protest to do't,
Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery:
The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction
Robs the vast sea: the moon's an arrant thief,
And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into salt tears: the earth's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen
From general excrement: each thing's a thief:
The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough
power

Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves;
Rob one another;—there's more gold;—cut
throats;

All that you meet are thieves. To Athens go,

Break open shops; nothing can you steal
But thieves do lose it: steal not less for this
I gave you; and gold confound you howsoever!
Amen. [TIMON retires to his cave.]

3 Thief. Has almost charmed me from my profession by persuading me to it.

1 Thief. 'Tis in the malice of mankind that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2 Thief. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

1 Thief. Let us first see peace in Athens:
there is no time so miserable but a man may be true. [Exeunt Thieves.]

Enter FLAVIUS.

Flav. O you gods!
Is yon despis'd and ruinous man my lord?
Full of decay and failing? O monument
And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd!
What an alteration of honour
Has desperate want made!
What viler thing upon the earth than friends
Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends!
How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was wish'd to love his enemies!
Grant I may ever love, and rather woo
Those that would mischief me than those that do!—

Has caught me in his eye: I will present
My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord,
Still serve him with my life.—My dearest
master!

TIMON comes forward from his cave.

Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flav. Have you forgot me, sir?

Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all
men;

Then, if thou grant'st thou'rt a man, I have forgot thee.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then I know thee not:

I ne'er had honest man about me, I; all
I kept were knaves, to serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,
Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief
For his undone lord than mine eyes for you.

Tim. What, dost thou weep?—come nearer;
—then I love thee

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankind; whose eyes do never give
But through lust and laughter. Pity's sleeping:
Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping!

Flav. I beg of you to know me, good my lord, [wealth lasts,
To accept my grief, and, whilst this poor
To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward

So true, so just, and now so comfortable?
It almost turns my dangerous nature mild.
Let me behold thy face. Surely, this man
Was born of woman.—

Forgive my general and exceptless rashness,
You perpetual-sober gods! I do proclaim
One honest man,—mistake me not,—but one;
No more, I pray,—and he's a steward.—
How fain would I have hated all mankind!

And thou redeem'st thyself. but all, save thee,
I fell with curses.

Methinks thou art more honest now than wise;
For by oppressing and betraying me

Thou might'st have sooner got another service:
For many so arrive at second masters [true,—

Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me
For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,—

Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous,
If not a usuring kindness, and, as rich men
deal gifts,

Expecting in return twenty for one? [breast

Flav. No, my most worthy master; in whose Doubt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late:

You should have fear'd false times when you did feast:

Suspect still comes where an estate is least.

That which I show, heaven knows, is merely
love,

Duty, and zeal to your unmatched mind,
Care of your food and living; and, believe it,

My most honour'd lord,

For any benefit that points to me,

Either in hope or present, I'd exchange

For this one wish,—that you had power and wealth

To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 'tis so!—Thou singly honest man,

Here, take:—the gods, out of my misery,
Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich and happy; [men;

But thus condition'd:—thou shalt build from

Hate all, curse all; show charity to none;

But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone

Ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs

What thou deny'st to men, let prisons swallow

'em, [blasted woods,

Debts wither 'em to nothing: be men like

And may diseases lick up their false bloods!

And so, farewell and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay,

And comfort you, my master.

Tim. If thou hat'st curses,

Stay not; but fly whilst thou'rt bless'd and free:

Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.
[Exeunt severally.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Woods. Before TIMON'S Cave.

Enter Poet and Painter; TIMON watching them from his cave.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true that he's so full of gold?

Pain. Certain: Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'tis said he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest.
Therefore, 'tis not amiss we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travail for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation: only I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too,—tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air o' the time: it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act; and but in the plainer and simpler kind of people the deed of saying is quite out of use. To promise is most courtly and fashionable performance is a kind of will or testament which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Tim. Excellent workman! thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking what I shall say I have provided for him: it must be a personating of himself: a satire against the softness of prosperity, with a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulency.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him: Then do we sin against our own estate When we may profit meet and come too late.

Pain. True; [night,
When the day serves, before black-corner'd
Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light.
Come. [god's gold,

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a That he is worshipp'd in a baser temple Than where swine feed! [the foam:
'Tis thou that rigg'st the bark, and plough'st
Settlest admired reverence in a slave:
To thee be worship! and thy saunts for aye
Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey!
Fit I meet them. [Advancing from his cave.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master!

Tim. Have I once liv'd to see two honest men?

Poet. Sir,
Having often of your open bounty tasted,
Hearing you were retir'd, your friends fall'n
off,

Whose thankless natures,—O abhorred spirits!—

Not all the whips of heaven are large enough:
What! to you,

Whose star-like nobleness gave life and influence

To their whole being! I am wrapt, and cannot cover

The monstrous bulk of this ingratitude
With any size of words. [better:

Tim. Let it go naked, men may see't the
You that are honest, by being what you are,
Make them best seen and known.

Pain. He and myself
Have travail'd in the great shower of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it.

Tim. Ay, you are honest men.

Pain. We are hither come to offer you our service. [requite you?

Tim. Most honest men! Why, how shall I
Can you eat roots, and drink cold water? no.

Both. What we can do, we'll do, to do you service. [have gold;

Tim. Ye're honest men: ye've heard that I
I am sure you have: speak truth; ye're honest
men.

Pain. So it is said, my noble lord; but therefore
Came not my friend nor I.

Tim. Good honest men!—Thou draw'st a counterfeit

Best in all Athens: thou'rt indeed the best;
Thou counterfeit'st most lively.

Pain. So, so, my lord.
Tim. E'en so, sir, as I say.—And, for thy fiction, [To the Poet.

Why, thy verse swells with stuff so fine and smooth

That thou art even natural in thine art.—
But for all this, my honest-natur'd friends,

I must needs say you have a little fault:
Marry, 'tis not monstrous in you; neither wish I
You take much pains to mend.

Both. Beseech your honour
To make it known to us.

Tim. You'll take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Will you indeed?

Both. Doubt it not, worthy lord.

Tim. There's never a one of you but trusts a knave

That mightily deceives you.

Both. Do we, my lord?
Tim. Ay, and you hear him cog, see him
dissemble,

Know his gross patchery, love him, feed him,
Keep in your bosom: yet remain assur'd
That he's a made-up villain.

Pain. I know not such, my lord.

Poet. Nor I.

Tim. Look you, I love you well; I'll give you gold,

Rid me these villains from your companies:
Hang them or stab them, drown them in a draught, [me,

Confound them by some course, and come to
I'll give you gold enough.

Both. Name them, my lord; let's know them.

Tim. You that way, you this,—but two in company:

Each man apart, all single and alone,
Yet an arch-villain keeps him company.

If where thou art two villains shall not be,
[To the Painter.

Come not near him.—If thou wouldst not reside [To the Poet.

But where one villain is, then him abandon.—

Hence! pack! there's gold,—ye came for gold, ye slaves: [hence!

You have done work for me, there's payment:
You are an alchemist, make gold of that:—
Out, rascal dogs!

[Exit, beating and driving them out.

Enter FLAVIUS and two Senators.

Flav. It is in vain that you would speak with Timon;

Graves only be men's works and death their gain!
Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign.

[Retires to his cave.]

1 Sen. His discontents are unremovably Coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return, And strain what other means is left unto us In our dear peril.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Walls of Athens.

Enter two Senators and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd: are his files

As full as thy report?

Mess. I have spoke the least: Besides, his expedition promises Present approach. [not Timon.]

2 Sen. We stand much hazard if they bring

Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend;

Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd, Yet our old love had a particular force, And made us speak like friends:—this man was riding

From Alcibiades to Timon's cave With letters of entreaty, which import His fellowship i' the cause against your city, In part for his sake mov'd.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers.

Enter Senators from TIMON.

3 Sen. No talk of Timon, nothing of him expect.—

The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scouring

Doth choke the air with dust: in, and prepare: Ours is the fall, I fear; our foes the snare.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Woods. TIMON'S Cave, and a rude Tomb seen.

Enter a Soldier seeking TIMON.

Sold. By all description this should be the place. [is this?]

Who's here? speak, ho!—No answer?—What Timon is dead, who hath outstretch'd his span: Some beast rear'd thus; there does not live a man. [tomb]

Dead, sure; and this his grave,—what's on this I cannot read; the character I'll take with wax: Our captain hath in every figure skill, An ag'd interpreter, though young in days: Before proud Athens he's set down by this, Whose fall the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Before the Walls of Athens.

Trumpets sound. Enter ALCIBIADES and Forces.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious town
Our terrible approach. [A parley sounded.]

Enter Senators on the Walls.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the time With all licentious measure, making your walls The scope of justice; till now, myself, and such As slept within the shadow of your power, Have wander'd with our travers'd arms, and breath'd

Our sufferance vainly. Now the time is flush, When crouching marrow, in the bearer strong, Cries, of itself, No more: now breathless wrong Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease; And pury insolence shall break his wind With fear and horrid flight.

1 Sen. Noble and young, When thy first griefs were but a mere conceit, Ere thou hadst power or we had cause of fear, We sent to thee, to give thy rages balm, To wipe out our ingratitude with loves Above their quantity.

2 Sen. So did we woo Transformed Timon to our city's love, By humble message and by promis'd means: We were not all unkind, nor all deserve The common stroke of war.

1 Sen. These walls of ours Were not erected by their hands from whom You have receiv'd your griefs: nor are they such That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall

For private faults in them.

2 Sen. Nor are they living Who were the motives that you first went out; Shame, that they wanted cunning, in excess, Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord, Into our city with thy banners spread: By decimation and a tithed death,— If thy revenges hunger for that food [tenth; Which nature loathes,—take thou the destin'd And by the hazard of the spotted die Let die the spotted.

1 Sen. All have not offended; For those that were, it is not square to take, On those that are, revenges: crimes, like lands, Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman, Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage: Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin Which, in the bluster of thy wrath, must fall With those that have offended: like a shepherd Approach the fold and cull the infected forth, But kill not altogether.

2 Sen. What thou wilt, Thou rather shalt enforce it with thy smile Than hew to't with thy sword.

1 Sen. Set but thy foot. Against our rampi'd gates and they shall ope; So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before To say thou'lt enter friendly.

2 Sen. Throw thy glove, Or any token of thine honour else, That thou wilt use the wars as thy redress, And not as our confusion, all thy powers Shall make their harbour in our town till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alcib. Then there's my glove; Descend, and open your uncharg'd ports; Those enemies of Timon's and mine own, Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof, Fall, and no more: and,—to atone your fears With my more noble meaning,—not a man

Shall pass his quarter or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
But shall be render'd to your public laws
At heaviest answer.

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.

Alcib. Descend, and keep your words.

[The Senators descend and open the gates.]

Enter a Soldier.

Sol. My noble general, Timon is dead;
Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea;
And on his grave-stone this insculpture, which
With wax I brought away, whose soft impression

Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. [Reads.] Here lies a wretched corse, of wretched soul bereft:

Seek not my name: a plague consume you wicked cattiffs left!

Here lie I, Timon; who, alive, all living men did hate:

Pass by, and curse thy fill; but pass, and stay not here thy gait.

These well express in thee thy latter spirits:
Though thou abhorrdst in us our human griefs, Scorn'dst our brain's flow, and those our droplets which

From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead
Is noble Timon: of whose memory

Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city,

And I will use the olive with my sword:

Make war breed peace; make peace stunt war;

make each

Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.

Let our drums strike.

[Exeunt.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—ROME. A Street.

Enter a company of mutinous Citizens, with staves, clubs, and other weapons.

1 Cit. Before we proceed any further, hear me speak.

Citizens. Speak, speak.

1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die than to famish?

Citizens. Resolved, resolved.

1 Cit. First, you know Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

Citizens. We know't, we know't.

1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is't a verdict?

Citizens. No more talking on't; let it be done: away, away!

2 Cit. One word, good citizens.

1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians good. What authority surfeits on would relieve us: if they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely; but they think we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our pikes ere we become rakes: for the gods know I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

2 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

1 Cit. Against him first: he's a very dog to the commonalty.

2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

1 Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

2 Cit. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously he did it to that end: though softconscienced men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue.

2 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature you account a vice in him. You must in no way say he is covetous.

1 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] what shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen: why stay we prating here? to the Capitol!

Citizens. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft! who comes here?

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.

1 Cit. He's one honest enough; would all the rest were so!

Enter MENENIUS AGRIPPA.

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? where go you

With bats and clubs? the matter? speak, I pray you.

1 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,

Will you undo yourselves?

1 Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you. For your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves as lift them Against the Roman state; whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong link asunder than can ever Appear in your impediment: for the dearth, The gods, not the patricians, make it; and Your knees to them, not arms, must help.

Alack,

You are transported by calamity [slander Thither where more attends you; and you The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers,

When you curse them as enemies.

1 Cit. Care for us! True, indeed! They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must

Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you A pretty tale: it may be you have heard it; But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture To stale't a little more.

1 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir: yet you must not think to fob-off our disgrace with a tale; but, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time when all the body's members

Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it:— That only like a gulf it did remain I' the midst o' the body, idle and unactive, Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing Like labour with the rest; where the other instruments

Did see and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel, And, mutually participate, did minister Unto the appetite and affection common — Of the whole body. The belly answered,—

1 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile, [thus,—

Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even For, look you, I may make the belly smile As well as speak,—it tauntingly replied To the discontented members, the mutinous

That envied his receipt; even so most fitly As you malign our senators for that They are not such as you.

1 Cit. Your belly's answer? What! The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye, The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier, Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter, With other muniments and petty helps In this other fabric, if that they,—

Men. What then?—

Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then? what then? [restrain'd

1 Cit. Should by the cormorant belly be Who is the sink o' the body,—

Men. Well, what then?

1 Cit. The former agents, if they did com-

What could the belly answer?

Men. I will tell you;

If you'll bestow a small,—of what you have little,—

Patience awhile, you'll hear the belly's answer

1 Cit. You are long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend;

Your most grave belly was deliberate, Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd: True is it, my incorporate friends, guoth he, That I receive the general food at first Which you do live upon; and fit it is, Because I am the storehouse and the shop Of the whole body: but, if you do remember, I send it through the rivers of your blood, Even to the court, the heart,—to the seat o' the brain;

And, through the cranks and offices of man, The strongest nerves and small inferior veins From me receive that natural competency Whereby they live: and though that all at once You, my good friends,—this says the belly,—mark me,—

1 Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. Though all at once cannot See what I do deliver out to each, Yet I can make my audit up, that all From me do back receive the flour of all, And leave me but the bran. What say you to't?

1 Cit. It was an answer: how apply you this?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,

And you the mutinous members: for, examine Their counsels and their cares; digest things rightly

Touching the weal o' the common; you shall find

No public benefit which you receive
But it proceeds or comes from them to you,
And no way from yourselves.—What do you think,
You, the great toe of this assembly?

i Cit. I the great toe? why the great toe?

Men. For that, being one o' the lowest,
basest, poorest,

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:
Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,
Lead'st first to win some vantage.—

But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs:
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle;
The one side must have bale.—

Enter CAIUS MARCIUS.

Hail, noble Marcius!

Mar. Thanks.—What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,

That, rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs?

i Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to ye will flatter [curs,

Beneath abhorring.—What would you have, you
That like nor peace nor war? The one affrights you, [you

The other makes you proud. He that trusts to Where he should find you lions finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese: you are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is [him,
To make him worthy whose offence subdues
And curse that justice did it. Who deserves greatness

Deserves your hate; and your affections are
A sick man's appetite, who desires most that
Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye!
Trust ye!

With every minute you do change a mind;
And call him noble that was now your hate,
Him vile that was your garland. What's the matter,

That in these several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another?—What's their seeking? [they say,

Men. For corn at their own rates; whereof,
The city is well stor'd.

Mar. Hang 'em! They say!
They'll sit by the fire and presume to know
What's done i' the Capitol; who's like to rise,
Who thrives and who declines; side factions,
and give out

Conjectural marriages; making parties strong,
And feeling such as stand not in their liking Below their cobbled shoes. They say there's grain enough!

Would the nobility lay aside their ruth
And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
As I could pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded;

For though abundantly they lack discretion,

Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech
you,

What says the other troop?

Mar. They are dissolved: hang 'em!
They said they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth
proverbs,— [leat,

That hunger broke stone walls, that dogs must
That meat was made for mouths, that the gods sent not

Corn for the rich men only:—with these shreds
They vented their complainings; which being answer'd,

And a petition granted them,—a strange one,
To break the heart of generosity,
And make bold power look pale,—they threw their caps [moon,

As they would hang them on the horns o' the Shouting their emulation.

Men. What is granted them?

Mar. Five tribunes, to defend their vulgar wisdoms,

Of their own choice: one's Junius Brutus,
Sicinius Velutus, and I know not.—[Death!

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city
Ere so prevail'd with me: it will in time Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes

For insurrection's arguing.

Men. This is strange.

Mar. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger, hastily.

Mess. Where's Caius Marcius?

Mar. Here: what's the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, that Volscres are in arms. [to vent

Mar. I am glad on't: then we shall ha' means
Our musty superfluity.—See, our best elders.

Enter COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, and other Senators; JUNIUS BRUTUS and SICINIUS VELUTUS.

i Sen. Marcius, 'tis true that you have lately told us,—

The Volscres are in arms.

Mar. They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to't.

I sin in envying his nobility;

And were I anything but what I am,

I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.

Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears, and he

Upon my party, I'd revolt, to make

Only my wars with him: he is a lion

That I am proud to hunt.

i Sen. Then, worthy Marcius,

Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is;

And I am constant.—Titus Lartius, thou

Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face.

What, art thou stiff? stand'st out?

Tit. No, Caius Marcius;

I'll lean upon one crutch and fight with the other

Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true bred!

1 Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where
I know,
Our greatest friends attend us.

Tit. Lead you on:
Follow, Cominius; we must follow you;
Right worthy your priority.

Com. Noble Marcius!

1 Sen. Hence to your homes; be gone!

[To the Citizens.

Mar. Nay, let them follow:
The Volscres have much corn; take these rats
thither

To gnaw their garners.—Worshipful mutineers,
Your valour puts well forth: pray, follow.

[Exeunt Senators, COM., MAR., TIT., and MENEN. Citizens steal away.

Sic. Was ever man so proud as this Marcius?

Bru. He has no equal. [people,—

Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for the Bru. Mark'd you his lip and eyes?

Sic. Nay, but his taunts.

Bru. Being mov'd, he will ot spare to gird
the gods.

Sic. Be-mock the modest moon.

Bru. The present wars devour him: he is grown

Too proud to be so valiant.

Sic. Such a nature,
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which he treads on at noon: but I do wonder
His insolence can brook to be commanded
Under Cominius.

Bru. Fame, at the which he aims,—
In whom already he is well grac'd,—cannot Better be held, nor more attain'd, than by
A place below the first: for what muscarries
Shall be the general's fault though he perform
To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure
Will then cry out of Marcius, O, if he Had borne the business!

Sic. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Bru. Come:
Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius, Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults

To Marcius shall be honours, though, indeed,
In aught he merit not.

Sic. Let's hence, and hear
How the despatch is made; and in what fashion,
More than in singularity, he goes
Upon this present action.

Bru. Let's along.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—CORIOL. The Senate House.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS and certain Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,
And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?

What ever hath been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome
Had circumvention! 'Tis not four days gone Since I heard thence: these are the words: I think

I have the letter here; yes here it is: [Reads.
They have press'd power, but it is not known

Whether for east or west: the dearth is great;
The people mutinous: and it is rumour'd,
Cominius, Marcius your old enemy,—
Who is of Rome worse hated than of you,—
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three lead on this preparation
Whither 'tis bent: most likely 'tis for you:
Consider of it.

1 Sen. Our army's in the field:
We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly
To keep your great pretences veil'd till when They needs must show themselves; which in the hatching,

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery
We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was,
To take in many towns ere, almost, Rome
Should know we were afoot.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius,
Take your commission; hie you to your hands:
Let us alone to guard Corioli:
If they set down before's, for the remove Bring up your army; but I think you'll find They've not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O, doubt not that;
I speak from certainties. Nay, more,
Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,
'Tis sworn between us we shall ever strike
Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you!
Auf. And keep your honours safe!

1 Sen. Farewell.

2 Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—ROME. An Apartment in MARCUS' House.

Enter VOLUMNIA and VIRGILIA: they sit down on two low stools and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing, or express yourself in a more comfortable sort: if my son were my husband, I should freer rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour than in the embracements of his bed where he would show most love. When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way; when, for a day of king's entreaties, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I,—considering how honour would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall if renown made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam?
how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue.
Hear me profess sincerely,—had I a dozen sons, each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius, I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire
Vol. Indeed you shall not.

Met. I hear hither your husband's drum;
See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair;
As children from a bear, the Volscies shunning him:

Met. I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—
Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear
Though you were born in Rome: his bloody brow
With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes,
Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O Jupiter, no blood!

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man

Than gilt his trophy: the breasts of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending.—Tell Valeria
We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gent.]

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!
Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee,
And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with VALERIA and her Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good-day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see the swords and hear a drum than look upon his schoolmaster.

Val. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how 'twas, he did so set his teeth and tear it; O, I warrant, how he marmocked it!

Vol. One on's father's moods.

Val. Indeed, la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack, madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle housewife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Val. Not out of doors!

Vol. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience; I'll not over the threshold till my lord return from the wars.

Val. Fie, you confine yourself most unreasonably; come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Val. You would be another Penelope: yet they say all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come; I would your cambric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity.—Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed I will not forth.

Val. In truth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Volscies have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord and Titus Lartius are set down before their city Corioli, they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in everything hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think she would.—Fare you well, then.—Come, good sweet lady.—Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed I must not. I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then, farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Enter, with drums and colours, MARCIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Officers, and Soldiers.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—a wager they have met.

Lart. My horse to yours, no.

Mar.

'Tis done.

Lart.

Agreed.

Enter a Messenger.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy?

Mess. They lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

Lart. So, the good horse is mine.

Mar.

I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll nor sell nor give him: lend you him I will

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their 'larum, and they ours.—

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work,
That we with smoking swords may march from hence
To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy

They sound a parley. Enter, on the Walls, some Senators and others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls? [he, 1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums

Are bringing forth our youth! we'll break our
walls,
Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates,
Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;
They'll open of themselves. Hark you far off!
[Alarum afar off.
There is Aufidius; list what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it!
Lart. Their noise be our instruction.—
Ladders, ho!

The Volscies enter and pass over.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city. [fight
Now put your shields before your hearts, and
With hearts more proof than shields.—Advance, brave Titus:
They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,
Which makes me sweat with wrath.—Come on, my fellows:
He that retires I'll take him for a Volscie,
And he shall feel mine edge.

Alarums, and exeunt Romans and Volscies fighting. The Romans are beaten back to their trenches. Re-enter MARCIUS.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you, [plagues
You shames of Rome!—you herd of—Boils and Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhorr'd
Further than seen, and one infect another
Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese,
That bear the shapes of men, how have you run [and hell!
From slaves that apes would beat! Pluto
All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale
With flight and agued fear! Mend, and charge
home,
Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe
And make my wars on you: look to't: come on;
If you'll stand fast we'll beat them to their wives,
As they us to our trenches followed.

Another alarum. The Volscies and Romans re-enter, and the fight is renewed. The Volscies retire into Corioli, and MARCIUS follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are open:—now prove good seconds:
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like.

[He enters the gates.

1 Sol. Fool-hardiness: not I.

2 Sol. Nor I.

[MARCIUS is shut in.

1 Sol. See, they have shut him in.

All. To the pot, I warrant him.
[Alarum continues.

Re-enter TITUS LARTIUS.

Lart. What is become of Marcius?

All. Slain, sir, doubtless.

1 Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels.
With them he enters; who, upon the sudden,
Clapp'd to their gates: he is himself alone,
To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow!
Who, sensible, outdares his senseless sword,
And when it bows stand up! Thou art left,

Marcus:

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art,
Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes; but with thy grim looks and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous and did tremble.

Re-enter MARCIUS, bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

1 Sol. Look, sir.

Lart. O, 'tis Marcius!
Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.

[They fight, and all enter the city.

SCENE V.—Within CORIOLI. A Street.

Enter certain Romans, with spoils.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome.

2 Rom. And I this.

3 Rom. A murrain on't! I took this for silver, [Alarum continues still afar off.

Enter MARCIUS and TITUS LARTIUS with a trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers that do prize their hours

At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons
Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves, [with them!—

Ere yet the fight be done, pack up!—down
And hark, what noise the general makes!—To
him!—

There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans: then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city;
Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste

To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st;
Thy exercise hath been too violent for
A second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not;
My work hath yet not warm'd me: fare you
well:

The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: to Aufidius thus
I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms [man,

Misguide thy opposers' swords! Bold gentle-
Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest!—So farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius!—

[Exit MARCIUS.

Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;
Call thither all the officers o' the town,
Where they shall know our mind: away!

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Near the Camp of COMINIUS.

Enter COMINIUS and Forces, retreating.

Com. Breathe you, my friends: well fought; we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands
Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,

By interims and conveying gusts we have heard
The charges of our friends. Ye Roman gods,
Lead their successes as we wish our own,
That both our powers, with smiling fronts
encountering,
May give you thankful sacrifice!—

Enter a Messenger.

Thy news?

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued,
And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
I saw our party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth,
Methinks thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'Tis not a mule; briefly we heard their
drums:

How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour,
And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volsces
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir,
Half an hour since brought my report.

Com. Who's yonder,
That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods!
He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. [Within.] Come I too late?

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor
More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
From every meaner man.

Enter MARCIUS.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,

But mantled in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip you
In arms as sound as when I woo'd; in heart
As merry as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burn'd to bedward!

Com. Flower of warriors,
How is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees:
Condemning some to death and some to exile;
Ransoming him or pitying, threat'ning the
other;

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave Which told me they had beat you to your trenches?

Where's he? call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone;
He did inform the truth: but for our gentlemen,

The common file,—a plague!—tribunes for
them!—

The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat as they did
From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you?

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not think.

Where is the enemy? are you lords o' the field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcius,

We have at disadvantage fought, and did

Retire, to win our purpose.

Mar. How lies their battle? know you on which side

They have placed their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcius,

Their bands in the vaward are the Antiates,

Of their best trust; o'er them Aufidius,

Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,

By all the battles wherein we have fought,

By the blood we have shed together, by the
vows

We have made to endure friends, that you directly

Set me against Aufidius and his Antiates;

And that you not delay the present, but,

Filling the air with swords advanc'd and darts,
We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish

You were conducted to a gentler bath,

And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking: take your choice of those

That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they

That most are willing.—If any such be here,—

As it were sin to doubt,—that love this painting

Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear

Lesser his person than an ill report;

If any think brave death outweighs bad life,

And that his country's dearer than himself;

Let him alone, or so many so minded,

Wave thus [waving his hand], to express his disposition,

And follow Marcius.

[They all shout, and wave their swords; take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.

O, me alone! make you a sword of me?

If these shows be not outward, which of you

But is four Volscies? none of you but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius

A shield as hard as his. A certain number,

Though thanks to all, must I select from all:
the rest

Shall bear the business in some other fight,

As cause will be obey'd. Please you to march;

And four shall quickly draw out my command,

Which men are best inclin'd.

Com.

March on, my fellows:
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

TITUS LARTIUS, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with drum and trumpet towards COMINIUS and CAIUS MARCIUS, enters with a
Lieutenant, a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So, let the ports be guarded: keep your duties

As I have set them down. If I do send, despatch

Those centuries to our aid; the rest will serve
For a short holding: if we lose the field
We cannot keep the town.

Lieut. Fear not our care, sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon's.—
Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volscian Camps.

Alarum. Enter, from opposite sides, MARCIUS and AUFIDIUS.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee

Worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike:
Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor
More than thy fame and envy. Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after!

Auf. If I fly, Marcius, Halloo me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus, Alone I fought in your Corioli walls, [blood
And made what work I pleas'd: 'tis not my Wherein thou seest me mask'd; for thy revenge
Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector That was the whip of your bragg'd progeny,
Thou shouldst not scape me here.—

[They fight, and certain Volscies come to the aid of AUFIDIUS.]

Officious, and not valiant,—you have sham'd me
In your condemned seconds.

[Exeunt fighting, driven in by MAR.]

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

Alarum. A retreat is sounded. Flourish.
Enter, at one side, COMINIUS and Romans at the other side, MARCIUS, with his arm in a scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,

Thou'lt not believe thy deeds: but I'll report it
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles;
Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,
I' the end admire; where ladies shall be frightened,

And, gladly quak'd, hear more; where the dull tribunes,
That, with the fusty plebeians, hate thine honours,

Shall say, against their hearts, *We thank the gods
Our Rome hath such a soldier!*
Yet can'st thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS, with his power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison:
Hadst thou beheld,—

Mar. Pray now, no more; my mother, Who has a charter to extol her blood, [done
When she does praise me grieves me. I have As you have done,—that's what I can; induc'd
As you have been,—that's for my country:
He that has but effected his good will
Hath overtaken mine act.

Com. You shall not be The grave of your deserving; Rome must know
The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings; and to silence that
Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest: therefore, I beseech you,—

In sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done,—before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart

To hear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not, Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses,— [of all

Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store,—
The treasure in this field achiev'd and city,
We render you the tenth; to be ta'en forth
Before the common distribution at Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general; But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[A long flourish. They all cry, "Marcius! Marcius!" cast up their caps and lances: COMINIUS and LARTIUS stand bare.]

Mar. May these same instruments which you profane [shall Never sound more! When drums and trumpets
I' the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities
Be made all of false-fac'd soothing!
When steel grows soft as the parasite's silk,
Let him be made a coverture for the wars!
No more, I say! for that I have not wash'd
My nose that bled, or foil'd some debile wretch,—

Which, without note, here's many else have done,—

You shout me forth in acclamations hyperbolical;

As if I loved my little should be dieted
In praises sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you; More cruel to your good report than grateful
To us that give you truly: by your patience,
If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you,— [manacles,

Like one that means his proper harm,—in
Then reason safely with you.—Therefore be it known,

As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcius Wears this war's garland: in token of the which,

My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging; and from this time,
For wot he did before Corioli, call him,
With all the applause and clamour of the host,
CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS.—

Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums.]

All. Caius Marcius Coriolanus!

Cor. I will go wash;

And when my face is fair you shall perceive
Whether I blush or no: howbeit, I thank you.—
I mean to stride your steed; and at all times
To undercrest your good addition
To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent;

Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius, Must to Corioli back: send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulate,
For their own good and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I, that now
Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take't: 'tis yours.—What is't?

Cor. I sometime lay here in Corioli
At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly:
He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;
But then Aufidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd!

Were he the butcher of my son he should

Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus

Lart. Marcius, his name?

Cor. By Jupiter, forgot:—

I am weary; yea, my memory is tur'd.—

Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent:

The blood upon your visage dries; 'tis time

It should be look'd to: come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—The Camp of the Volsces.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

Auf. The town is ta'en! [dition.]

1 Sol. 'Twill be deliver'd back on good con-

Auf. Condition!

I would I were a Roman; for I cannot,

Being a Volscie, be that I am.—Condition!

What good condition can a treaty find

I' the part that is at mercy?—Five times,

Marcius, [beat me;]

I have fought with thee; so often hast thou

And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter

As often as we eat.—By the elements,

If e'er again I meet him heard to beard,

He's mine or I am his: mine emulation

Hath not that honour in't it had; for where

I thought to crush him in an equal force,—

True sword to sword,—I'll potch at him some

way,

Or wrath or craft may get him.

1 Sol. He's the devil.

Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle. My valour's poisoned

With only suffering stain by him; for him

Shall fly out of itself: nor sleep nor sanctuary,

Being naked, sick; nor fane nor Capitol,

The prayers of priests nor times of sacrifice,

Embarquements all on fury, shall lift up

Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst

My hate to Marcius: where I find him, were it

At home, upon my brother's guard, even there,
Against the hospitable canon, would I

Wash my fierce hand in's heart. Go you to the city; [must]

Learn how 'tis held; and what they are that

Be hostages for Rome.

1 Sol. Will not you go?

Auf. I am attended at the cypress grove:

I pray you,— [thither]

'Tis south the city mills,—bring me word

How the world goes, that to the pace of it

I may spur on my journey.

1 Sol. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—ROME. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, SICINIUS, and BRUTUS.

Men. The augurer tells me we shall have news tonight.

Bru. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcius.

Bru. He's a lamb indeed, that baas like a bear.

Men. He's a bear indeed, that lives like a lamb. You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He's poor in no one fault, but stored with all.

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now: do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us o' the right-hand file? Do you?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now,—will you not be angry?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 'tis no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you in being so. You blame Marcius for being proud?

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can do very little alone;
for your helps are many, or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O that you could turn your eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O that you could!

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates,
—alias, fools,—as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough
too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tiber in't: said to be something imperfect in favouring the first complaint, hasty and tinder-like upon too trivial motion; one that converses more with the buttock of the night than with the forehead of the morning. What I think I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. Meeting two such wealsmen as you are,—I cannot call you Lycurguses,—if the drink you give me touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I cannot say your worshipps have delivered the matter well when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables; and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men, yet they lie deadily that tell you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follows it that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson conspectuties glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too? [enough.]

Bru. Come, sir, come, we know you well

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor anything. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs: you wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fosset-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of threepence to a second day of audience.—When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the colic, you make faces like mummings; set up the bloody flag against all patience; and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause is calling both the parties knaves. You are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table than a necessary bencher in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave as to stuff a botcher's cushion or to be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcius is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors since Deucalion; though peradventure some of the best of them were hereditary hangmen. God-den to your worshipps: more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsmen of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you.

[BRUTUS and SICINIUS retire.]

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, VALERIA, &c.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies,—and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler,—whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcius approaches; for the love of Juno let's go.

Men. Hal Marcius coming home!

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee.—Hoo! Marcius coming home!

Vol. Vir. Nay, 'tis true.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him: the state hath another, his wife another; and I think there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel tonight.—A letter for me? [I saw it.]

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you;

Men. A letter for me! It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiricotic, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded, I thank the gods for't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much.—Brings a victory in his pocket?—The wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows: Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes,—they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an he had stayed by him, I would not have been so fiduised for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go.—Yes, yes, yes; the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly. [of him.]

Vol. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke

Men. Wondrous! ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! pow, wow.

Men. True! I'll be sworn they are true.—Where is he wounded?—[To the Tribunes, who come forward.] God save your good worshipps! Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.—Where is he wounded?

Vol. P the shoulder and i' the left arm: there will be large cicatrices to show the people when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts i' the body.

Men. One i' the neck and two i' the thigh,—there's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave. [A shout and flourish.] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him

He carries noise, and behind him he leaves Death, that dark spirit, in's nery arm doth lie;

Which, being advanc'd, declines, and then men

A sennet. Trumpets sound. Enter COMINIUS and TITUS LARTIUS; between them, CORIOLANUS, crowned with an oaken garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight

Within Corioli gates: where he hath won,
With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these
In honour follows Coriolanus:—
Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

[Flourish.

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus! [heart]

Cor. No more of this, it does offend my Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother!

Cor. O,

You have, I know, petition'd all the gods
For my prosperity! [Kneels.

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up;

My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius, and

By deed-achieving honour newly nam'd,—

What is it?—Coriolanus must I call thee?

But, O, thy wife!

Cor. My gracious silence, hail!

Wouldst thou have laugh'd had I come coffin'd
home,

That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear,

Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear,

And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now the gods crown thee!

Cor. And live you yet?—O my sweet lady,
pardon. [To VALERIA.

Vol. I know not where to turn.—O, welcome home;— [all.

And welcome, general;—and you are welcome

Men. A hundred thousand welcomes.—I could weep [Welcome:

And I could laugh; I am light and heavy.—

A curse begin at very root on's heart

That is not glad to see thee!—You are three

That Rome should dote on: yet, by the faith of men, [will not

We have some old crab trees here at home that

Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors:

We call a nettle but a nettle; and

The faults of fools but folly.

Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on!

Cor. Your hand, and yours:

[To his wife and mother.

Ere in our own house I do shade my head,

The good patricians must be visited;

From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings,

But with them change of honours.

Vol. I have lived

To see inherited my very wishes,

And the buildings of my fancy: only [but

There's one thing wanting, which I doubt not

Our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother,

I had rather be their servant in my way

Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitol.

[Flourish. Cornets. Exeunt in state, as before. The Tribunes remain.

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights

Are spectacl'd to see him: your prattling nurse

Into a rapture lets her baby cry

While she chats him: the kitchen malkin pins

Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck,

Clambering the walls to eye him: stalls, bulks,

windows,

Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd

With variable complexions; all agreeing

In earnestness to see him: seld-shown flamens

Do press among the popular throngs, and puff

To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames

Commit the war of white and damask, in

Their nicely gawded cheeks, to the wanton spoil

Of Phoebus' burning kisses: such a pother,

As if that whatsoever god who leads him

Were shly crept into his human powers,

And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. On the sudden,

I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may,

During his power, go sleep. [honours

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his

From where he should begin and end; but will Lose those that he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not the commoners, for whom we

stand,

But they, upon their ancient malice, will forget,

With the least cause, these his new honours;

which

That he'll give them make as little question

As he is proud to do't.

Bru. I heard him swear,

Were he to stand for consul, never would he

Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put

The napless vesture of humility;

Nor, showing, as the manner is, his wounds

To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'Tis right.

Bru. It was his word: O, he would miss it rather

Than carry it but by the suit of the gentry to

And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better

Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it

In execution.

Bru. 'Tis most like he will.

Sic. It shall be to him then, as our good wills,

A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out

To him or our authorities. For an end,

We must suggest the people in what hatred

He still hath held them; that to's power he would

Have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders,

Dispropertied their freedoms: holding them,

In human action and capacity,

Of no more soul nor fitness for the world

Than camels in their war; who have their provand

Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows

For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say, suggested

At some time when his soaring insolence

Shall touch the people,—which time shall not want,

If it be put upon't; and that's as easy

As to set dogs on sheep,—will be his fire

To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze

Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru.

What's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'Tis

thought

That Marcius shall be consul: [and
I have seen the dumb men throng to see him,
The blind to hear him speak: matrons flung gloves,

Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchers,
Upon him as he pass'd: the nobles bended
As to Jove's statue; and the commons made A shower and thunder with their caps and shouts:

I never saw the like.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time,
But hearts for the event.

Sic. Have with you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ROME. The Capitol.

Enter two Officers, to lay cushions.

1 Off. Come, come; they are almost here,
How many stand for consulships?

2 Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it.

1 Off. That's a brave fellow; but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. Faith, there have been many great men that have flattered the people, who ne'er loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground: therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition; and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see't.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waded indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their opposite.
Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people is as bad as that which he dislikes,—to flatter them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country: and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonnetted, without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report: but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury; to report otherwise were a malice that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

1 Off. No more of him; he is a worthy man:
make way, they are coming.

*A Sennet. Enter, with Lictors before them,
COMINIUS the Consul, MENENIUS, CORIO-
LANUS, Senators, SICINIUS, and BRUTUS.
The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.*

Men. Having determin'd of the Volscs, and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains,
As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service that Hath thus stood for his country: therefore
please you,

Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present consul, and last general
In our well-found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Marcius Coriolanus; whom
We meet here, both to thank and to remember
With honours like himself.

1 Sen. Speak, good Cominius:
Leave nothing out for length, and make us
think

Rather our state's defective for requital
Than we to stretch it out.—Masters o' the
people,

We do request your kindest ears; and, after,
Your loving motion toward the common body,
To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are convented
Upon a pleasing treaty; and have hearts
Inclined to honour and advance
The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather
We shall be bless'd to do, if he remember
A kinder value of the people than
He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off;
I would you rather had been silent. Please
you

To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly:
But yet my caution was more pertinent
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bedfellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.

[CORIOLANUS rises, and offers to go away.]

1 Sen. Sit, Coriolanus; never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon:
I had rather have my wounds to heal again
Than hear say how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope
My words disbench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir; yet oft,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from
words.

You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not: but your
I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head
i' the sun

When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. [Exit.]

Men. Masters o' the people,
Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter,— That's thousand to one good one,—when you now see

He had rather venture all his limbs for honour
Than one on's ears to hear it?—Proceed,
Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Corio-
Should not be utter'd feebly.—It is held
That valour is the chiefest virtue, and Most dignifies the haver: if it be.

The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought

Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,

When with his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him: he bestrode
An o'erpress'd Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea;
And in the brunt of seventeen battles since
He hurch'd all swords of the garland. For this last,

Before and in Corioli, let me say,
I cannot speak him home: he stopp'd the fliers;
And by his rare example made the coward
Turn terror into sport: as weeds before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd,
And fell below his stem: his sword,—death's stamp,—

Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was timed with dying cries: alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny; adless came off,
And with a sudden re-enforcement struck
Corioli like a planet. Now all's his:
When, by and by, the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense then straight his doubled spirit
Re-quick'n'd what in flesh was fagbated,
And to the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men as if
'Twere a perpetual spoil: and till we call'd
Both field and city ours he never stood
To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man!

1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours

Which we devise him.

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at;
And look'd upon things precious as they were
The common muck of the world: he covets less
Than misery itself would give; rewards
His deeds with doing them; and is content
To spend the time to end it.

Men. He's right noble:

Let him be call'd for.

1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well
pleas'd

To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still

My life and services.

Men. It then remains

That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you

Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot

Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat
them,

For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage:
please you

That I may pass this doing.

Sic. Sir, the people
Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't:—
Pray you, go fit you to the custom; and Take to you, as your predecessors have,

Your honour with your form.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that?

Cor. To brag unto them,—thus I did, and thus;— [hide
Show them the unaching scars which I should
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only!—

Men. Do not stand upon't.—
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose to them;—and to our noble consul
Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!
[Flourish. Exeunt all but SIC. and BRU.

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sic. May they perceive's intent! He will requite them

As if he did contemn what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come, we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market-place
I know they do attend us. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—ROME. The Forum.

Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do:
for if he show us his wounds and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous: and for the multitude to be ungrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which we, being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve; for once we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured; and truly I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points o' the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way do you judge my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another's man's will,—'tis strongly wedged up in a block-head; but if it were at liberty, 'twould sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return, for conscience 'sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:—
you may, you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man. Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behaviour. We are not to stay altogether, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars, wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.
All. Content, content. [Exeunt.]

Enter CORIOLANUS and MENENIUS.

Men. O sir, you are not right; have you not known
 The worthiest men have done't!

Cor. What must I say?—
I pray, sir,—Plague upon't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace.—Look, sir,—my wounds;—

*I got them in my country's service, when
 Some certain of your brethern roar'd, and ran
 From the noise of our own drums.*

Men. O me, the gods!
 You must not speak of that: you must desire
 them

To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me! hang 'em!
 I would they would forget me, like the virtues
 Which our divines lose by 'em.

Men. You'll mar all
 I'll leave you. Pray you, speak to 'em, I pray
 you,
 In wholesome manner.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces
 And keep their teeth clean. [Exit MENENIUS.]
 So, here comes a brace:

Re-enter two Citizens.

You know the cause, sirs, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to't.

Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert!

Cor. Ay, not mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire!

Cor. No, sir, 'twas never my desire yet to trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you anything, we hope to gain by you. [consulship?]

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the 1 Cit. The price is to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly! sir, I pray, let me ha't: I have wounds to show you, which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice, sir; what say you?

2 Cit. You shall ha' it, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir.—There is in all two worthy voices begg'd.—I have your alms:
 adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An 'twere to give again,—but 'tis no matter. [Exeunt two Citizens.]

Re-enter other two Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices that I may be consul, I have here the customary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.

Cor. Your enigma?

3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends;
 you have not, indeed, loved the common
 people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother, the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them;
 'tis a condition they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly;
 that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment
 of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.

Cor. I will not seal your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily!
[Exeunt.]

Cor. Most sweet voices!—
 Better it is to die, better to starve,
 Than crave the hire which first we do deserve.
 Why in this wolfish toge should I stand here,
 To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
 Their needless vouches? Custom calls me
 to't:—

What custom wills, in all things should we do't,
 The dust on antique time would lie unswept,
 And mountainous error be too highly heap'd
 For truth to o'erpeer. Rather than fool it so,
 Let the high office and the honour go
 To one that would do thus.—I am half through;
 The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.
 Here come more voices.

Re-enter other three Citizens.

Your voices: for your voices I have fought;
 Watch'd for your voices; for your voices bear
 Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six
 I have seen and heard of; for your voices have Done many things, some less, some more: your voices:

Indeed, I would be consul.

5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.

6 Cit. Therefore let him be consul: the gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people!

All 3 Citizens. Amen, amen.—God save thee, noble consul! [Exeunt.]

Cor. Worthy voices!

Re-enter MENENIUS, with BRUTUS and SICINIUS.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice:—remains
 That, in the official marks invested, you
 Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have discharged:

The people do admit you; and are summon'd To meet anon, upon your approbation

Cer. Where? at the senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir.

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself again,

Repair to the senate-house. [along?]

Men. I'll keep you company.—Will you

Bru. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well.

[Exeunt. COR. and MEN.]

He has it now; and by his looks methinks

'Tis warm at his heart. [weeds.]

Bru. With a proud heart he wore his humble Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters! have you chose this man?

1 Cit. He has our voices, sir. [loves.]

Bru. We pray the gods he may deserve you

2 Cit. Amen, sir:—to my poor unworthy notice,

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices.

3 Cit. Certainly,

He flouted us downright.

1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech,—he did not mock us.

2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says

He us'd us scornfully: he should have show'd us His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for's country.

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.

Citizens. No, no; no man saw 'em.

3 Cit. He said he had wounds, which he could show in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
I would be consul, says he; aged custom,
But by your voices, will not so permit me;
Your voices therefore: when we granted that,
Here was, I thank you for your voices,—thank you,—

Your most sweet voices:—now you have left Your voices.

I have no further with you:—was not this mockery?

Sic. Why, either were you ignorant to see't? Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him,

As you were lesson'd,—when he had no power, But was a petty servant to the state,

He was your enemy; ever spake against

Your liberties, and the charters that you bear

I' the body of the weal: and now, arriving

A place of potency and sway o' the state,

If he should still malignantly remain

Fast foe to the plebeii, your voices might

Be curses to yourselves? You should have said,

That as his worthy deeds did claim no less

Than what he stood for, so his gracious nature

Would think upon you for your voices, and

Translate his malice towards you into love,

Standing your friendly lord.

Sic.

Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his spirit
And tried his inclination; from him pluck'd Either his gracious promise, which you might,
As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;
Or else it would have gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article
Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler,

And pass'd him unelected.

Bru.

Did you perceive
He did solicit you in free contempt

When he did need your loves; and do you think

That his contempt shall not be bruising to you

When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies [cry

No heart among you? Or had you tongues to

Against the rectorship of judgment?

Sic.

Have you
Ere now denied the asker? and now again,

On him that did not ask but mock, bestow

Your su'd-for tongues? [him yet.

3 Cit. He's not confirm'd; we may deny

2 Cit. And will deny him:

I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1 Cit. I twice five hundred, and their friends to piece 'em. [friends

Bru. Get you hence instantly; and tell those
They have chose a consul that will from them take

Their liberties; make them of no more voice

Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking

As therefore kept to do so.

Sic.

Let them assemble;

And, on a safer judgment, all revoke

Your ignorant election: enforce his pride

And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not

With what contempt he wore the humble weed;

How in his suit he scorn'd you: but your loves,

Thinking upon his services, took from you

The apprehension of his present portance,

Which, most gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion

After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru.

Lay
A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labour'd,—
No impediment between,—but that you must

Cast your election on him.

Sic.

Say you chose him
More after our commandment than as guided

By your own true affections; and that your minds,

Pre-occupied with what you rather must do

Than what you should, made you against the grain

To voice him consul. Lay the fault on us.

Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say we read lectures
to you,

How youngly he began to serve his country,

How long continued: and what stock he springs of— [came

The noble house o' the Marcians; from whence

That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son,

Who, after great Hostilius, here was king;

Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,

That our best water brought by conduits

hither;

And Cencorinus, darling of the people,

And nobly nam'd so, twice being censor,

Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances: but you have found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say you ne'er had done't,—
Harp on that still,—but by our putting on:
And presently when you have drawn your
number,

Repair to the Capitol.

Citizens. We will so; almost all Repeat in their election. [Exeunt.]

Bru. Let them go on;
This mutiny were better put in hazard
Than stay, past doubt, for greater:
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sic. To the Capitol,
Come: we will be there before the stream o'
the people;
And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,
Which we have goaded onward. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—ROME. A Street.

Cornets. Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

Cor. Tullus Aufidius, then, had made new head? [caus'd]

Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was which
Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then the Volces stand but as at first;
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road

Upon't again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul, so
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?
Lart. On safeguard he came to me; and did curse

Against the Volces, for they had so vilely
Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?

Lart. He did, my lord.

Cor. How? what?

Lart. How often he had met you, sword to
sword;

That of all things upon the earth he hated
Your person most; that he would pawn his fortunes

To hopeless restitution, so he might
Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?

Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hatred fully.—Welcome home.
[To LARTIUS.]

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' the common mouth. I do despise them;

For they do prank them in authority,
Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Bru. It will be dangerous to go on: no
further.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter? [commons?]

Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles and the Bru. Cominius, no.

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

1 Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place.

Bru. The people are incens'd against him.

Sic. Stop,

Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herd?—

Must these have voices, that can yield them now, [your offices?]

And straight disclaim their tongues?—What are You being their mouths, why rule you not their teeth?

Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot,

To curb the will of the nobility:
Suffer't, and live with such as cannot rule,
Nor ever will be rul'd.

Bru. Call't not a plot:

The people cry you mock'd them; and of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd;
Scandal'd the suppliants for the people,—call'd
them

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before

Bru. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Bru. How! I inform them!

Cor. You are like to do such business.

Bru. Not unlike,

Each way, to better yours.

Cor. Why, then, should I be consul? By yon clouds,

Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow tribune.

Sic. You show too much of that

For which the people stir: if you will pass
To where you are bound, you must inquire your way,

Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;

Or never be so noble as a consul,

Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abus'd; set on. This palt'ring

Becomes not Rome; not has Coriolanus
Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely
I' the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak't again,—

Men. Not now, not now.

1 Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My nobler
friends,

I crave their pardons:

For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them
Regard me as I do not flatter, and Therein behold themselves: I say again,
In soothing them we nourish 'gainst our senate

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd,
and scatter'd, [bers;
By mingling them with us, the honour'd num-
Who lack not virtue, no, nor power but that
Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

1 Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How! no more!

As for my country I have shed my blood,
Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs
Coin words till their decay against those measles
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought
The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak o' the people
As if you were a god to punish, not
A man of their infirmity.

Sic. 'Twere well

We let the people know't.

Men. What, what? his choler?

Cor. Choler!

Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Jove, 'twould be my mind!

Sic. It is a mind

That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.

Cor. Shall remain!—

Hear you this Triton of the minnows? mark you
His absolute shall?

Com. 'Twas from the canon.

Cor. Shall!

O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus
Given Hydra leave to choose an officer,
That with his peremptory shall, being but
The horn and noise o' the monster, wants not spirit

To say he'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? If he have power,
Then vail your ignorance: if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. If you are learn'd
Be not as common fools; if you are not, Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians

If they be senators: and they are no less
When, both your voices blended, the great'st taste [trate;

Most palates theirs. They choose their magis-
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. By Jove himself,
It makes the consuls base: and my soul aches
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
The one by the other.

Com. Well, on to the market-place.

Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth
The corn o' the storehouse gratis, as 'twas us'd
Sometime in Greece,—

Men. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. Though there the people had more absolute power,—

I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why, shall the people give
One that speaks thus their voice?

Cor. I'll give my reasons,
More worthier than their voices. They know the corn

Was not our recompense, resting well assur'd
They ne'er did service for't: being press'd to the war,

Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates,—this kind of service

Did not deserve corn gratis: being i' the war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
Most valour, spoke not for them. The accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,
All cause unborn, could never be the motive
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then?
How shall this bisson multitude digest
The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express What's like to be their words:—We did request
it;

We are the greater poll, and in true fear
They gave us our demands—thus we debase
The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares fears: which will in time
Break open the locks o' the senate, and bring in
The crows to peck the eagles.—

Men. Come, enough.

Bru. Enough, with over-measure.

Cor. No, take more:
What may be sworn by, both divine and human,
Seal what I end withal!—This double worship,—

Where one part does disdain with cause, the other [wisdom,

Insult without all reason; where gentry, title,
Cannot conclude but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance,—it must omit
Real necessities, and give way the while
To unstable slightness: purpose so barr'd, it follows, [you,—

Nothing is done to purpose. Therefore, beseech
You that will be less fearful than discreet;
That love the fundamental part of state
More than you doubt the change on't, that prefer

A noble life before a long, and wish
To vamp a body with a dangerous physic
That's sure of death without it,—at once pluck
out

The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become't;
Not having the power to do the good it would,
For the ill which doth control't.

Bru. Has said enough.

Sic. Has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer

As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch despite o'erwhelm thee!—
What should the people do with these bald
tribunes?

On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench: in a rebellion, [law,
When what's not meet, but what must be, was
Then were they chosen; in a better hour
Let what is meet be said it must be meet,
And throw their power i' the dust.

Bru. Manifest treason.

Sic. This a consul? no.

Bru. The aediles, ho!—Let him be apprehended. [whose name myself

Sic. Go, call the people [Exit BRUTUS];—in Attach thee as a traitorous innovator,

A foe to the public weal. Obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Sen. and Pat. We'll surely him.

Com. Aged sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing! or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments.

Sic. Help, ye citizens!

Re-enter BRUTUS, with the Ædiles and a rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here's he that would take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, ædiles.

Citizens. Down with him! down with him!

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons!

[They all bustle about CORIOLANUS

Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what, ho!—
Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Citizens. Peace, peace, peace; stay, hold,
peace!

Men. What is about to be?—I am out of
breath;

Confusion's near; I cannot speak.—You tri-
To the people,—Coriolanus, patience:—

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me, people; peace!

Citizens. Let's hear our tribune: peace!—

Speak, speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:
Marcus would have all from you; Marcius,
Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fie, fie, fie!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

1 Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.

Sic. What is the city but the people?

Citizens. True,

The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were estab-lish'd

The people's magistrates.

Cit. You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Cor. That is the way to lay the city flat;
To bring the roof to the foundation,
And bury all which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death.

Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,
Or let us lose it.—We do here pronounce,
Upon the part o' the people, in whose power
We were elected theirs, Marcius is worthy
Of present death.

Sic. Therefore lay hold of him;
Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence
Into destruction cast him.

Bru. Ædiles, seize him!

Citizens. Yield, Marcus, yield!

Men. Hear me one word;

Beseech you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Æd. Peace, peace! [friends,

Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's
And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.

Bru. Sir, those cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poison-

Where the disease is violent.—Lay hands upon
him,

And bear him to the rock.

Cor. No, I'll die here.

[Draws his sword.]

There's some among you have beheld me fighting;

Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me.

Men. Down with that sword!—Tribunes, withdraw awhile.

Bru. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Help Marcius, help,

You that be noble, help him, young and old!

Citizens. Down with him, down with him!

[In this mutiny the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and the People are beat in.]

Men. Go, get you to your house, be gone, away!

All will be naught else.

2 Sen. Get you gone.

Cor. Stand fast;

We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

1 Sen. The gods forbid!

I pry'thee, noble friend, home to thy house,
Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 'tis a sore upon us,

You cannot tent yourself. be gone, beseech
you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us. [are,

Cor. I would they were barbarians,—as they Though in Rome hither'd,—not Romans,—as they are not,

Though calv'd i' the porch o' the Capitol,—

Men. Be gone,

Put not your worthy rage into your tongue;

One time will owe another.

Cor. On fair ground

I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself

Take up a brace o' the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic;
And manhood is call'd foolery when it stands

Against a falling fabric.—Will you hence,

Before the tag return? whose rage doth rend

Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear

What they are used to bear.

Men. Pray you, be gone:

I'll try whether my old wit be in request

With those that have but little: this must be patch'd

With cloth of any colour.

Com. Nay, come away.

[Exeunt COR., COM., and others.]

1 Pat. This man has marr'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the world:

He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,

Or Jove for's power to thunder. His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;

And, being angry, does forget that ever

He heard the name of death. [A noise within.]

Here's goodly work!

2 Pat. I would they were a-bed!

Men. I would they were in Tiber! What,

the vengeance,

Could he not speak 'em fair?

Re-enter BRUTUS and SICINIUS, with the rabble.

Sic. Where is this viper
That would depopulate the city and
Be every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes,—

Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands: he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of the public power,
Which he so sets at naught.

i Cit. He shall well know
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands.

Citizens. He shall, sure on't.

Men. Sir, sir,—

Sic. Peace!

Men. Do not cry havoc, where you should but hunt
With modest warrant.

Sic. Sir, how comes't that you
Have help to make this rescue?

Men. Hear me speak:—
As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults,—

Sic. Consul!—what consul?

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Bru. He consul!

Citizens. No, no, no, no, no.

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours,
good people,
I may be heard, I would crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm
Than so much loss of time.

Sic. Speak briefly, then;
For we are peremptory to despatch
This viperous traitor: to eject him hence
Were but one danger; and to keep him here
Our certain death: therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her deserved children is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own!

Sic. He's a disease that must be cut away.

Men. O, he's a limb that has but a disease;
Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.
What has he done to Rome that's worthy death?
Killing our enemies, the blood he hath lost,—
Which I dare vouch is more than that he hath
By many an ounce,—he dropt it for his country;
And what is left, to lose it by his country
Were to us all, that do't and suffer it,
A brand to the end o' the world.

Sic. This is clean kam.

Bru. Merely awry: when he did love his country,
It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot,
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was.

Bru. We'll hear no more.—
Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence;
Lest his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread further.

Men. One word more, one word.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find

The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will, too late, Tie leaden pounds to his heels. Proceed by process;

Lest parties,—as he is belov'd,—break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans.

Bru. If it were so,—

Sic. What do you talk?
Have we not had a taste of his obedience?

Our ædiles smote? ourselves resisted?—
come,—

Men. Consider this:—he has been bred i' the wars

Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In bolted language; meal and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
In peace, to his utmost peril.

i Sen. Noble tribunes,

It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody; and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer.—
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.

Sic. Meet on the market-place.—We'll attend you there:

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you.—

[To the Senators.] Let me desire your company:
he must come,

Or what is worst will follow.

i Sen. Pray you, let's to him.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ROME. A Room in CORIOLANUS'S
House.

Enter CORIOLANUS and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears;
present me
Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight; yet will I still Be thus to them.

i Pat. You do the nobler.

Cor. I muse my mother.
Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats; to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance stood up
To speak of peace or war.

Enter VOLUMNIA.

I talk of you: [To VOLUMNIA.]
Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me
False to my nature? Rather say, I play
The man I am.

Vol. O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go. [you are
Vol. You might have been enough the man
With striving less to be so: lesser had been

The thwartings of your dispositions if
You had not show'd them how ye were dispos'd
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.
Vol. Ay, and burn too.

Enter MENENIUS and Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough,
something too rough,
You must return and mend it.

1 Sen. There's no remedy,
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the mudst, and perish.

Vol. Pray, be counsell'd;
I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain that leads my use of anger
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman!
Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but that
The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic
For the whole state, I would put mine armour
on,

Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well, what then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them?—I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;
Though therein you can never be too noble
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,

Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' the war do grow together: grant that, and tell me

In peace what each of them by th' other lose
That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour in your wars to seem
The same you are not,—which for your best ends
You adopt your policy,—how is it less or worse
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour as in war; since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts
you,

But with such words that are but rooted in
Your tongue, though but bastards, and syllables
Of no allowance, to your bosom's truth,
Now, this no more dishonours you at all
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune and
The hazard of much blood.

I would dissemble with my nature where
My fortunes and my friends at stake requir'd
I should do so in honour: I am in this

Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;
And you will rather show our general louts
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon
'em

For the inheritance of their loves and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!—
Come, go with us; speak fair: you may salve so,

Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I prythee now, my son,
Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it,—here be with
them,—

Thy knee bussing the stones,—for in such Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears,—waving thy head,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble as the ripest mulberry
That will not hold the handling: or say to them Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,

Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use, as they do claim,
In asking their good loves, but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power and person.

Men. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were
yours:

For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol. Prythee now,
Go, and be rul'd: although I know thou had'st
rather

Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf
Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. I have been i' the market-place; and,
sir, 'tis fit

You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness or by absence: all's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. I think 'twill serve, if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will.—

Prythee now, say you will, and go about it.
Cor. Must I go show them my unbarb'd sconce? must I,

With my base tongue, give to my noble heart
A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do't:
Yet, were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marc'us, they to dust should grind it,

And throw't against the wind.—To the market-
You have put me now to such a part which never

I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.
Vol. I prythee now, sweet son,—as thou hast said

My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't:
Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd,

Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lull asleep! the smiles of knaves
Tent in my cheeks; and school-boys' tears take up

The glasses of my sight! a beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd knees,

Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't;
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth,
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice, then:
To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin, let Thy mother rather feel thy pride than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy vallantness was mine, thou suck'dst it
from me;

But owe thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content:
Mother, I am going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves, [belov'd]
Cog their hearts from them, and come home
Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going Commend me to my wife. I'll return consul
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I the way of flattery further.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit.]
Com. Away! the tribunes do attend you arm yourself

To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is, mildly.—Pray you, let us
go:

Let them accuse me by invention, I
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.
Cor. Well, mildly be it then; mildly.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—ROME. The Forum.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects
Tyrannical power: if he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people;
And that the spoil got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed.

Enter an Ædile.

What, will he come?

Æd. He's coming.

Bru. How accompanied?
Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favour'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd,
Set down by the poll?

Æd. I have; 'tis ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither:
And when they hear me say, It shall be so
P the right and strength o' the commons, be it either [them,

For death, for fine, or banishment, then let
If I say fine, cry Fine,—if death, cry Death;
Insisting on the old prerogative
And power i' the truth o' the cause.

Æd. I shall inform them.

Bru. And when such time they have begun to cry,

Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.

Æd. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint,

When we shall hap to give't them.

Bru. Go about it.—

[Exit Ædile.]

Put him to choler straight: he hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth
Of contradiction: being once chaf'd, he cannot Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart; and that is there which looks

With us to break his neck.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS
Senators, and Patricians.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece [honour'd gods]
Will bear the knave by the volume.—The
Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supplied with worthy men! plant love among'st!
Throng our large temples with the shows of
peace,

And not our streets with war!

i Sen. Amen, amen!

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter Ædile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people. [I say!]

Æd. List to your tribunes; audience: peace.

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Tri. Well, say,—Peace, ho!

Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this present?

Must all determine here?

Sic. I do demand,

If you submit you to the people's voices,

Allow their officers, and are content

To suffer lawful censure for such faults

As shall be proved upon you?

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says he is content:

The warlike service he has done, consider;
think [like]

Upon the wounds his body bears, which show
Graves i' the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with briers,
Scars to move laughter only.

Men. Consider further,

That when he speaks not like a citizen,

You find him like a soldier: do not take

His rougher accents for malicious sounds,

But, as I say, such as become a soldier,

Rather than envy you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter,

That being pass'd for consul with full voice,

I am so dishonour'd that the very hour

You take it off again?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 'tis true, I ought so.

Sic. We charge you that you have contriv'd to take

From Rome all season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;

For which you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How! traitor!

Men. Nay, temperately; your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the people!

Call me their traitor!—Thou injurious tribune!
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,
Thou liest unto thee, with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?

Citizens. To the rock, to the rock with him!

Sic. Peace!

We need not put new matter to his charge:

What you have seen him do and heard him
speak,

Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even
this,

So criminal, and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath Serv'd well for Rome,—

Cor. What do you prate of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You?

[mother?]

Men. Is this the promise that you made your
Com. Know, I pray you,—

Cor. I'll know no further:

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flogging, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word,
Nor check my courage for what they can give,
To have't with saying Good-morrow.

Sic. For that he has,—
As much as in him lies,—from time to time
Envied against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power; as now at last Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence

Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it;—in the name o' the
people,

And in the power of us the tribunes, we,
Even from this instant, banish him our city;
In peril of precipitation

From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates: i' the people's name,
I say it shall be so. [him away:]

Citizens. It shall be so, it shall be so; let He's banished, and it shall be so.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common
friends,—

Sic. He's sentenc'd; no more hearing.

Com. Let me speak:
I have been consul, and can show for Rome
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
And treasure of my loins; then if I would Speak that,—

Sic. We know your drift. Speak what?

Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd,

As enemy to the people and his country:
It shall be so.

Citizens. It shall be so, it shall be so.

Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath
I hate

As reek o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air,—I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till at length
Your ignorance,—which finds not till it feels,— Making not reservation of yourselves,—
Still your own foes,—deliver you, as most Abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt COR., COM., MEN., Senators, and Patricians.]

Ed. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!

Citizens. Our enemy is banish'd! he is gone!
Hoo! hoo!

[Shouting, and throwing up their caps.]

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow
him,

As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city. [gates; come.]

Citizens. Come, come, let us see him out at
The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come.
[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—ROME. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA,
MENENIUS, COMINIUS, and several young
Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell:—the beast

With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear;
That when the sea was calm all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded,
craves

A noble cunning: you were us'd to load me
With precepts that would make invincible
The heart that can't them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I prythee, woman,—

Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades
in Rome,
And occupations perish!

Cor. What, what, what!

I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother,
Resume that spirit when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius, Droop not; adieu.—Farewell, my wife,—my mother:

I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,

And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime general,

I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hard'ning spectacles; tell these sad women

'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes, As 'tis to laugh at 'em.—My mother, you wot well

My hazards still have been your solace: and Believe't not lightly,—though I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon, that is fenn Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen,— your son

Will or exceed the common or be caught With cautelous baits and practice.

Vol. My first son, Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius With thee awhile: determine on some course More than a wild exposure to each chance That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!

Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee

Where thou shalt rest, that thou mayst hear of us,

And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man; And lose advantage, which doth ever cool I' the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well: Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full Of the wars' surfeits to go rove with one That's yet unbru'd: bring me but out at gate.—

Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and My friends of noble touch; when I am forth, Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come. While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily As any ear can hear.—Come, let's not weep.— If I could shake off but one seven years From these old arms and legs, by the good gods, I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand:—
Come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ROME. A Street near the Gate.

Enter SICINIUS, BRUTUS, and an Ædile.

Sic. Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further.— The nobility are vex'd, whom we see have sided In his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shown our power, Let us seem humbler after it is done Than when it was a-doing.

Sic. Bid them home: Say their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dismiss them home. [Exit Ædile.]

Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.
Bru. Why?
Sic. They say she's mad. [your way.]
Bru. They have ta'en note of us: keep on

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and MENENIUS

Vol. O, you're well met: the hoarded plague o' the gods Requite your love!

Men. Peace, peace, be not so loud.
Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear,—

Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone?

Vir. You shall stay too [To BRUTUS.] I would I had the power To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind?
Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame?—Note but this fool.—

Was not a man my father? Hadst thou foxship To banish him that struck more blows for Rome Than thou hast spoken words?—

Sic. O blessed heavens!
Vol. More noble blows than ever thou wise words;

And for Rome's good.—I'll tell thee what;— yet go;—

Nay, but thou shalt stay too:—I would my son Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him, His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then?
Vir. What then!

He'd make an end of thy posterity.
Vol. Bastards and all.— [Rome!]

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Men. Come, come, peace.

Sic. I would he had continu'd to his country As he began, and not unknit himself The noble knot he made.

Bru. I would he had.
Vol. I would he had! 'Twas you incens'd the rabble;—

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth As I can of those mysteries which heaven Will not have earth to know.

Bru. Pray, let us go.
Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone:

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear this,—

As far as doth the Capitol exceed The meanest house in Rome, so far my son,— This lady's husband here; thus, do you see?— Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Bru. Well, well, we'll leave you.
Sic. Why stay we to be baited With one that wants her wits?

Vol. Take my prayers with you.— I would the gods had nothing else to do

But to confirm my curses! Could I meet 'em But once a day, it would unclog my heart Of what lies heavy to't.

Men. You have told them home, And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup with me?

Vol. Anger's my meat; I sup upon myself, And so shall starve with feeding.—Come, let's go:

Leave this faint puling, and lament as I do, In anger, Juno-like. Come, come, come.

Men. Fie, fie, fie! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A Highway between Rome and Antium.Enter a Roman and a Volscie, meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir; and you know me; your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vol. It is so, sir: truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against 'em: know you me yet?

Vol. Nicanor? no.

Rom. The same, sir.

Vol. You had more beard when I last saw you; but your favour is well approved by your tongue. What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscian state, to find you out there: you have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrection, the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vol. Hath been! is it ended, then? Our state thinks not so; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again: for the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus banished!

Rom. Banished, sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vol. A most royal one; the centurions and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vol. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—ANTIUM. Before AUFIDIUS'S House.

Enter CORIOLANUS, in mean apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium.—City, 'Tis I that made thy widows: many an heir Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars

Have I heard groan and drop: then know me not, [stones] Lest that thy wives with spits and boys with In puny battle slay me.

Enter a Citizen.

Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will,

Where great Aufidius lies: is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, beseech you?

Cit. This, here, before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir: farewell.

[Exit Citizen.]

O world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart, Whose house, whose bed, whose meal and exercise

Are still together, who twin, as 'twere, in love Unseparable, shall within this hour,

On a dissension of a doit, break out

To bitterest enmity; so fellest foes,

Whose passions and whose plots have broke their To take the one the other, by some chance,

Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends,

And interjoin their issues. So with me:—

My birthplace hate I, and my love's upon

This enemy town.—I'll enter: if he slay me,

He does fair justice; if he give me way,

I'll do his country service. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—ANTIUM. A Hall in AUFIDIUS'S House.

Music within. Enter a Servant.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here!

I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit.]

Enter a second Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Cotus? my master calls for him.—Cotus! [Exit.]

Enter CORIOLANUS.

Cor. A goodly house: the feast smells well; but I

Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? whence are you? Here's no place for you: pray, go to the door.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment In being Coriolanus.

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away! Get you away.

Cor. Now thou art troublesome.

2 Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servant. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow's this?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on: I cannot get him out o' the house: pr'ythee, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your hearth.

3 Serv. what are you?

Cor. A gentleman.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station; here's no place for you; pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function, go, And batten on cold bits. [Pushes him away.]

3 Serv. What, you will not?—Pr'ythee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

2 Serv. And I shall. [Exit.]

3 Serv. Where dwellest thou?

Cor. Under the canopy.

3 Serv. Under the canopy!

Cor. Ay.

3 Serv. Where's that?

Cor. I' the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. I' the city of kites and crows!—What an ass it is!—Then thou dwellest with daws too?

Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

3 Serv. How, sir! Do you meddle with my master?

Cor. Ay; 'tis an honest service than to meddle with thy mistress:

Thou prat'st and prat'st; serve with thy trencher, hence! [Beats him in.]

Enter AUFIDIUS and the second Servant.

Auf. Where is this fellow?

2 Serv. Here, sir: I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auf. Whence comest thou? what wouldst thou? thy name? [name?]

Why speak'st not? speak, man: what's thy Cor. If, Tullus, [Unmuffling.]

Not yet thou know'st me, and, seeing me, dost not Think me for the man I am, necessity

Commands me name myself.

Auf. What is thy name?

[Servants retire.]

Cor. A name unmusical to the Volscians' ears,

And harsh in sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn, Thou show'st a noble vessel: what's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown:—know'st thou me yet?

Auf. I know thee not:—thy name?

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done

To thee particularly, and to all the Volscs, Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may

My surname, Coriolanus: the painful service, The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood Shed for my thankless country, are requited But with that surname; a good memory, And witness of the malice and displeasure Which thou shouldst bear me: only that name remains;

The cruelty and envy of the people, Permitted by our dastard nobles, who Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest, And suffer'd me by the voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Now, this extremity Hath brought me to thy hearth: not out of hope, Mistake me not, to save my life; for if I had fear'd death, of all the men i' the world I would have voided thee; but in mere spite, To be full quit of those my banishers, Stand I before thee here. Then if thou hast A heart of wreak in thee, that wilt revenge Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those maims

[straight, Of shame seen through thy country, speed thee And make my misery serve thy turn: so use it That my revengeful services may prove As benefits to thee; for I will fight Against my canker'd country with the spleen Of all the under fiends. But if so be Thou dar'st not thus, and that to prove more fortunes

Thou'rt tir'd, then, in a word, I also am Longer to live most weary, and present My throat to thee and to thy ancient malice; Which not to cut would thee show but a fool, Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate, Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast, And cannot live but to thy shame, unless It be to do thee service.

Auf. O Marcius, Marcius! Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my heart

A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter Should from yond cloud speak divine things, And say 'Tis true, I'd not believe them more Than thee, all noble Marcius.—Let me twine Mine arms about that body, where against My grained ash an hundred times hath broke And scar'd the moon with splinters: here I clip The anvil of my sword, and do contest As hotly and as nobly with thy love As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Know thou first, I lov'd the maid I married; never man Sighed truer breath: but that I see thee here, Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell thee,

We have a power on foot; and I had purpose Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn, Or lose mine arm for't: thou hast beat me out Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me; We have been down together in my sleep, Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat, And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy

Marcius, Had we no other quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all From twelve to seventy; and, pouring war Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,

Like a bold flood o'erbear. O, come, go in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepar'd against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods!
Auf. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have

The leading of thine own revenges, take
The one half of my commission, and set down,—
As best thou art experience'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways;

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
Let me commend thee first to those that shall Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy,
Yet, Marcus, that was much. Your hand:
most welcome!

[Exeunt COR., and AUF.]

1 Serv. [Advancing.] Here's a strange alteration!

2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have struck him with a cudgel, and yet my mind gave me his clothes made a false report of him.

1 Serv. What an arm he has! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: he had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

1 Serv. He had so; looking as it were,— would I were hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn: he is simply the rarest man i' the world.

1 Serv. I think he is: but a greater soldier than he you wot on.

2 Serv. Who, my master?

2 Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Serv. Worth six on him.

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither: but I take him to be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the defence of a town our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third Servant.

3 Serv. O slaves, I can tell you news,—news, you rascals! [Take.]

1 and 2 Serv. What, what, what? let's par-

3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations; I had as lieve be a condemned man.

1 and 2 Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?

3 Serv. Why, here's he that was wont to thwack our general,—Caus Marcus.

1 Serv. Why do you say, thwack our general?

3 Serv. I do not say, thwack our general;
but he was always good enough for him.

2 Serv. Come, we are fellows and friends:
he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the troth on't: before Coriolio he scotched him and notched him like a carbonado.

2 Serv. An he had been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him to.

1 Serv. But more of thy news?

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within as if he were son and heir to Mars, set at upper end o' the table; no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him:
our general himself makes a mistress of him, sanctifies himself with's hand, and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i' the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday, for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He'll go, he says, and sowl the porter of Rome gates by the ears,
he will mow all down before him, and leave his passage polled.

2 Serv. And he's as like to do't as any man
I can imagine.

3 Serv. Do't! he will do't; for, look you, sir, he has as many friends as enemies, which friends, sir, as it were, durst not, look you, sir, show themselves, as we term it, his friends,
whilst he's in dejectitude.

1 Serv. Dejectitude! what's that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like cones after rain, and revel all with him.

1 Serv. But when goes thus forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day, presently, you shall have the drum struck up this afternoon:
'tis as it were a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is good for nothing but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I, it exceeds peace as far as day does night, it's spritely, waking, audible, and full of vent. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy; muffled, deaf, sleepy, insensible, a getter of more bastard children than wars a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'Tis so: and as wars, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied but peace is a greater maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volscians. They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—ROME. A public Place.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;

His remedies are tame i' the present peace
And quietness of the people, which before Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends

Blush that the world goes well, who rather had,
Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold
Dissentious numbers pestering streets than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

Bru. We stood to't in good time.—Is this Menenius?

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind
Of late.

Enter MENENIUS.

Bru. Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much miss'd
But with his friends: the commonwealth doth
stand,

And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well, and might have been much better if

He could have temporiz'd.

Sic. Where is he, hear you?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing: his mother and his wife

Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Citizens. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. God-den, our neighbours.

Bru. God-den to you all, God-den to you all.

i Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees,
Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours; we wish'd
Coriolanus

Had lov'd you as we did.

Citizens. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell

[Exeunt Citizens.]

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time
Than when these fellows ran about the streets
Crying confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was

A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent,
O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-loving,—

Sic. And affecting one sole throne,
Without assistance.

Men. I think not so. [tion,

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamenta-
If he had gone forth consul, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and
Rome

Sits safe and still without him.

Enter an Ædile.

Æd. Worthy tribunes,
There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports,—the Volscs with two several powers
Are enter'd in the Roman territories;
And with the deepest malice of the war
Destroy what lies before 'em.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,

Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment,
Thrusts forth his horns again into the world;
Which were insheild when Marcius stood for
Rome,

And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you

Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd—It cannot be

The Volscs dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!

We have record that very well it can;

And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this;
Lest you shall chance to whip your information,
And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me:
I know this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles in great earnestness are going

All to the senate-house: some news is come
That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave,—
Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising;

Nothing but his report.

Mess. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,—
How probable I do not know,—that Marcius,
Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst
Rome,

And vows revenge as spacious as between
The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish

God Marcius home again.

Sic. The very trick on't.

Men. This is unlikely:
He and Aufidius can no more atone
Than violentest contrariety.

Enter a second Messenger.

2 Mess. You are sent for to the senate:

A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius

Associated with Aufidius, rages

Upon our territories; and have already [took O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and What lay before them.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. O, you have made good work!

Men. What news? what news?

Com. You have help to ravish your own daughters, and

To melt the city leads upon your pates;

To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses,—

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burned in their cement;
and

Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an auger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news?—

You have made fair work, I fear me.—Pray, your news?

If Marcius should be join'd with Volscians,— Com. If!

He is their god: he leads them like a thing

Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better; and they follow him,

Against us brats, with no less confidence

Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,

Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work,
You and your apron men; you that stood so much

Upon the voice of occupation and
The breath of garlic-eaters!

Com. He will shake
Your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules
Did shake down mellow fruit.—You have made fair work!

Bru. But is this true, sir?

Com. Ay; and you'll look pale
Before you find it other. All the regions
Do smilingly revolt; and who resist
Are only mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Who is't can blame
him?

Your enemies and his find something in him.

Men. We are all undone unless
The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?
The tribunes cannot do't for shame; the people Deserve such pity of him as the wolf [they Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if Should say, Be good to Rome, they charg'd him even

As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein show'd like enemies.

Men. 'Tis true:
If he were putting to my house the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say, Beseech you, cease.—You have made fair hands,

You and your crafts! you have crafted fair!

Com. You have brought
A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So incapable of help.

Both Tri. Say not, we brought it.

Men. How! Was it we? we lov'd him;
but, like beasts, [clusters,
And cowardly nobles, gave way unto your
Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But I fear
They'll roar him in again. Tullus Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeys his points
As if he were his officer:—desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a troop of Citizens.

Men. Here comes the clusters.—
And is Aufidius with him?—You are they
That made the air unwholesome, when you cast
Your stinking greasy caps in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
And not a hair upon a soldier's head [combs
Which will not prove a whip: as many cox-
As you threw caps up will he tumble down,
And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter;
If he could burn us all into one coal,
We have deserv'd it.

Citizens. Faith, we hear fearful news.

1 Cit. For mine own part,
When I said banish him, I said 'twas pity.

2 Cit. And so did I.

3 Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us. That we did, we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. You are goodly things, you voices!
Men. You have made
Good work, you and your cry!—Shall's to the Capitol?

Com. O, ay; what else?

[Exeunt COM. and MEN.
Sic. Go, masters, get you home; be not dis-may'd:

These are a side that would be glad to have
This true which they so seem to fear. Go home,
And show no sign of fear.

1 Cit. The gods be good to us!—Come, masters, let's home. I ever said we were i'
the wrong when we banished him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home.
[Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I. [wealth.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol:—would half my
Would buy this for a lie!

Sic. Pray, let us go. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—A Camp at a small distance from Rome.

Enter AUFIDIUS and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lieu. I do not know what witchcraft's in him, but

Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat,
Their talk at table, and their thanks at end;
And you are darken'd in this action, sir,
Even by our own.

Auf. I cannot help it now,
Unless, by using means I lame the foot
Of our design. He bears himself more proud-lier,

Even to my person, than I thought he would
When first I did embrace him: yet his nature
In that's no changeling; and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wish, sir,—
I mean for your particular,—you had not
Join'd in communion with him; but either
Had borne the action of yourself, or else
To him had left it solely. [sure,

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou
When he shall come to his account, he knows
not

What I can urge against him. Although it seems,
And so he thinks, and is no less apparent
To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,
And shows good husbandry for the Volscian
state,

Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
As draw his sword: yet he hath left undone
That which shall break his neck or hazard mine
Whene'er we come to our account. [Rome?

Lieu. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry
Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits down;
And the nobility of Rome are his:

The senators and patricians love him too:
The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people
Will be as rash in the repeal as hasty
To expel him thence. I think he'll be to Rome
As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. First he was A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even: whether 'twas pride,
Which out of daily fortune ever taints

The happy man; whether defect of judgment,
To fail in the disposing of those chances
Which he was lord of; or whether nature,
Not to be other than one thing, not moving
From the casque to the cushion, but commanding peace

Even with the same austerity and garb
As he controll'd the war; but one of these,—
As he hath spices of them all, not all,
For I dare so far free him,—made him fear'd,
So hated, and so banish'd: but he has a merit
To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues
Lie in the interpretation of the time:
And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a cheer
To extol what it hath done.
One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Rights by rights, falter, strengths by strengths do fail.

Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine, Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou mine. [Exeunt]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—ROME. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, COMINIUS, SICINIUS,
BRUTUS, and others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear, what he hath said
Which was sometime his general; who lov'd
him
In a most dear particular. He call'd me father:
But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him;
A mile before his tent fall down, and kneel
The way into his mercy: nay, if he coy'd
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.
Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear?
Com. Yet one time he did call me by my
name:

I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to: forbad all names;
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name o' the fire
Of burning Rome.

Men. Why, so,—you have made good work!
A pair of tribunes that have rack'd for Rome,
To make coals cheap,—a noble memory!

Com. I minded him how royal 'twas to pardon
When it was less expected: he replied,
It was a bare petition of a state
To one whom they had punish'd.

Men. Very well:
Could he say less?

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard
For's private friends: his answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome musty chaff: he said 'twas folly
For one poor grain or two to leave unburnt,
And still to nose the offence.

Men. For one poor grain
Or two! I am one of those; his mother, wife,
His child, and this brave fellow too, we are the grains:

You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt
Above the moon: we must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: if you refuse your aid

In this so never-heeded help, yet do not Upbraid's with our distress. But, sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good
tongue,

More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. No, I'll not meddle.

Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?

Bru. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome, towards Marcius.

Men. Well, and say that Marcius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unheard; what then?

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness? Say't be so?

Sic. Yet your good-will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure

As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake't:

I think he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip
And hum at good Cominius much unhearts me.
He was not taken well: he had not din'd:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We pout upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our blood
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch him

Till he be dieted to my request,
And then I'll set upon him. [ness,

Bru. You know the very road into his kind-
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him, Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge

Of my success. [Exit.

Com. He'll never hear him.

Sic. Not?

Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as 'twould burn Rome; and his injury
The gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said Rise; dismiss'd me Thus, with his speechless hand: what he would do, [not,

He sent in writing after me; what he would
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:
So that all hope is vain,
Unless in's noble mother and his wife;
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him [hence,
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's
And with our fair entreaties haste them on.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An advanced Post of the Volscian
Camp before Rome. The Guard at their stations.

Enter to them MENENIUS.

1 G. Stay: whence are you?

2 G. Stand, and go back.

Men. You guard like men; 'tis well: but, by your leave,

I am an officer of state, and come
To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From Rome.

1 G. You may not pass, you must return:
our general

Will no more hear from thence. [before

2 G. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire
You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.

1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name

Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,

Thy general is my lover: I have been [read
The book of his good acts, whence men have
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified;
For I have ever verifi'd my friends,—
Of whom he's chief,—with all the size that verity

Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground, [praise
I have tumbled past the throw: and in his
Have almost stamp'd the leasing: therefore,
fellow,

I must have leave to pass.

1 G. Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf as you have utter'd words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely.
Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factious on the party of your general.

2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar,—as you say you have,—I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is. [does.

1 Gen. Then you should hate Rome, as he

Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy groans of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decayed dotant as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceived; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemned; our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean thy general.

1 G. My general cares not for you. Back,
I say; go, lest I let forth your half pint of blood;—back; that's the utmost of your having:—back.

Men. Nay, but, fellow, fellow,—

Enter CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.

Cor. What's the matter?

Men. Now, your companion, I'll say an errand for you; you shall know now that I am in estimation; you shall perceive that a jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus: guess but by my entertainment with him if thou standest not i' to state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship and cruelier in suffering; behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee.—The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O my son! my son!

thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but being assured none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs; and conjure thee to pardon Rome and thy petitionary countrymen.
The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here; this, who, like a block, hath denied my access to thee.

Cor. Away!

Men. How! away!

[affairs
Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My
Are servanted to others: though I owe
My revenge properly, my remission lies In Volscian breasts. That we have been familiar,

Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather
Than pity note how much.—Therefore, be gone.
Mine ears against your suits are stronger than Your gates against my force. Yet, for I lov'd
thee,

Take this along; I writ it for thy sake,

[Gives a letter.
And would have sent it. Another word, Men-enius,

I will not hear thee speak.—This man, Aufidius,
Was my beloved in Rome: yet thou behold'st!

Auf. You keep a constant temper.

[Exeunt COR. and AUF.

1 G. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?

2 G. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power:
you know the way home again.

1 G. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back?

2 G. What cause, do you think, I have to swoon?

Men. I neither care for the world nor your general: for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, ye're so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age! I say to you, as I was said to, away!

1 G. A noble fellow, I warrant him.

2 G. The worthy fellow is our general: he is the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Tent of CORIOLANUS.

Enter CORIOLANUS, AUFIDIUS, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome tomorrow

Set down our host.—My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volscian lords how plainly

I have borne this business.

Auf. Only their ends

You have respected; stopp'd your ears against

The general suit of Rome; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him; for whose old love I have,— Though I show'd sourly to him,—once more offer'd

The first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only,
That thought he could do more, a very little
I have yielded to: fresh embassies and suits,
Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter

Will I lend ear to.—Ha! what shout is this?
[Shout within.]

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the same time 'tis made? I will not.

Enter in mourning habits, VIRGILIA, VOLUMNIA, leading young MARCIUS, VALERIA, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould

Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand
The grandchild to her blood. But, out, affection!

All bond and privilege of nature, break!
Let it be virtuous to be obstinate.— [eyes,
What is that curt'sy worth? or those doves'
Which can make gods forsworn?—I melt, and am not [bows,

Of stronger earth than others.—My mother
As if Olympus to a molehill should
In supplication nod: and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession which Great nature cries, Deny not.—Let the Volsces Plough Rome and harrow Italy: I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand,
As if a man were author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband!

Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow that delivers us thus chang'd
Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out,
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say,
For that, Forgive our Romans.—O, a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge;
Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since.—You gods! I prate,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted: sink, my knee, i' the earth;
[Kneels.]

Of thy deep duty more impression show
Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up bless'd!

Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint,
I kneel before thee; and unproperly Show duty, as mistaken all this while
Between the child and parent. [Kneels.]

Cor. What is this?

Your knees to me? to your corrected son?

Then let the pebbles of the hungry beach
Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun;
Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior;
I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle
That's curd'd by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple:—dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which, by the interpretation of full time,
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou mayst prove

To shame invulnerable, and stick i' the wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. Your knee, sirrah
Cor. That's my brave boy. [self
Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and my-
Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace:

Or, if you'd ask, remember this before,—
The things I have forsworn to grant may never
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics.—Tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: desire not
To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasons.

Vol. O, no more, no more!
You have said you will not grant us anything;
For we have nothing else to ask but that
Which you deny already: yet we will ask;
That, if you fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness; therefore hear us. [we'll

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volsces, mark: for Hear naught from Rome in private.—Your request? [raiment

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our
And state of bodies would bewray what life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thy self,

How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which should [comforts,

Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and
sorrow;

Making the mother, wife, and child to see
The son, the husband, and the father tearing
His country's bowels out. And to poor we,
Thine enmity's most capital: though barr'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
Alas, how can we for our country pray, Whereto we are bound,—together with thy victory,

Whereto we are bound? alack, or we must lose
The country, our dear nurse; or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had [thou
Our wish, which side should win; for either Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles thorough our streets, or else

Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I purpose not to wait on fortune till [these
These wars determine: if I cannot persuade Rather to show a noble grace to both parts
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to assault thy country than to tread,— Trust to't, thou shalt not,—on thy mother's womb,
That brought thee to this world.

Vir. Ay, and mine,
That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name
Living to time.

Boy. 'A shall not tread on me;
I'll run away till I am bigger; but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
Requires nor child nor woman's face to see.
I have sat too long. [Rising.

Vol. Nay, go not from us thus.
If it were so that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy The Volscies whom you serve, you might condemn us,

As poisonous of your honour: no; our suit
Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volscies
May say, This mercy we have show'd; the Romans,

This we deceiv'd; and each in either side
Give thee all-hail to thee, and cry, Be bless'd
For making up this peace! Thou know'st great son,

The end of war's uncertain; but this certain,
That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name,
Whose reputation will be dogg'd with curses;
Whose chronicle thus went,—The man was noble,

But with his last attempt he wiped it out;
Destroy'd his country; and his name remains
To the ensuing age abhorr'd. Speak to me, son:
Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
To imitate the graces of the gods,
To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air,
And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt
That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak?

Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs?—Daughter, speak
you: [boy:

He cares not for your weeping.—Speak thou,
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons.—There is no man in the world [prate

More bound to his mother; yet here he lets me Like one i' the stocks. Thou hast never in thy life

Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy;
When she,—poor hen,—fond of no second brood,

Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home,
Loaden with honour. Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back: but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague
thee,

That thou restrain'st from me the duty which
To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away:
Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees.

To his surname Coriolanus 'longs more pride
Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end;
This is the last.—So we will home to Rome,
And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold's:

This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship
Does reason our petition with more strength
Than thou hast to deny't.—Come, let us go:
This fellow had a Volscian to his mother;
His wife is in Corioli, and his child
Like him by chance.—Yet give us our despatch:

I am hush'd until our city be afire,
And then I'll speak a little.

Cor. [After holding VOLUMNIA by the hands
in silence.] O mother, mother!

What have you done? Behold, the heavens do ope,

The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O!

You have won a happy victory to Rome;
But for your son,—believe it, O, believe it,
Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. But let it come.—
Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good
Aufidius,

If you were in my stead, would you have heard
A mother less? or granted less, Aufidius?

Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn you were:
And, sir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you'll make, advise me. for my part,

I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and, pray
you,

Stand to me in this cause.—O mother! wife!

Auf. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour

At difference in thee: out of that I'll work Myself a former fortune. [Aside.

[The ladies make signs to CORIOLANUS.

Cor. Ay, by and by,
[To VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, &c.

But we'll drink together; and you shall bear
A better witness back than words, which we,
On like conditions, will have counter-seal'd.
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve
To have a temple built you: all the swords
In Italy, and her confederate arms,
Could not have made this peace. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—ROME. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS and SICINIUS.

Men. See you yond coigne o' the Capitol,— yond corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him. But I say there is no hope in't: our throats are sentenced, and stay upon execution.

Sic. Is't possible that so short a time can alter the condition of a man?

Men. There is difference between a grub and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub.

This Marcius is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me: and he no more remembers his mother now than an eight-year-old horse. The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes: when he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading: he is able to pierce a corslet with his eye; talks like a knell, and his hum is a battery. He sits in his state as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done is finished with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: there is no more mercy in him than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find: and all this is 'long of you.

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him we respected not them: and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house:

The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune, And hale him up and down; all swearing, if The Roman ladies bring not comfort home, They'll give him death by inches.

Enter a second Messenger.

Sic. What's the news?

2 Mess. Good news, good news;—the ladies have prevail'd,

The Volscians are dislodg'd and Marcius gone: A merrier day did never yet greet Rome, No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend,

Art thou certain this is true? is it most certain?

2 Mess. As certain as I know the sun is fire: Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it? [Aside]

Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown As the recomfited through the gates. Why, hark you!

[Trumpets and hautboys sounded, drums beaten, and shouting within.]

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes, Tabors and cymbals, and the shouting Romans, Make the sun dance. Hark you!

[Shouting again.]

Men. This is good news.

I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians, A city full of tribunes such as you, [to-day:] A sea and land full. You have pray'd well This morning, for ten thousand of your throats I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy!

[Shouting and music.]

Sic. First, the gods bless you for your tidings; next,

Accept my thankfulness.

2 Mess. Sir, we have all Great cause to give great thanks.

Sic.

They are near the city?

Mess. Almost at point to enter.

Sic.

We will meet them.

And help the joy.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—ROME. A Street near the Gate.

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, VALERIA, &c., accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and Citizens.

1 Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome!

Call all your tribes together, praise the gods, And make triumphant fires; strew flowers before them:

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius, Repeal him with the welcome of his mother; Cry, Welcome, ladies, welcome!—

All.

Welcome, ladies,

Welcome!

[A flourish with drums and trumpets.]

[Exeunt]

SCENE VI.—ANTIUM. A public Place.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city I am here: Deliver them this paper; having read it, Bid them repair to the market-place: where I, Even in theirs and in the commons' ears, Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse The city ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appear before the people, hoping To purge himself with words: despatch.

[Exeunt Attendants.]

Enter three or four Conspirators of AUFIDIUS's faction.

Most welcome!

1 Con. How is it with our general?

Auf.

Even so

As with a man by his own alms empoison'd, And with his charity slain.

2 Con.

Most noble sir,

If you do hold the same intent wherein You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you Of your great danger.

Auf.

Sir, I cannot tell:

We must proceed as we do find the people.

3 Con.

The people will remain uncertain

whilst

[either]

'Twixt you there's difference: but the fall of Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf.

I know it;

And my pretext to strike at him admits

A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd [heighten'd]

Mine honour for his truth: who being so He water'd his new plants with dews of flattery, Seducing so my friends; and to this end He bow'd his nature, never known before But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3 Con.

Sir, his stoutness,

When he did stand for consul, which he lost By lack of stooping,—

Auf.

That I would have spoke of:

Being banish'd for't, he came unto my hearth; Presented to my knife his throat: I took him;

Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way
In all his own desires; nay, let him choose
Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,
My best and freshest men; serv'd his design-
ments

In mine own person; help to reap the fame
Which he made all his, and took some pride
To do myself thus wrong: till, at the last,
I seem'd his follower, not partner; and
He wag'd me with his countenance as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So he did, my lord:
The army marvell'd at it; and, in the last,
When he had earned Rome, and that we look'd
For no less spoil than glory,—

Auf. There was it,— [him.
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon
At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action: therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

[Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the people.

1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post,
And had no welcomes home; but he returns
Splutting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear
With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Ere he express himself, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd shall bury
His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more:
Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it.
But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd
What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear't.
What faults he made before the last, I think
Might have found easy fines: but there to end
Where he was to begin, and give away
The benefit of our levies, answering us
With our own charge: making a treaty where
There was a yielding. This admits no excuse.
Auf. He approaches: you shall hear him.

*Enter CORIOLANUS, with drums and colours;
a crowd of Citizens with him.*

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know
That prosperously I have attempted, and
With bloody passage led your wars even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home

Do more than counterpoise a full third part
The charges of the action. We have made
peace

With no less honour to the Antiates

Than shame to the Romans: and we here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords;
But tell the traitor, in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor!—How now!

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius.
Cor. Marcius!

Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius. Dost thou think
I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n
name

Coriolanus in Corioli?—

You lords and heads o' the state, perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome,—
I say your city,—to his wife and mother;
Breaking his oath and resolution, like
A twist of rotten silk; never admitting Counsel o' the war; but at his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory;
That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars?

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears,—
Cor. Ha!

Auf. No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart

[slave!—
Too great for what contains it. Boy! O
Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever
I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my grave lords,

Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion,—
Who wears my stripes impress'd upon him;
that must bear

My beating to his grave,—shall join to thrust
The lie unto him.

1 Lord. Peace, both, and hear me speak.
Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volscies; men and lads, Stain all your edges on me.—Boy! False hound!

If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,
That, like an eagle in a dove-cote, I
Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli:
Alone I did it.—Boy!

Auf. Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart,
'Fore your own eyes and ears?

Conspirators. Let him die for't.
Citizens. Tear him to pieces, do it presently:— he killed my son,—my daughter;—he killed my cousin Marcus;—he killed my father,—

2 Lord. Peace, ho!—no outrage;—peace!
The man is noble, and his fame folds in
This orb o' the earth. His last offences, to us Shall have judicious hearing.—Stand, Au-fidius,

And trouble not the peace.
Cor. O that I had him,
With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe,
To use my lawful sword!

Auf. Insolent villain!
Conspirators. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him!
[Auf. and the Conspirators draw, and kill
COR., who falls: Auf. stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold!

Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O Tullus,—

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat
valour will weep. [quiet;

3 Lord. Tread not upon him.—Masters all, be Put up your swords. [this rage,

Auf. My lords, when you shall know,—as in Provok'd by him, you cannot,—the great danger
Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice
That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours
To call me to your senate, I'll deliver
Myself your loyal servant, or endure
Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his body.
And mourn you for him. Let him be regarded

As the most noble corse that ever herald
Did follow to his urn.

2 Lord. His own impatience
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.
Let's make the best of it.

Auf. My rage is gone;
And I'm struck with sorrow.—Take him up:—
Help, three o' the chiefest souldiers; I'll be one.—
Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully:
Trail your steel pikes. Though in this city he Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury,
Yet he shall have a noble memory.—
Assist.

[Exeunt, bearing the body of CORIOLANUS,
A dead march sounded.

SCENE,—During a great part of the Play at ROME; afterwards at SARDIS, and near PHILIPPI.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—ROME. A Street.

Enter FLAVIUS, MARULLUS, and a rabble of Citizens.

Flav. Hence! home, you idle creatures, get you home:

Is this a holiday? What! know you not, Being mechanical, you ought not walk Upon a labouring day without the sign Of your profession?—Speak, what trade art thou?

1 Cit. Why, sir, a carpenter. [rule?

Mar. Where is thy leather apron and thy What dost thou with thy best apparel on?— You, sir, what trade are you?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman,

I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But what trade art thou? answer me directly.

2 Cit. A trade, sir, that I hope I may use with a safe conscience; which is indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Mar. What trade, thou knave, thou naughty knave, what trade?

2 Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me: yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What meanest thou by that? mend me, thou saucy fellow!

2 Cit. Why, sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is with the awl: I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with awl. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I re-cover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's-leather have gone upon my handiwork.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day?

Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday to see Cæsar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries follow him to Rome, To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels? You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!

O you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements, To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops, Your infants in your arms, and there have sat The live-long day, with patient expectation, To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome: And when you saw his chariot but appear, Have you not made an universal shout, That Tiber trembled underneath her banks, To hear the replication of your sounds Made in her concave shores? And do you now put on your best attire? And do you now pull out a holiday? And do you now strew flowers in his way That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood? Be gone!

Run to your houses, fall upon your knees, Pray to the gods to intermit the plague That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and for this fault

Assemble all the poor men of your sort; Draw them to Tiber banks, and weep your tears Into the channel, till the lowest stream Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

[Exeunt Citizens.]

See, where their basest metal be not mov'd; They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness. Go you down that way towards the Capitol: This way will I: disrobe the images. If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.

Mar. May we do so?

You know it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter; let no images Be hung with Cæsar's trophies. I'll about, And drive away the vulgar from the streets: So do you too, where you perceive them thick. These growing feathers pluck'd from Cæsar's wing

Will make him fly an ordinary pitch; Who else would soar above the view of men, And keep us all in servile fearfulness.

[Exeunt]

SCENE II.—ROME. A public Place.

Enter, in procession, with music, CÆSAR; ANTONY, for the course; CALPHURNIA, PORTIA, DECIVS, CICERO, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and CASCA; a great crowd following: among them a Soothsayer.

Cæs. Calphurnia,—

Casca.

Peace, ho! Cæsar speaks.

[Music ceases.]

Calphurnia,—

Cæs.

Cal. Here, my lord.

Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonius' way When he doth run his course.—Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar, my lord.

Cæs. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius, To touch Calphurnia; for our elders say, The barren, touch'd in this holy chase, Shake off their sterile curse.

Ant.

I shall remember:

When Cæsar says, Do this, it is perform'd.

Cæs. Set on; and leave no ceremony out.

[Music.]

Sooth. Cæsar!

Cæs. Ha! who calls?

Casca. Bid every noise be still.—Peace yet again. [Music ceases.]

Cæs. Who is it in the press that calls on me? I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,

Cry, Cæsar. Speak; Cæsar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs.

What man is that?

Bru. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.

Cæs. Set him before me; let me see his face.

Cas. Fellow, come from the throng; look upon Cæsar.

Cæs. What say'st thou to me now? speak once again.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March. [Pass.]

Cæs. He is a dreamer; let us leave him.—

[Sennet. Exeunt all but BRU. and CAS.]

Cas. Will you go see the order of the course?

Bru. Not I.

Cas. I pray you do.

[part]

Bru. I am not gamesome: I do lack some Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;

I'll leave you.

Cas. Brutus, I do observe you now of late: I have not from your eyes that gentleness

And show of love as I was wont to have:

You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand Over your friend that loves you.

Bru.

Cassius,

Be not deceiv'd: if I have vail'd my look,

I turn the trouble of my countenance

Merely upon myself. Vex'd I am

Of late with passions of some difference,

Conceptions only proper to myself, [haviours;

Which gives some soil, perhaps, to my de-

But let not therefore my good friends be

griev'd,—

Among which number, Cassius, be you one,—

Nor construe any further my neglect

Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,

Forgets the shows of love to other men.

Cas. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your passion;

By means whereof this breast of mine hath buried

Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

Bru. No, Cassius; for the eye sees not itself But by reflection, by some other things.

Cas. 'Tis just:

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you have no such mirrors as will turn
Your hidden worthiness into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I have heard,
Where many of the best respect in Rome,—
Except immortal Cæsar,—speaking of Brutus,
And groaning underneath this age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me,
Cassius,

That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me? [hear:

Cas. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to
And, since you know you cannot see yourself
So well as by reflection, I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself which you yet know not of.
And be not jealous on me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common laughèr, or did use
To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protester; if you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself in banqueting
To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish and shout.

Bru. What means this shouting? I do fear
the people

Choose Cæsar for their king.

Cas. Ay, do you fear it?
Then must I think you would not have it so.

Bru. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him
well.—

But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it that you would impart to me?
If it be aught toward the general good,
Set honour in one eye and death i' the other,
And I will look on both indifferently;
For, let the gods so speed me as I love
The name of honour more than I fear death.

Cas. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward favour.
Well, honour is the subject of my story.—
I cannot tell what you and other men
Think of this life; but, for my single self,
I had as lief not be as live to be
In awe of such a thing as I myself.

I was born free as Cæsar; so were you:
We both have fed as well: and we can both Endure the winter's cold as well as he.
For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tiber chafing with her shores,
Cæsar said to me, *Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point?*—Upon the word,
Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow: so indeed he did.
The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews, throwing it aside
And stemming it with hearts of controversy;
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,
Cæsar cried, Help me, Cassius, or I sink!
I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear, so from the waves of Tiber

Did I the tired Cæsar: and this man
Is now become a god: and Cassius is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body

If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.

He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake:
His coward lips did from their colour fly;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the
world,

Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan:
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the
Romans

Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,
Alas! it cried, Give me some drink, Titinius,
As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone. [Shout: flourish.

Bru. Another general shout!
I do believe that these applauses are
For some new honours that are heap'd on Cæsar.

Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow
world

Like a Colossus; and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonourable graves.
Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

Brutus and Cæsar: what should be in that Cæsar? [yours?

Why should that name be sounded more than Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with 'em,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar. [Shout.
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed,
That he has grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd!

Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
When went there by an age, since the great
flood,

But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of
Rome,

That her wide walls encompass'd but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.

O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once that would have brook'd

The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome
As easily as a king.

Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;

What you would work me to, I have some aim:
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter; for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further mov'd. What you have said
I will consider; what you have to say
I will with patience hear: and find a time
Both meet to hear and answer such high things.
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this;
Brutus had rather be a villager
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under these hard conditions as this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad that my weak words
Have struck but thus much show of fire from Brutus.

Bru. The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

Cas. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve;
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day.

Re-enter CÆSAR and his Train.

Bru. I will do so.—But, look you, Cassius,
The angry spot doth glow on Cæsar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train:
Calphurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conference by some senators.

Cas. Casca will tell us what the matter is.

Cas. Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar?

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights:
Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous;

He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. Would he were fatter!—But I fear him not:

Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much;
He is a great observer, and he looks Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays.

As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music:
Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at anything
Such men as he be never at heart's ease
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves;
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd
Than what I fear,—for always I am Cæsar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

[Exeunt CÆSAR and his TRAIN. CASCA stays behind.]

Casca. You pull'd me by the cloak; would you speak with me? [to-day,

Bru. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd
That Cæsar looks so sad? [not?

Casca. Why, you were with him, were you?

Bru. I should not then ask Casca what had chanc'd.

Casca. Why, there was a crown offered him:
and being offered him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a-shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Casca. Why, for that too. [cry for?

Cas. They shouted thrice: what was the last

Casca. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Casca. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by mine honest neighbours shouted.

Cas. Who offered him the crown?

Casca. Why, Antony.

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Casca.

Casca. I can as well be hanged as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery; I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown; —yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once: but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again: but, to my thinking, he was very loth to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time; he put it the third time by: and still, as he refused it, the rabblement hooted, and clapped their chapped hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Cæsar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Cæsar; for he swooned, and fell down at it: and for mine own part I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you; what, did Cæsar
swoon?

Casca. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like,—he hath the falling sickness.

Cas. No, Cæsar hath it not; but you, and I,
And honest Casca, we have the falling sickness.

Casca. I know not what you mean by that;
but I am sure Cæsar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him and hiss him, according as he pleased and displeased them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man. [self?

Bru. What said he when he came unto him?
Casca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me ope his doublet, and offered them his throat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues. And so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, If he had done or said anything amiss, he desired their worshipps to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried, Alas, good soul!
—and forgave him with all their hearts: but there's no need to be taken of them; if Cæsar had stabbed their mothers they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that he came, thus sad, away?

Casca. Ay.

Cas. Did Cicero say anything?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you i' the face again: but those that understood him smiled at one another, and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Cæsar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold,
and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good; I will expect you.

Casca. Do so: farewell, both.

[Exit.]

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be! He was quick mettle when he went to school.

Cas. So he is now, in execution Of any bold or noble enterprise, However he puts on this tardy form.

This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit, Which gives men stomach to digest his words With better appetite. [you:]

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave To-morrow, if you please to speak with me, I will come home to you; or, if you will, Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so: till then, think of the world. [Exit BRUTUS.]

Well, Brutus thou art noble; yet, I see, Thy honourable metal may be wrought From that it is dispos'd: therefore it is meet That noble minds keep ever with their likes; For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Cæsar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus: If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humour me. I will this night, In several hands, in at his windows throw, As if they came from several citizens, Writings, all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely

Cæsar's ambition shall be glanced at: And, after this, let Cæsar seat him sure; For we will shake him, or worse days endure. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—ROME. A Street.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, CASCA, with his sword drawn, and CICERO.

Cic. Good-even, Casca: brought you Cæsar home?

Why are you breathless? and why stare you so? Casca. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of earth

Shakes like a thing unfirm? O Cicero, I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam, To be exalted with the threat'ning clouds: But never till to-night, never till now, Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Either there is a civil strife in heaven; Or else the world, too saucy with the gods, Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you anything more wonderful? Casca. A common slave,—you know him well by sight,—

Held up his left hand, which did flame and burn Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand, Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd. Besides,—I ha' not since put up my sword,— Against the Capitol I met a lion, Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by, Without annoying me: and there were drawn Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women, Transformed with their fear; who swore they saw

Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets. And yesterday the bird of night did sit, Even at noon-day, upon the market-place, Hooting and shrieking. When these prodigies Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,

These are their reasons,—they are natural; For I believe they are portentous things Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time: But men may construe things after their fashion, Clean from the purpose of the things themselves. Comes Cæsar to the Capitol to-morrow?

Casca. He doth; for he did bid Antonius Send word to you he would be there to-morrow.

Cic. Good-night, then, Casca: this disturbed sky

Is not to walk in.

Casca. Farewell, Cicero. [Exit CICERO.]

Enter CASSIUS.

Cas. Who's there?

Casca. A Roman.

Cas. Casca, by your voice.

Casca. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is this!

Cas. A very pleasing night to honest men.

Casca. Who ever knew the heavens menace so? [of faults.]

Cas. Those that have known the earth so full For my part, I have walk'd about the streets, Submitting me unto the perilous night, And, thus unbraced, Casca, as you see, Have bar'd my bosom to the thunder-stone: And when the cross-blue lightning seem'd to open

The breast of heaven, I did present myself Even in the aim and very flash of it.

Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt the heavens?

It is the part of men to fear and tremble When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Cas. You are dull, Casca; and those sparks of life

That should be in a Roman you do want, Or else you use not. You look pale, and gaze, And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder, To see the strange impatience of the heavens: But if you would consider the true cause Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts, Why birds and beasts, from quality and kind; Why old men fools, and children calculate; Why all these things change, from their ordinance,

Their natures, and pre-formed faculties, To monstrous quality;—why, you shall find That heaven hath infus'd them with these spirits,

To make them instruments of fear and warning Unto some monstrous state.

Now could I, Casca, name to thee a man

Most like this dreadful night

That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars

As doth the lion in the Capitol.—

A man no mightier than thyself or me

In personal action; yet prodigious grown,

And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.

Casca. 'Tis Cæsar that you mean; is it not, Cassius?

Cas. Let it be who it is: for Romans now Have tews and hums like to their ancestors; But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead, And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits; Our yoke and sufferance show us womanish.

Casca. Indeed they say the senators to-morrow

Mean to establish Cæsar as a king;
And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger then;

Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius:
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong;

Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat:
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit;
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.

If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny that I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure. [Thunder still.

Casca. So can I:
So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.

Cas. And why should Cæsar be a tyrant, then?

Poor man! I know he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees the Romans are but sheep:
He were no lion, were not Romans hinds.
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire
Begin it with weak straws: what trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate
So vile a thing as Cæsar! But, O grief,
Where hast thou led me? I perhaps speak this Before a willing bondman; then I know
My answer must be made: but I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent. [man

Casca. You speak to Casca; and to such a
That is no flattering tell-tale. Hold, my hand:
Be factious for redress of all these griefs;
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest.

Cas. There's a bargain made.
Now know you, Casca, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans
To undergo with me an enterprise
Of honourable-dangerous consequence;
And I do know by this they stay for me
In Pompey's porch: for now, this fearful night,
There is no stir or walking in the streets;
And the complexion of the element
In favour's like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Casca. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cas. 'Tis Cinna,—I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend.

Enter CINNA.

Cinna, where haste you so?

Cin. To find out you. Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cas. No, it is Casca; one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna?

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this! [sighs.

There's two or three of us have seen strange
Cas. Am I not stay'd for? Tell me.

Cin. Yes, you are.

O Cassius, if you could
But win the noble Brutus to our party,—

Cas. Be you content: good Cinna, take this paper,

And look you lay it in the prætor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done, [us.
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find
Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?

Cin. All but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Cas. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre. [Exit CINNA.

Come, Casca, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Casca. O, he sits high in all the people's hearts:

And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchemy,
Will change to virtue and to worthiness.

Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,

You have right well conceited. Let us go,
For it is after midnight; and ere day
We will awake him, and be sure of him.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—ROME. BRUTUS'S Orchard.

Enter BRUTUS.

Bru. What, Lucius, ho!—
I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.—
When, Lucius, when? awake, I say! what,
Lucius!

Enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord?
Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit.
Bru. It must be by his death: and, for my part,

I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general. He would be crown'd:
How that might change his nature, there's the question:

It is the bright day that brings forth the adder;
And that craves wary walking. Crown him?—
that—

And then, I grant, we put a sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins
Remorse from power: and, to speak truth of Cæsar,

I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend. So Cæsar may;
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel

Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these and these extremities:
And therefore think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would as his kind grow mischievous;
And kill him in the shell.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
[Giving him a letter.]
This paper, thus seal'd up; and I am sure
It did not lie there when I went to bed.
Bru. Get you to bed again, it is not day.
Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?
Luc. I know not, sir. [word.]
Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me
Luc. I will, sir. [Exit.]
Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Give so much light that I may read by them.

[Opens the letter and reads.]
Brutus, thou sleep'st: awake, and see thyself.
Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress!
Brutus, thou sleep'st: awake.—
Such instigations have been often dropp'd
Where I have took them up.
Shall Rome, &c. Thus must I piece it out,— Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What,
Rome?
My ancestors did from the streets of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king.
Speak, strike, redress!—Am I entreated then
To speak and strike! O Rome! I make thee promise,
If the redress will follow, thou receivest
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus?

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.
[Knocking within.]
Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks. [Exit LUCIUS.]
Since Cassius first did whet me against Cæsar,
I have not slept.
Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma or a hideous dream:
The genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door
Who doth desire to see you.
Bru. Is he alone?
Luc. No, sir, there are more with him.
Bru. Do you know them?
Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their ears,
And half their faces buried in their cloaks,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favour.
Bru. Let 'em enter.
[Exit LUCIUS.]
They are the faction. O conspiracy, [night,
Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by

When evils are most free? O, then, by day
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspiracy;
Hide it in smiles and affability:
For if thou hath thy native semblance on,
Not Erebus itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention.

Enter CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIVS, CINNA, METELLUS CIMBER, and TREBONIUS.

Cas. I think we are too bold upon your rest:
Good-morrow, Brutus; do we trouble you?
Bru. I have been up this hour; awake all
night.
Know I these men that come along with you?
Cas. Yes, every man of them; and no man
here
But honours you; and every one doth wish
You had but that opinion of yourself
Which every noble Roman bears of you.
This is Trebonius.
Bru. He is welcome hither.
Cas. This, Decius Brutus.
Bru. He is welcome too.
Cas. This, Casca; this, Cinna;
And this, Metellus Cimber.
Bru. They are all welcome.
What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night?

Cas. Shall I entreat a word?

[BRUTUS and CASSIUS whisper.]

Dec. Here lies the east; doth not the day break here?

Casca. No.

Cin. O, pardon, sir, it doth; and you grey lines

That fret the clouds are messengers of day.

Casca. You shall confess that you are both deceiv'd.

Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises;
Which is a great way growing on the south,
Weighing the youthful season of the year.
Some two months hence up higher toward the north

He first presents his fire; and the high east
Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

Cas. And let us swear our resolution.
Bru. No, not an oath: if not the face of men,
The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse,—
If these be motives weak, break off betimes,
And every man hence to his idle bed;
So let high-sighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. But if these,
As I am sure they do, bear fire enough
To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour
The melting spirits of women; then, country-
men,

What need we any spur, but our own cause,
To prick us to redress? what other bond
Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word
And will not palter? and what other oath
Than honesty to honesty engag'd
That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautelous,
Old feeble carions, and such suffering souls
That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes swear

Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise,
Nor the insuppressive mettle of our spirits,
To think that our cause or our performance
Did need an oath; when every drop of blood
That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
Is guilty of a several bastardy
If he do break the smallest particle
Of any promise that hath pass'd from him.

Cas. But what of Cicero? shall we sound him?

I think he will stand very strong with us.

Casca. Let us not leave him out.

Cin. No, by no means.

Met. O, let us have him; for his silver hairs
Will purchase us a good opinion,
And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:
It shall be said his judgment rul'd our hands;
Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,
But all be buried in his gravity.

Bru. O, name him not: let us not break with him;

For he will never follow anything

That other men begin.

Cas. Then leave him out.

Casca. Indeed he is not fit.

Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Cæsar?

Cas. Decius, well urg'd.—I think it is not meet

Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,
Should outlive Cæsar: we shall find of him
A shrewd contriver, and, you know, his means,
If he improve them, may well stretch so far
As to annoy us all: which to prevent,
Let Antony and Cæsar fall together.

Bru. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius Cassius,

To cut the head off and then hack the limbs,—
Like wrath in death and envy afterwards;
For Antony is but a limb of Cæsar:

Let's be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.

We all stand up against the spirit of Cæsar;

And in the spirit of men there is no blood:

O that we, then, could come by Cæsar's spirit,

And not dismember Cæsar! But, alas,

Cæsar must bleed for it! And, gentle friends,

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;

Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,

Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds:

And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,

Stir up their servants to an act of rage,

And after seem to chide 'em. This shall make

Our purpose necessary, and not envious:

Which so appearing to the common eyes,

We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.

And for Mark Antony, think not of him;

For he can do no more than Cæsar's arm

When Cæsar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I fear him;

For in the engrafted love he bears to Cæsar,—

Bru. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him:

If he love Cæsar, all that he can do

Is to himself,—take thought and die for Cæsar:

And that were much he should; for he is given

To sports, to wildness, and much company.

Treb. There is no fear in him; let him not

die;

For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter.

[Clock strikes.]

Bru. Peace, count the clock.

Cas. The clock hath stricken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

Cas.

But it is doubtful yet

Whether Cæsar will come forth to-day or no:

For he is superstitious grown of late;

Quite from the main opinion he held once

Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies:

It may be these apparent prodigies,

The unaccustom'd terror of this night,

And the persuasion of his augurers,

May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that: if he be so resolv'd

I can o'ersway him; for he loves to hear

That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,

And bears with glasses, elephants with holes,

Lions with toils, and men with flatterers:

But when I tell him he hates flatterers,

He says he does,—being then most flatter'd.

Let me work;

For I can give his humour the true bent,

And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him. [most?]

Bru. By the eighth hour: is that the utter-

Cin. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Cæsar hard,

Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey:

I wonder none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him:

He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;

Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.

Cas. The morning comes upon 's: we'll leave you, Brutus: [member

And, friends, disperse yourselves: but all re-

What you have said, and show yourselves true

Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily;

Let not our looks put on our purposes;

But bear it as our Roman actors do,

With untir'd spirits and formal constancy;

And so, good-morrow to you every one.

[Exeunt all but BRUTUS.]

Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep? it is no matter;

Enjoy the heavy honey-dew of slumber.

Thou hast no figures nor no fantasies

Which busy care draws in the brains of men;

Therefore thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter PORTIA.

Por. Brutus, my lord!

Bru. Portia, what mean you? wherefore rise

you now?

It is not for your health thus to commit

Your weak condition to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. You have un-gently, Brutus,

Stole from my bed: and yesternight, at supper,

You suddenly arose, and walk'd about,

Musing and sighing, with your arms across;

And when I ask'd you what the matter was,

You star'd upon me with ungentle looks:

I urg'd you further; then you scratch'd your

head,

And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot:

Yet I insist'd, yet you answer'd not;

But with an angry waltz of your hand

Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did;

Fearing to strengthen that impatience

Which seem'd too much enkindled; and withal
Hoping it was but an effect of humour,
Which sometime hath his hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep;
And, could it work so much upon your shape
As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,
I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and were he not in health,

He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do.—Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick? and is it physical
To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? What, is Brutus sick,—
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night,
And tempt the rheumy and unpurg'd air
To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus;
You have some sick offence within your mind,
Which by the right and virtue of my place
I ought to know of. and upon my knees
I charm you, by my once-commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, yourself, your half,
Why you are heavy; and what men to-night
Have had resort to you,—for here have been
Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkness.

Bru. Kneel not, gentle Portia.

Por. I should not need if you were gentle
Brutus,

Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
Is it excepted I should know no secrets
That appertain to you? Am I myself
But as it were in sort or limitation,—
To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed,
And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs

Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus's harlot, not his wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife;
As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.

I grant I am a woman; but withal
A woman that Lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant I am a woman; but withal
A woman well-reputed,—Cato's daughter.
Think you I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd and so husbanded?
Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose 'em.
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound
Here in the thigh: can I bear that with patience,
And not my husband's secrets?

Bru. O ye gods,
Render me worthy of this noble wife!

[Knocking within.]

Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in awhile;
And by and by thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart:
All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the charactery of my sad brows.
Leave me with haste. [Exit PORTIA.]

Lucius, who's that knocks?

Enter LUCIUS with LIGARIUS.

Luc. Here is a sick man that would speak with you.

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake
of —

Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius,—how!

Lig. Vouchsafe good-morrow from a feeble
tongue.

Bru. O, what a time have you chose out,
brave Caius,

To wear a kerchief! Would you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick if Brutus have in hand

Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before,

I here discard my sickness? Soul of Rome!

Brave son, deriv'd from honourable loins!

Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up

My mortified spirit. Now bid me run,

And I will strive with things impossible;

Yea, get the better of them. What's to do?

Bru. A piece of work that will make sick men whole.

Lig. But are not some whole that we must make sick?

[Caius,]

Bru. That must we also. What it is, my

I shall unfold to thee, as we are going

To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot;

And with a heart new fir'd I follow you

To do I know not what: but it sufficeth

That Brutus leads me on.

Bru. Follow me, then.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ROME. A Room in CÆSAR'S
Palace.

Thunder and lightning. Enter CÆSAR in his night-gown.

Cas. Nor heaven nor earth have been at peace to-night:

Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out, Help, ho! They murder Cæsar!—Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord?

Cæs. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit.]

Enter CALPHURNIA.

Cal. What mean you, Cæsar? Think you to walk forth?

You shall not stir out of your house to-day.

Cæs. Cæsar shall forth: the things that threaten'd me

[See]

Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall

The face of Cæsar they are vanished.

Cal. Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies,

Yet now they fright me. There is one within,

Besides the things that we have heard and seen,

Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.

A honess hath whelped in the streets;

And graves have yawn'd and yielded up their

dead;

Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
In ranks and squadrons and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol;
The noise of battle hurtled in the air,
Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan;
And ghosts did shriek and squeal about the streets.

O Cæsar, these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them!

Cæs. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty gods?
Yet Cæsar shall go forth; for these predictions
Are to the world in general as to Cæsar.

Cal. When beggars die there are no comets seen; [of princes.

The heavens themselves blaze forth the death
Cæs. Cowards die many times before their deaths;

The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most strange that men should
fear;

Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come when it will come.

Re-enter Servant.

What say the augurers?

Serv. They would not have you to stir forth
to-day.

Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cæs. The gods do this in shame of cowardice:

Cæsar should be a beast without a heart
If he should stay at home to-day for fear.
No, Cæsar shall not: danger knows full well
That Cæsar is more dangerous than he:
We are two lions litter'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible:—
And Cæsar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas, my lord,
Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence.
Do not go forth to-day: call it my fear
That keeps you in the house, and not your own
We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house;
And he shall say you are not well to-day:
Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this.

Cæs. Mark Antony shall say I am not well;
And for thy humour I will stay at home.

Enter DECIVS.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Dec. Cæsar, all hail! Good-morrow, worthy
Cæsar:

I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

Cæs. And you are come in very happy time,
To bear my greeting to the senators,
And tell them that I will not come to-day:
Cannot, is false; and that I dare not, false:
I will not come to-day,—tell them so, Decius.

Cal. Say he is sick.

Cæs. Shall Cæsar send a lie?
Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far,
To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth?
Decius, go tell them Cæsar will not come.

Dec. Most mighty Cæsar, let me know some
cause,
Lest I be laugh'd at when I tell them so.

Cæs. The cause is in my will,—I will not
come;

That is enough to satisfy the senate.

But for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will let you know,—
Calphurnia here, my wife, stays me at home:
She dreamt to-night she saw my statua,
Which, like a fountain with a hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood; and many lusty Romans
Came smiling and did bathe their hands in it:
And these does she apply for warnings and portents,

And evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd that I will stay at home to-day.

Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted;
It was a vision fair and fortunate:

Your statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies that from you great Rome shall suck
Reviving blood; and that great men shall press
For tinctures, stains, relics, and cognizance.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified. [it.

Cæs. And this way have you well expounded
Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say:

And know it now,—the senate have concluded
To give this day a crown to mighty Cæsar.

If you shall send them word you will not come,
Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock,

Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,

*Break up the senate till another time,
When Cæsar's wife shall meet with better dreams.*

If Cæsar hide himself, shall they not whisper,
Lo, Cæsar is afraid?

Pardon me, Cæsar; for my dear dear love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this;
And reason to my love is liable.

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now,
Calphurnia!

I am ashamed I did yield to them.—
Give me my robe for I will go:

Enter PUBLIUS, BRUTUS, LIGARIUS, ME-TELLUS, CASCA, TREBONIUS, and CINNA.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good-morrow, Cæsar.

Cæs. Welcome, Publius.—
What, Brutus, are you stur'd so early too?—
Good-morrow, Casca.—Caius Ligarius,
Cæsar was ne'er so much your enemy
As that sameague which hath made you lean.—
What is't o'clock?

Bru. Cæsar, 'tis strucken eight.

Cæs. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter ANTONY.

See! Antony, that revels long o' nights

Is notwithstanding up.—

Good-morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Cæsar.

Cæs. Bid them prepare within.

I am to blame to be thus waited for.—

Now Cinna;—now Metellus:—what, Trebonius!

I have an hour's talk in store for you;

Remember that you call on me to-day;

Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Cæsar, I will:—and so near will I be,
[Aside.
That your best friends shall wish I had been further.

Cæs. Good friends, go in and taste some wine with me;
And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

Bru. That every like is not the same, O Cæsar,
The heart of Brutus yearns to think upon!
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—ROME. A Street near the Capitol.

Enter ARTEMIDORUS reading a paper.

Art. Cæsar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Casca; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Cato Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou beest not immortal, look about you; security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, ARTEMIDORUS.

Here will I stand till Cæsar pass along,
And as a suitor will I give him this.
My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.
If thou read this, O Cæsar, thou mayst live;
If not, the fates with traitors do contrive.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—ROME. Another part of the same Street, before the House of BRUTUS.

Enter PORTIA and LUCIUS.

Por. I prythee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam.

Por. I would have had thee there and here again
Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.—

O constancy, be strong upon my side!
Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!

I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel?—
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?
And so return to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look well,
For he went sickly forth: and take good note
What Cæsar doth, what suitors press to him.
Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por. Prythee, listen well:
I heard a bustling rumour, like a fray,
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter ARTEMIDORUS.

Por. Come hither, fellow:
Which way hast thou been?

Art. At mine own house, good lady.

Por. What is't o'clock?

Art. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol?

Art. Madam, not yet: I go to take my stand,
To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou not?

Art. That I have, lady: if it will please Cæsar

To be so good to Cæsar as to hear me,
I shall beseech him to befriend myself.

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him?

Art. None that I know will be, much that I fear may chance.

Good-morrow to you. Here the street is narrow:

The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels

Of senators, of pretors, common suitors,

Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:

I'll get me to a place more void, and there

Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along.

[Exit.

Por. I must go in.—Ah me! how weak a thing

The heart of woman is! O Brutus,

The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!—

Sure the boy heard me.—Brutus hath a suit

That Cæsar will not grant.—O, I grow faint.—

Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;

Say I am merry: come to me again,

And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

[Exeunt severally.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—ROME. The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A crowd of People in the street leading to the Capitol, among them ARTEMIDORUS and the Soothsayer. Flourish. Enter CÆSAR, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIUS, METELLUS, TREBONIUS, CINNA, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, POPILIUS, PUBLIUS, and others.

Cæs. The ides of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar; but not gone.

Art. Hail, Cæsar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er read,
At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Art. O Cæsar, read mine first; for mine's a suit

[Cæsar.

That touches Cæsar nearer: read it, great Cæs. What touches us ourself shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly.

Cæs. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

Cæs. What, urge you your petitions in the street?

Come to the Capitol.

CÆSAR enters the Capitol, the rest following.
All the Senators rise.

Pop. I wish your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cas. What enterprise, Popilius?
Pop. Fare you well.
[Advances to CÆSAR.]

Bru. What said Popilius Lena?

Cas. He wish'd to-day our enterprise might thrive.

I fear our purpose is discovered.

Bru. Look how he makes to Cæsar: mark him. [tion.—

Cas. Casca, be sudden, for we fear prevent Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back, For I will slay myself.

Bru. Cassius, be constant: Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes; For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cas. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you, Brutus,

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exeunt ANT. and TREB. CÆSAR and the Senators take their seats.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go,

And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Bru. He is address'd: press near and second him.

Cin. Casca, you are the first that rears your hand.

Casca. Are we all ready?

Cæs. What is now amiss

That Cæsar and his senate must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat An humble heart,— [Kneeling.]

Cæs. I must prevent thee, Cimber.

These couchings and these lowly courtesies Might fire the blood of ordinary men, And turn pre-ordinance and first decree Into the law of children. Be not fond To think that Cæsar bears such rebel blood That will be thaw'd from the true quality With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low crooked curtsies, and base spaniel fawning. Thy brother by decree is banished:

If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn for him, I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.

Know, Cæsar doth not wrong; nor without cause

Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my own,

To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Bru. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar,

Desiring thee that Publius Cimber may Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Cæs. What, Brutus!

Cas. Pardon, Cæsar; Cæsar, pardon: As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall,

To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cæs. I could be well mov'd if I were as you; If I could pray to move, prayers would move me:

But I am constant as the northern star, Of whose true-fix'd and resting quality There is no fellow in the firmament.

The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,— They are all fire, and every one doth shine; But there's but one in all doth hold his place: So in the world,—'tis furnish'd well with men, And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive; Yet in the number I do know but one That unassailable holds on his rank, Unshak'd of motion: and that I am he, Let me a little show it even in this,— That I was constant Cimber should be banish'd, And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O Cæsar,—

Cæs. Hence! wilt thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Cæsar,—

Cæs. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

Casca. Speak, hands, for me!

[CASCA STABS CÆSAR IN THE NECK. CÆSAR CATCHES HOLD OF HIS ARM. HE IS THEN STABBED BY SEVERAL OTHER CONSPIRATORS, AND AT LAST BY MARCUS BRUTUS.]

Cæs. Et tu, Brute?—Then fall, Cæsar!

[Dies. The Senators and People retire in confusion.]

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!— Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cas. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out,

Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!

Bru. People and senators! be not affrighted, Fly not; stand still: ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Bru. Where's Publius? [mutiny.]

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Cæsar's

Should chance,— [cheer;]

Bru. Talk not of standing.—Publius, good There is no harm intended to your person,

Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people,

Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

Bru. Do so: and let no man abide this deed, But we the doers.

Re-enter TREBONIUS.

Cas. Where is Antony?

Tre. Fled to his house amaz'd: Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run,

As it were doomsday.

Bru. Fates! we will know your pleasures.— That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time, And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cas. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life,

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit: So are we Cæsar's friends, that have abridg'd

His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop,

And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords:

Then walk we forth even to the market-place, And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads, Let's all cry, Peace! freedom! and liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash.—How many ages hence

Shall thus our lofty scene be acted over,
In states unborn and accents yet unknown!

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's basis lies along
No worthier than the dust!

Cas. So oft as that shall be,

So often shall the knot of us be call'd

The men that gave their country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away:

Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels

With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Bru. Soft, who comes here?

Enter a Servant.

A friend of Antony's

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel;

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down;

And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:—

Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;

Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving;

Say I lov'd Brutus, and I honour him; [him.

Say I fear'd Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd

If Brutus will vouchsafe that Antony

May safely come to him, and be resolv'd

How Cæsar hath deserv'd to lie in death,

Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead

So well as Brutus living; but will follow

The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus

Through the hazards of this untrod state

With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant

Roman;

I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,

He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour,

Depart untouched'd.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit.

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish we may; but yet have I a mind

That fears him much; and my misgiving still

Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

Bru. But here comes Antony.

Re-enter ANTONY.

Welcome, Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Cæsar! dost thou lie so low?

Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,

Shrunk to this little measure?—Fare thee well.—

I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,

Who else must be let blood, who else is rank:

If I myself, there is no hour so fit

As Cæsar's death's hour; nor no instrument

Of half that worth as those your swords, made rich

With the most noble blood of all this world.

I do beseech ye, if you hear me hard,

Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke,

Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years,

I shall not find myself so apt to die:

No place will please me so, no mean of death

As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,

The choice and master spirits of this age.

Bru. O Antony! beg not your death of us.

Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,

As by our hands and this our present act

You see we do; yet see you but our hands,

And thus the bleeding business they have done:

Our hearts you see not,—they are pitiful;

And pity to the general wrong of Rome,—

As fire drives out fire, so pity pity,—

Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,

To you our swords have leaden points, Mark

Antony:

Our arms no strength of malice, and our hearts,

Of brothers' temper, do receive you in

With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.

Cas. Your voice shall be as strong as any

In the disposing of new dignities.

Bru. Only be patient till we have appeas'd

The multitude, beside themselves with fear,

And then we will deliver you the cause

Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,

Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom.

Let each man render me his bloody hand:

First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you;—

Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand;—

Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours, Me-

tellus;—

Yours, Cinna;—and, my valiant Casca, yours;—

Though last, not least in love, yours, good

Trebonius.

Gentleman all,—alas, what shall I say?

My credit now stands on such slippery ground

That one of two bad ways you must conceit me,

Either a coward or a flatterer.—

That I did love thee, Cæsar, O, 'tis true:

If then, thy spirit look upon us now,

Shall it not grieve thee dearer than thy death

To see thy Antony making his peace,

Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,

Most noble! in the presence of thy corse?

Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,

Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,

It would become me better than to close

In terms of friendship with thine enemies.

Pardon me, Julius!—Here wast thou bay'd,

brave hart;

Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters

stand,

Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy

Lethe.—

O world, thou wast the forest to this hart;

And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.—

How like a deer strucken by many princes

Dost thou here lie!

Cas. Mark Antony,—

Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius:

The enemies of Cæsar shall say this;

Then in a friend it is cold modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Cæsar so;

But what compact mean you to have with us?

Will you be prick'd in number of our friends;

Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was,

indeed,

Sway'd from the point by looking down on

Cæsar.

Friends am I with you all, and love you all;

Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons

Why and wherein Cæsar was dangerous.

Bru. Or elsewhere is this a savage spectacle:

Our reasons are so full of good regard

That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seek:
And am moreover sutor that I may
Produce his body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.

Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.—
You know not what you do: do not consent
That Antony speak in his funeral:
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter?

[Aside to BRUTUS.

Bru. By your pardon;—
I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Cæsar's death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission;
And that we are contented Cæsar shall
Have all true rites and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall; I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Cæsar's body.

You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar;
And say you do't by our permission;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral: and you shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;

I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us.

[Exeunt all but ANTONY.

Ant. O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,

That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,—
Which like dumb mouths do ope their ruby lips,
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue,—
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men;
Domestic fury and fierce civil strife
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war;
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds:
And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Ate by his side come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines with a monarch's voice
Cry Havoc, and let slip the dogs of war;
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Cæsar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Cæsar did write for him to come to Rome. [ing;

Serv. He did receive his letters, and is com-
And bid me say to you by word of mouth,—
O Cæsar!— [Seeing the body.

Ant. Thy heart is big, get thee apart and weep.

Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him
what hath chanc'd:

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet;
Hie hence and tell him so. Yet, stay awhile;
Thou shalt not back till I have borne this corpse
Into the market-place: there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men;
According to the which thou shalt discourse
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lend me your hand.

[Exeunt with CÆSAR's body.

SCENE II.—ROME. The Forum

Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS, and a throng of Citizens.

Citizens. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied. [friends.—

Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience,
Cassius, go you into the other street,
And part the numbers.—

Those that will hear me speak, let 'em stay
here;

Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Cæsar's death.

1 Cit. I will hear Brutus speak.

2 Cit. I will hear Cassius; and compare their reasons,

When severally we hear them rendered.

[Exit CASSIUS, with some of the Citizens.

BRUTUS goes into the Rostrum

3 Cit. The noble Brutus is ascended: silence!

Bru. Be patient till the last.

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause; and be silent, that you may hear:
believe me for mine honour; and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom; and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar's, to him I say that Brutus' love to Cæsar was no less than his. If, then, that friend demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer,—Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all free men? As Cæsar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate,
I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him:
but, as he was ambitious, I slew him: there is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honour for his valour; and death for his ambition.
Who is here so base that would be a bondman?
If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude that would not be a Roman?
If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile that will not love his country?
If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

Citizens. None, Brutus, none.

Bru. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar than you shall do to

Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death. Here comes his body, mourn'd by Mark Antony:

Enter ANTONY and others with CÆSAR'S body.

who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying,—a place in the commonwealth; as which of you shall not? With this I depart,—that, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

Citizens. Live, Brutus! live, live!

1 Cit. Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

2 Cit. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

3 Cit. Let him be Cæsar.

4 Cit. Cæsar's better parts Shall be crown'd in Brutus.

1 Cit. We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamours.

Bru. My countrymen,—

2 Cit. Peace, silence! Brutus speaks.

1 Cit. Peace, ho?

Bru. Good countrymen, let me depart alone, And for my sake stay here with Antony:

Dograce to Cæsar's corse, and grace his speech Tending to Cæsar's glories; which Mark Antony,

By our permission, is allow'd to make.

I do entreat you, not a man depart,

Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.]

1 Cit. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3 Cit. Let him go up into the public chair; We'll hear him.—Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake I am beholden to you.

[Goes up.]

4 Cit. What does he say of Brutus?

3 Cit. He says, for Brutus' sake He finds himself beholden to us all.

4 Cit. 'Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

1 Cit. This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3 Cit. Nay, that's certain: We are bless'd that Rome is rid of him. [say.]

2 Cit. Peace! let us hear what Antony can

Ant. You gentle Romans,—

Cit. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.

The evil that men do lives after them;

The good is oft interred with their bones;

So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus

Hath told you Cæsar was ambitious:

If it were so, it was a grievous fault;

And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it.

Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest,—

For Brutus is an honourable man;

So are they all, all honourable men,—

Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.

He was my friend, faithful and just to me:

But Brutus says he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.

He hath brought many captives home to Rome,

Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?

When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept:

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff.

Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.

You all did see that on the Lupercal

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,

Which he did thrice refuse: was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;

And, sure, he is an honourable man.

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,

But here I am to speak what I do know.

You all did love him once,—not without cause:

What cause withholds you, then, to mourn for him?

O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,

And men have lost their reason!—Bear with me;

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,

And I must pause till it come back to me.

1 Cit. Methinks there is much reason in his sayings.

2 Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter, Cæsar has had great wrong.

3 Cit. Has, he, masters?

I fear there will a worse come in his place.

4 Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;

Therefore 'tis certain he was not ambitious.

1 Cit. If it be found so, some will dear abide it. [weeping.]

2 Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with

3 Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome than Antony. [speak.]

4 Cit. Now mark him, he begins again to

Ant. But yesterday the word of Cæsar might Have stood against the world: now lies he there,

And none so poor to do him reverence.

O masters, if I were dispos'd to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,

Who, you all know, are honourable men:

I will not do them wrong; I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself and you,

Than I will wrong such honourable men.

But here's a parchment with the seal of Cæsar,—

I found it in his closet,—'tis his will:

Let but the commons hear this testament,—

Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read,—

And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds,

And dip their napkins in his sacred blood;

Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,

And, dying, mention it within their wills,

Bequeathing it as a rich legacy

Unto their issue. [Antony.]

4 Cit. We'll hear the will: read it, Mark

Citizens. The will, the will! we will hear Cæsar's will. [not read it;]

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must

It is not meet you know how Cæsar lov'd you.

You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;

And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar,

It will inflame you,—it will make you mad:

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;

For, if you should, O, what would come of it!

4 Cit. Read the will; we'll hear it, Antony;

You shall read us the will,—Cæsar's will.

Ant. Will you be patient? will you stay awhile?

I have o'ershot myself to tell you of it:
I fear I wrong the honourable men
Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar; I do fear it.

4 Cit. They were traitors: honourable men!
Citizens. The will! the testament!

2 Cit. They were villains, murderers: the will! read the will!

Ant. You will compel me, then, to read the Then make a ring about the corse of Cæsar,
And let me show you him that made the will.
Shall I descend? and will you give me leave?

Citizens. Come down.

2 Cit. Descend. [ANTONY comes down.]

3 Cit. You shall have leave.

4 Cit. A ring; stand round.

1 Cit. Stand from the hearse, stand from the body.

2 Cit. Room for Antony,—most noble Antony!

Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far Citizens. Stand back; room; bear back!

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember
The first time ever Cæsar put it on;
'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent,
That day he overcame the Nervii:—
Look! in this place ran Cassius' dagger through:
See what a rent the envious Casca made:
Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd;
And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,
Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it,
As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd
If Brutus so unkindly knock'd or no;
For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel:
Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar loved him!

This was the most unkindest cut of all;
For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
O, now you weep; and I perceive you feel
The dint of pity: these are gracious drops.
Kind souls, what, weep you when you but behold

Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Look you here,
Here is himself, marr'd, as you see, with traitors.

1 Cit. O piteous spectacle!

2 Cit. O noble Cæsar!

3 Cit. O woeful day!

4 Cit. O traitors, villains!

1 Cit. O most bloody sight!

2 Cit. We will be revenged: revenge,— about,—seek,—burn,—fire,—kill,—slay,—let not a traitor live!

Ant. Stay, countrymen.

1 Cit. Peace there! hear the noble Antony.
2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him,
we'll die with him.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They that have done this deed are honourable;—
What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,
That made them do it;—they are wise and honourable,

And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.
I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts:
I am no orator, as Brutus is;

But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend; and that they know full
well

That gave me public leave to speak of him:
For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;
I tell you that which you yourselves do know;
Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor poor dumb mouths,

And bid them speak for me: but were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

Citizens. We'll mutiny.

1 Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus.

3 Cit. Away, then! come seek the conspirators.

Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak.

Citizens. Peace, ho! hear Antony, most noble Antony.

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what:

Wherein hath Cæsar thus deserv'd your loves?
Alas, you know not,—I must tell you, then.—
You have forgot the will I told you of.

Citizens. Most true;—the will:—let's stay and hear the will.

Ant. Here is the will and under Cæsar's seal
To every Roman citizen he gives,

To every several man, seventy-five drachmas.
2 Cit. Most noble Cæsar!—we'll revenge his death.

3 Cit. O royal Cæsar!

Ant. Hear me with patience.

Citizens. Peace, ho!

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,
His private arbours, and new-planted orchards
On this side Tiber; he hath left them you,
And to your heirs for ever,—common pleasures,
To walk abroad and recreate yourselves.
Here was a Cæsar! when comes such another?

1 Cit. Never, never.—Come away, away!

We'll burn his body in the holy place,
And with the brands fire the traitors' houses.
Take up the body.

2 Cit. Go, fetch fire.

3 Cit. Pluck down benches.

4 Cit. Pluck down forms, windows, anything.
[Exeunt Citizens with the body.]

Ant. Now let it work: mischief, thou art afloat.

Take thou what course thou wilt!

Enter a Servant.

How now, fellow!

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Cæsar's house.

Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him:
He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us anything.

Serv. I heard him say Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.

Ant. Behke they had some notice of the people,
How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—ROME. A Street.

Enter CINNA the Poet.

Cin. I dreamt to-night that I did feast with
Cæsar,
And things unlucky charge my fantasy:
I have no will to wander forth of doors,
Yet something leads me forth.

Enter Citizens.

1 Cit. What is your name?

2 Cit. Whither are you going?

3 Cit. Where do you dwell?

4 Cit. Are you a married man or a bachelor?

2 Cit. Answer every man directly.

1 Cit. Ay, and briefly.

4 Cit. Ay, and wisely.

3 Cit. Ay, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man or a bachelor? Then to answer every man directly and briefly, wisely and truly.—
Wisely, I say I am a bachelor.

2 Cit. That's as much as to say they are fools that marry: you'll bear me a bang for that, I fear. Proceed; directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cæsar's funeral.

1 Cit. As a friend or an enemy?

Cin. As a friend.

2 Cit. That matter is answered directly.

4 Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly.

Cin. Briefly I dwell in the Capitol.

3 Cit. Your name, sir, truly.

Cin. Truly my name is Cinna.

1 Cit. Tear him to pieces; he's a conspirator.

Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.

4 Cit. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.

Cin. I am not Cinna the conspirator.

4 Cit. It is no matter, his name's Cinna; pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.

3 Cit. Tear him, tear him! Come, brands, ho! fire-brands: to Brutus', to Cassius'; burn all: some to Decius' house, and some to Cascæ's; some to Ligarius': away, go!

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—ROME. A room in ANTONY'S
House.

ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS, seated at a table.

Ant. These many, then, shall die; their names are prick'd.

Oct. Your brother too must die; consent you, Lepidus?

Lep. I do consent.

Oct.

Prick him down, Antony.
Lep. Upon condition Publius shall not live,
Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony.

Ant. He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn him.

But, Lepidus, go you to Cæsar's house;
Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here?

Oct. Or here or at the Capitol.

[Exit LEPIDUS.]

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man,
Meet to be sent on errands: is it fit,
The threefold world divided, he should stand
One of the three to share it?

Oct. So you thought him;
And took his voice who should be prick'd to
die,

In our black sentence and proscription. [you:

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than
And though we lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads,
He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold,
To groan and sweat under the business,
Either led or driven as we point the way;
And having brought our treasure where we will,
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears
And gaze in commons.

Oct.

You may do your will:
But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and for that I do appoint him store of provender:
It is a creature that I teach to fight,
To wind, to stop, to run directly on,—
His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit.
And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so;
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;—

A barren-spinted fellow; one that feeds
On abject orts and imitations,
Which, out of use and stal'd by other men,
Begin his fashion: do not talk of him
But as a property. And now, Octavius,
Listen great things.—Brutus and Cassius
Are levying powers: we must straight make
head:

Therefore let our alliance be combin'd,
Our best friends made, our means stretch'd;
And let us presently go sit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered.

Oct. Let us do so: for we are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies; [fear,
And some that smile have in their hearts, I
Millions of mischiefs. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Before BRUTUS'S Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

Drum. Enter BRUTUS, LUCILIUS, LUCIUS, and Soldiers; TITINIUS and PINDARUS meeting them.

Bru. Stand, ho!

Lucil. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Bru. What now, Lucilius! is Cassius near?

Lucil. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his master.

[PIN. gives a letter to BRU.]

Bru. He greets me well.—Your master,
Pindarus,
In his own change, or by ill officers,
Hath given me some worthy cause to wish
Things done undone: but if he be at hand
I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt
But that my noble master will appear
Such as he is, full of regard and honour.
Bru. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucilius;
How he receiv'd you let me be resolv'd.

Lucil. With courtesy and with respect enough;
But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly conference,
As he hath us'd of old.

Bru. Thou hast describ'd
A hot friend cooling: ever note, Lucilius,
When love begins to sicken and decay,
It useth enforced ceremony.
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith:
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle;
But when they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crests, and like deceitful jades,
Sink in the trial. Comes his army on?

Lucil. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd;
The greater part, the horse in general,
Are come with Cassius. [March within.]

Bru. Hark! he is arriv'd:
March gently on to meet him.

Enter CASSIUS and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho!

Bru. Stand, ho! speak the word along.

Within. Stand!

Within. Stand!

Within. Stand! [wrong.]

Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me

Bru. Judge me, you gods! wrong I mine
enemies?

And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?

Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides
wrongs;

And when you do them,—

Bru. Cassius, be content;
Speak your griefs softly,—I do know you well:—
Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Which should perceive nothing but love from
us,

Let us not wrangle: bid them move away;
Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,
And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus,
Bid our commanders lead their charges off
A little from this ground. [man]

Bru. Lucilius, do you the like; and let no
Come to our tent till we have done our conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Within the Tent of BRUTUS.

Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

Cas. That you hath wrong'd me doth appear in this,—
You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella

For taking bribes here of the Sardians;
Wherein my letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man, were slighted off.

Bru. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this it is not meet
That every nice offence should bear his comment.

Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm;
To sell and mart your offices for gold
To underservers.

Cas. I an itching palm!
You know that you are Brutus that speak this,
Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

Bru. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,
And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement!

Bru. Remember March, the ides of March remember!

Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake?
What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for justice? What, shall one of us,
That struck the foremost man of all this world
But for supporting robbers, shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes,
And sell the mighty space of our large honours
For so much trash as may be grasped thus?—
I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bay not me,—
I'll not endure it: you forget yourself
To hedge me in; I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions.

Bru. Go to; you are not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Bru. I say you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself;
Have mind upon your health, tempt me no
further.

Bru. Away, slight man!

Cas. Is't possible?

Bru. Hear me, for I will speak.
Must I give way and room to your rash chol-er? Shall I be frighted when a madman stares?

Cas. O ye gods, ye gods! must I endure all
this?

Bru. All this! ay, more: fret till your proud heart break;

Go, show your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I
budge?

Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch
Under your testy humour? By the gods,
You shall digest the venom of your spleen
Though it do split you; for from this day forth
I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this?

Bru. You say you are a better soldier:
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well: for mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

Cas. You wrong me every way; you wrong me, Brutus;

I said an elder soldier, not a better:
Did I say better?

Bru. If you did, I care not.

Cas. When Cæsar liv'd, he durst not thus have mov'd me.

Bru. Peace, peace! you durst not so have tempted him.

Cas. I durst not!

Bru. No.

Cas. What, durst not tempt him!

Bru. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love; I may do that I shall be sorry for. [for.]

Bru. You have done that you should be sorry
There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats;
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me;—

For I can raise no money by vile means:
By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection;—I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions, [Cassius?
Which you denied me: was that done like
Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friend
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

Cas. I denied you not.

Bru. You did.

Cas. I did not: he was but a fool that brought
My answer back.—Brutus hath riv'd my heart:
A friend should bear his friend's infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.

Cas. You love me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.

Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults. [appear]

Bru. A flatterer's would not, though they do
As huge as high Olympus. [come.]

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius,
For Cassius is weary of the world;
Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother;
Check'd like a bondman: all his faults observ'd
Set in a notebook, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep
My spirit from mine eyes!—There is my dagger,
And here my naked breast; within, a heart
Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold:
If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth;
I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart:
Strike, as thou didst at Cæsar; for I know
When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov'd'st him better

Than ever thou lov'd'st Cassius.

Bru. Sheathe your dagger:
Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, dishonour shall be humour.
O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb,
That carries anger as the flint bears fire;
Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd
To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,
When grief and blood ill-temper'd vexeth him?

Bru. When I spoke that I was ill-temper'd
too.

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

Bru. And my heart too.

Cas. O Brutus,—

Bru. What's the matter?

Cas. Have not you love enough to bear with me. [me]

When that rash humour which my mother gave Makes me forgetful?

Bru. Yes, Cassius; and from henceforth,
When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,
He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so. [Noise within.]

Poet. [Within.] Let me go in to see the generals;

There is some grudge between 'em; 'tis not meet

They be alone.

Lucil. [Within.] You shall not come to them.

Poet. [Within.] Nothing but death shall stay
me.

Enter Poet, followed by LUCILIUS and TITINIUS.

Cas. How now! what's the matter?

Poet. For shame, you generals! what do you mean! [be;]

Love, and be friends, as two such men should
For I have seen more years, I'm sure, than ye.

Cas. Ha, ha! how vilely doth this cynic rhyme! [hence!]

Bru. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow,
Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion.

Bru. I'll know his humour when he knows his time: [fools?]

What should the wars do with these jiggling
Companion hence!

Cas. Away, away, be gone!

[Exit Poet.]

Bru. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders

Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.

Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Messala
with you

Immediately to us.

[Exeunt LUCIL. and TIT.]

Bru. Lucius, a bowl of wine!

Cas. I did not think you could have been so angry.

Bru. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use

If you give place to accidental evils.

Bru. No man bears sorrow better.—Portia is dead.

Cas. Ha! Portia!

Bru. She is dead.

Cas. How scap'd I killing when I cross'd you so?—

O insupportable and touching loss!—

Upon what sickness?

Bru. Impatient of my absence,
And grief that young Octavius with Mark

Antony
Have made themselves so strong; for with her
death

That tidings came;—with this she fell distract,
And, her attendants, absent, swallow'd fire.

Cas. And died so?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods.

Enter LUCIUS with wine and tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her.—Give me bowl of wine.—

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius.

[Drinks]
Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge.—

Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

[Drinks.]
Bru. Come in, Titinius!

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Welcome, good Messala!—

Now sit we close about this taper here,
And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone?

Bru. No more, I pray you.—
Messala, I have here received letters,
That young Octavius and Mark Antony
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Mes. Myself have letters of the self-same tenor.

Bru. With what addition?

Mes. That, by proscription and bills of outlawry,

Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus
Have put to death an hundred senators.

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree;
Mine speak of seventy senators that died
By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one!

Mes. Cicero is dead,
And by that order of proscription.—
Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?
Bru. Nothing, Messala.

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.
Bru. Why ask you? hear you aught of her in yours?

Mes. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:
For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die,
Messala:

With meditating that she must die once,
I have the patience to endure it now.

Mes. Even so great men great losses should endure.

Cas. I have as much of this in art as you,
But yet my nature could not bear it so.

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think

Of marching to Philippi presently?

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason?

Cas. This it is:

'Tis better that the enemy seek us:
So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,
Doing himself offence, whilst we, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.

The people 'twixt Philippi and this ground
Do stand but in a forc'd affection;
For they have grudg'd us contribution:

The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new-aided, and encourag'd;
From which advantage shall we cut him off
If at Philippi we do face him there,
These people at our back.

Cas. Hear me, good brother.

Bru. Under your pardon.—You must note beside,

That we have tried the utmost of our friends,
Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe:

That enemy increaseth every day;

We, at the height, are ready to decline.

There is a tide in the affairs of men

Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;

Omitted, all the voyage of their life

Is bound in shallows and in miseries.

On such a full sea are we now afloat;

And we must take the current when it serve
Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on;

We'll along ourselves, and meet them at Philippi. [talk,

Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our
And nature must obey necessity;

Which we will niggard with a little rest.

There is no more to say?

Cas. No more. Good-night:
Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my gown. [Exit LUCIUS.]

Farewell good Messala:—

Good-night, Titinius;—noble, noble Cassius.

Good-night, and good repose.

Cas. O my dear brother!

This was an ill beginning of the night:

Never some such division 'tween our souls!

Let it not, Brutus.

Bru. Everything is well.

Cas. Good-night, my lord.

Bru. Good-might, good brother.

Tit. and Mes. Good-night, Lord Brutus.

Bru. Farewell, every one.

[Exeunt CAS., TIT., and MES.]

Re-enter LUCIUS with the gown.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?

Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What, thou speak'st drowsily!
Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'erwatch'd.

Call Claudius and some other of my men;

I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro and Claudius!

Enter VARRO and CLAUDIUS.

Var. Calls my lord? [sleep;

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent and
It may be I shall raise you by and by

On business to my brother Cassius.

Var. So please you we will stand and watch your pleasure. [sirs;

Bru. I will not have it so: lie down, good
It may be I shall otherwise bethink me.—

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so;
I put it in the pocket of my gown.

[VAR. and CLAUD. lie down.]

Luc. I was sure your lordship did not give it me.

Bru. Bear with me, good boy, I am much forgetful.

Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile,
And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an't please you.

Bru. It does, my boy:

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir. [might;

Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy
I know young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It was well done; and thou shalt sleep again;

I will not hold thee long: if I do live
I will be good to thee. [Music and a Song.

This is a sleepy tune.—O murderous slumber,
Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy
That plays the music?—Gentle knave, good-
night;

I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee:
If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument;
I'll take it from thee; and, good boy, good-
night.—

Let me see, let me see;—is not the leaf turn'd
down

Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[Sits down.

Enter the Ghost of CÆSAR.

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes
here?

I think it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
It comes upon me.—Art thou anything?

Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold and my hair to stare?

Speak to me what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well;

Then I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.

Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi, then.— [Exit Ghost.

Now I have taken heart thou vanishest:
Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.—
Boy Lucius!—Varro! Claudius!—sirs, awake!— Claudius!

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks he still is at his instrument.—
Lucius, awake!

Luc. My lord?

Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so-criedst out?

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst: didst thou see anything?

Luc. Nothing, my lord.

Bru. Sleep again, Lucius.—Sirrah, Claudius!
Fellow, thou, awake!

Var. My lord?

Clau. My lord?

Bru. Why did you cry so out, sirs, in your sleep?

Var. and Clau. Did we, my lord?

Bru. Ay: saw you anything?

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Clau. Nor I, my lord.

Bru. Go and commend me to my brother

Cassius;

Bid him set on his powers betimes before,

And we will follow.

Var. and Clau. It shall be done, my lord.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Plains of Philippi.

Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered:
You said the enemy would not come down,
But keep the hills and upper regions;
It proves not so: their battles are at hand
They mean to warn us at Philippi here,
Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know
Wherefore they do it: they could be content
To visit other places; and come down
With fearful bravery, thinking by this face
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, generals:
The enemy comes on in gallant show;
Their bloody sign of battle is hung out,
And something to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on,
Upon the left hand of the even field.

Oct. Upon the right hand I; keep thou the left.

Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?

Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.
[March.

*Drum. Enter BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and their Army; LUCILIUS, TITINIUS, MESSALA,
and others.*

Bru. They stand, and would have parley.
Cas. Stand fast, Titinius: we must out and talk. [battle?

Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of

Ant. No, Cæsar, we will answer on their charge. [words.

Make forth; the generals would have some
Oct. Stir not until the signal. [men?

Bru. Words before blows: is it so, country-

Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.

Bru. Good words are better than bad strokes,
Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words:

Witness the hole you made in Cæsar's heart,
Crying, Long live! hail, Cæsar!

Cas. Antony,
The posture of your blows are yet unknown;
But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too.

Bru. O yes, and soundless too;
For you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony,

And very wisely threat before you sting.

Ant. Villains, you did not so when your vile daggers

Hack'd one another in the sides of Cæsar:
You show'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd like hounds,

And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Cæsar's feet;
Whilst damned Casca, like a cur, behind,
Struck Cæsar on the neck. O you flatterers!

Cas. Flatterers!—Now, Brutus, thank yourself:

This tongue had not offended so to-day
If Cassius might have rul'd.

Oct. Come, come, the cause: if arguing make us sweat,

The proof of it will turn to redder drops.

Look,—

I draw a sword against conspirators;
When think you that the sword goes up again?—
Never till Cæsar's three-and-thirty wounds
Be well aveng'd; or till another Cæsar
Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.

Bru. Cæsar, thou canst not die by traitors' hands,

Unless thou bring'st them with thee.

Oct. So I hope;
I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.

Bru. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou couldst not die more honourable.

Cas. A peevish school-boy, worthless of such honour,
Join'd with a masker and a reveller?

Ant. Old Cassius still!

Oct. Come, Antony; away!—
Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth:
If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;
If not, when you have stomachs.

[Exeunt OCT., ANT., and their Army.]

Cas. Why, now, blow wind, swell billow, and swim bark!

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Bru. Ho, Lucilius! hark, a word with you.
Lucil. My lord.

[BRU. and LUCIL. converse apart.]

Cas. Messala,—

Mes. What says my general?

Cas. Messala,

This is my birth-day; as this very day
Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand Messala:
Be thou my witness that, against my will,
As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set
Upon one battle all our liberties.

You know that I held Epicurus strong,
And his opinion: now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do presage.

Coming from Sardis, on our former ensign
Two mighty eagles fell; and there they perch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;
Who to Philippi here consorted us:
This morning are they fled away and gone;
And in their steads do ravens, crows, and kites
Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us,
As we were sickly prey: their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly;
For I am fresh of spirit; and resolv'd
To meet all perils very constantly.

Bru. Even so, Lucilius.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,
The gods to-day stand friendly, that we may,
Lovers of peace, lead on our days to age!
But, since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.
If we do lose this battle, then is this
The very last time we shall speak together:
What are you, then, determined to do?

Bru. Even by the rule of that philosophy
By which I did blame Cato for the death
Which he did give himself.—I know not how,
But I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life:—arming myself with patience
To stay the providence of some high powers
That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Through the streets of Rome?

[Roman.]
Bru. No, Cassius, no: think not, thou noble
That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work the ides of March began;
And whether we shall meet again I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:

For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!
If we do meet again, why, we shall smile;
If not, why, then, this parting was well made.

Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true this parting was well made.

Bru. Why, then, lead on.—O that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end,
And then the end is known.—Come, ho!
away! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—THE PLAINS OF PHILIPPI. The Field of Battle.

Alarum. Enter BRUTUS and MESSALA.

Bru. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills
Unto the legions on the other side:

[Loud alarum.]
Let them set on at once; for I perceive
But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.
Ride, ride, Messala: let them all come down.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—THE PLAINS OF PHILIPPI. Another part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter CASSIUS and TITINIUS.

Cas. O look, Titinius, look, the villains fly!
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy;
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early;

Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly: his soldiers fell to spoil:
Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.

Enter PINDARUS.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord!
Fly, therefore, noble Cassius! fly far off.

Cas. This hill is far enough.—Look, look, Titinius;

Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?
Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou lov'st me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,

Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops
And here again, that I may rest assur'd
Whether yond troops are friend or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again even with a thought.

[Exit.]

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill;
My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—

[Exit PINDARUS.]

This day I breathed first: time is come round,
And where I did begin there shall I end;
My life is run his compass.—Sirrah, what news?

Pm. [Above] O my lord!

Cas. What news?

Pm. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;—

Yet he spurs on.—Now they are almost on him;—

Now, Titinius!—now some light:—O, he 'lights too:—

He's ta'en;—and, hark! they shout for joy.

[Shout.]

Cas. Come down, behold no more.
O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!

Enter PINDARUS.

Come hither, sirrah:

In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath!

Now be a freeman; and with this good sword,
That ran through Cæsar's bowels, search this bosom.

Stand not to answer: here, take thou the hills;
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword.—Cæsar, thou art re-veng'd,

Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

Pm. So, I am free; yet would not so have been,

Durst I have done my will. O Cassius!
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him.

[Exit.]

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

Mes. Where did you leave him?

Tit. All disconsolate,
With Pindarus, his bondman, on this hill.

Mes. Is not that he that lies upon the ground?

Tit. He lies not like the living. O my heart!

Mes. Is not that he?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala,
But Cassius is no more.—O setting sun,

As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set,—
The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone;
Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are done!

Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.

Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed.

O hateful error, melancholy's child,
Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O error, soon conceiv'd,

Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,

But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee!

Tit. What, Pindarus! where art thou, Pindarus?

Mes. Seek him, Titinius: whilst I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears: I may say, thrusting it;
For piercing steel and darts envenomed
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus
As tidings of this sight.

Tit. Hie you, Messala,

[Exit MESSALA.]

And I will seek for Pindarus the while.
Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give't thee? Didst thou not hear their shouts?

Alas, thou hast misconstru'd everything.
But, hold thee, take this garland on thy brow;
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Cæsar's soul.—
By your leave, gods.—This is a Roman's part:
Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart.

[Dies.]

Alarum. Re-enter MESSALA, with BRUTUS, YOUNG CATO, STRATO, VOLUMINIUS, and LUCILIUS.

Bru. Where, where, Messala, doth his body
lie?

Mes. Lo, yonder; and Titinius mourning it.

Bru. Titinius' face is upward.

Cato. He is slain.

Bru. O Julius Cæsar, thou art mighty yet!
Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords
In our own proper entrails. [Low alarums.]

Cato. Brave Titinius!

Look, where he have not crown'd dead Cassius!

Bru. Are yet two Romans living such as these?—

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!

It is impossible that ever Rome

Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe more tears

To this dead man than you shall see me pay.—

I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.—

Come, therefore, and to Thassos send his body:

His funerals shall not be in our camp,

Lest it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come,—

And come, young Cato; let us to the field.—

Labeo and Flavius, set our battles on:—

'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night

We shall try fortune in a second fight.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both Armies; then BRUTUS, YOUNG CATO, LUCILIUS, and others.

Bru. Yet, countrymen, O, yet hold up your heads! [with me?]

Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go I will proclaim my name about the field:—
I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!
A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend;
I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

[Charges the enemy.]

Bru. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I;
Brutus, my country's friend; know me for Brutus!

[Exit, charging the enemy. YOUNG CATO is overpowered, and falls.]

Lucil. O young and noble Cato, art thou down?

Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius;
And mayst be honour'd, being Cato's son.

1 Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

Lucil. Only I yield to die?
There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight;

[Offering money.]

Kill, Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

1 Sold. We must not.—A noble prisoner!

2 Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony Brutus is ta'en.

[general.—]

1 Sold. I'll tell the news.—Here comes the

Enter ANTONY.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Lucil. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough:
I dare assure thee that no enemy

Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus:
The gods defend him from so great a shame!
When you do find him, or alive or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himself.

Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,

A prize no less in worth: keep this man safe,
Give him all kindness: I had rather have Such men my friends than enemies. Go on,
And see wh'er Brutus be alive or dead;
And bring us word unto Octavius' tent
How everything is chang'd.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the Field.

Enter BRUTUS, DARDANIUS, CLITUS, STRATO and VOLUMNIUS.

Bru. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.

Cl. Statilius show'd the torch-light; but, my lord,
He came not back: he is or ta'en or slain.

Bru. Sit thee down, Clitus: slaying is the word;

It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.

[Whispering him.]

Cl. What, I, my lord? No, not for all the world.

Bru. Peace, then, no words.

Cl. I'll rather kill myself.

Bru. Hark thee, Dardanius!

[Whispers him.]

Dar. Shall I do such a deed?

Cl. O Dardanius!

Dar. O Clitus!

Cl. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Dar. To kill him, Clitus. Look, he meditates.

Cl. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,
That it runs over even at his eyes.

[word.]

Bru. Come hither, good Volumnius; list a

Vol. What says my lord?

Bru. Why, this, Volumnius:
The ghost of Cæsar hath appear'd to me

Two several times by night,—at Sardis once,

And this last night here in Philippi fields:

I know my hour is come.

Vol.

Not so, my lord.

Bru. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit:

[Low alarums.]

It is more worthy to leap in ourselves

Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius,

Thou know'st that we two went to school together:

Even for that our love of old, I pray thee,

Hold thou my sword-hilt whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.]

Cl. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.

[Volumnius.—]

Bru. Farewell to you;—and you;—and you,
Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;
Farewell to thee too, Strato.—Countrymen,
My heart doth joy that yet, in all my life,
I found no man but he was true to me.
I shall have glory by this losing day
More than Octavius and Mark Antony
By this vile conquest shall attain unto.
So fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue
Hath almost ended his life's history:

Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest,

That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within, "Fly, fly, fly!"]

Cl. Fly, my lord, fly.

Bru.

Hence! I will follow.

[Exeunt CLI., DAR., and VOL.]

I pr'ythee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;

Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in it:

Hold, then, my sword, and turn away thy face,

While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

Str. Give me your hand first: fare you well, my lord.

Bru. Farewell, good Strato.—Cæsar, now be still:

I kill'd not thee with half so good a will.

[He runs on his sword, and dies.]

Alarum. Retreat. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, and Army; MESSALA and LUCILIUS, prisoners.

Oct. What man is that?

Mes. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy master?

[Messala:]

Str. Free from the bondage you are in,
The conquerors can but make a fire of him;
For Brutus only overcame himself,

And no man else hath honour by his death.

Lucil. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee, Brutus,
That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that serv'd Brutus I will entertain them.

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Stra. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.

Mes. How died my master, Strato?

Stra. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all:

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar;
He only, in a general honest thought,
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, This was a man!

Oct. According to his virtue, let us use him
With all respect and rites of burial.
Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
Most like soldier, order'd honourably.—
So, call the field to rest: and let's away,
To part the glories of this happy day.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in CLEOPATRA'S Palace.

Enter DEMETRIUS and PHILO.

Phi. Nay, but this dotage of our general's O'erflows the measure: those his goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

The office and devotion of their view
Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart,

Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles on his breast, reneges all temper,
And is become the bellows and the fan
To cool a gipsy's lust. [Flourish within.]

Look where they come:
Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's fool: behold and see!

Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA, with their Trains; Eunuchs fanning her.

Cleo. If it be love, indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.

Cleo. I'll set a bourn how far to be belov'd.

Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me:—the sum.

Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony:

Fulvia perchance is angry; or, who knows
If the scarce-bearded Cæsar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you, Do this or this;
Take in that kingdom and enfranchise that;
Perform't, or else we damn thee.

Ant. How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance! nay, and most like:—

You must not stay here longer,—your dis-
mission

Is come from Cæsar; therefore hear it, Antony.— Where's Fulvia's process?—Cæsar's I would say?—both?— [queen,

Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's
Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Cæsar's-homager: else so thy cheek pays shame [sengers!

When shrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds.—The mes-Ant. Let Rome in Tiber melt, and the wide arch

Of the rang'd empire fall! Here is my space.

Kingdoms are clay: our dungy earth alike
Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life
Is to do thus; when such a mutual pair

[Embracing.

And such a twain can do't, in which I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weat
We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood!
Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?—
I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
Will be himself.

Ant. But stirr'd by Cleopatra.—
Now, for the love of Love and her soft hours,
Let's not confound the time with conference harsh:

There's not a minute of our lives should stretch Without some pleasure now:—what sport tonight?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fie, wrangling queen!
Whom everything becomes,—to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every passion fully strives
To make itself in thee fair and admir'd!
No messenger; but thine, and all alone,
To-night we'll wander through the streets and note

The qualities of people. Come, my queen;
Last night you did desire it:—speak not to us.

[Exeunt ANT. and CLEO., with their Train.

Dem. Is Cæsar with Antonius priz'd so slight?

Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
He comes too short of that great property
Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I am full sorry
That he approves the common liar, who
Thus speaks of him at Rome: but I will hope
Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy!
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—ALEXANDRIA. Another Room in Cleopatra's Palace.

Enter CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, most anything Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen? O that I knew this husband, which you say must charge his horns with garlands!

Alex. Soothsayer,—

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man?—Is't you, sir, that know things?

Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy
A little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand.

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine enough

Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray, then, foresee me one. [are.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you

Char. He means in flesh.

Irás. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more beloved than beloved. [drinking.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune!
Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all: let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage:
find me to marry me with Octavius Cæsar, and companion me with my mistress.

Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom you serve. [than figs.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better Sooth. You have seen and prov'd a fairer former fortune

Than that which is to approach.

Char. Then belike my children shall have no names:—pr'ythee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb,
And fertile every wish, a million.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think none but your sheets are pry to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, tonight, shall be—drunk to bed.

Irás. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the o'erflowing Nilus presageth famine.

Irás. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.—
Pr'ythee, tell her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.

Irás. But how, but how? give me particulars

Sooth. I have said.

Irás. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?

Irás. Not in my husband's nose.

Char. Our worse thoughts heavens mend!—Alexas,—come, his fortune, his fortune!—O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee! And let her die too, and give him a worse! and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fiftyfold a cuckold! Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight; good Isis, I beseech thee!

Irás. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncuckolded: therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly!

Char. Amen.

Alex. Lo, now, if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they'd do't!

Eno. Hush! here comes Antony.

Char. Not he; the queen.

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. Saw you my lord?

Eno. No, lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No, madam. [sudden]

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth; but on the A Roman thought hath struck him.—Enobarbus,— Eno. Madam!

Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither.—

Where's Alexas? [proaches.]

Alex. Here, at your service.—My lord ap-

Cleo. We will not look upon him: go with us. [Exeunt CLEO., ENO., CHAR., IRAS, ALEX. and Soothsayer.]

Enter ANTONY, with a Messenger and Attendants.

Mess. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.

Ant. Against my brother Lucius.

Mess. Ay:

But soon that war had end, and the time's state Made friends of them, joining their force 'gainst Cæsar;

Whose better issue in the war, from Italy, Upon the first encounter, drave them.

Ant. Well, what worst? [teller.]

Mess. The nature of bad news infects the Ant. When it concerns the fool or coward.—

On:—

Things that are past are done with me.—'Tis thus;

Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death I hear him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labienus,—

This is stiff news,—hath, with his Parthian force,

Extended Asia from Euphrates; His conquering banner shook from Syria To Lydia and to Ionia;

Whilst,—

Ant. Antony, thou wouldst say,—

Mess. O, my lord!

Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general tongue;

Name Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome;

Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults

With such full license as both truth and malice Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth weeds [told us]

When our quick minds lie still; and our ills Is as our earring. Fare thee well awhile.

Mess. At your noble pleasure. [Exit.]

Ant. From Sicyon, ho, the news! Speak there!

1 Att. The man from Sicyon,—is there such an one?

2 Att. He stays upon your will.

Ant. Let him appear,—

These strong Egyptian fetters I must break, Or lose myself in dotage.—

Enter a second Messenger.

What are you?

2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where died she?

2 Mess. In Sicyon: [serious] Her length of sickness, with what else more Importeth thee to know, this bears.

[Gives a letter.]

Ant. Forbear me.

[Exit second Messenger.]

There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it:

What our contempts do often hurl from us, We wish it ours again; the present pleasure, By revolution lowering, does become The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone; The hand could pluck her back that shov'd her on.

I must from this enchanting queen break off: Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know, My idleness doth hatch.—Ho, Enobarbus!

Re-enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women: we see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women die: it were pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly; I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment: I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.

Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: we cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacs can report: this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. Would I had never seen her!

Eno. O sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blessed withal would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir!

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia!

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein that when old robes are worn out there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented: this grief is crowned with consolation; your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:—and, indeed, the tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow. [state]

Ant. The business she hath broached in the Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers Have notice what we purpose. I shall break The cause of our expedience to the queen, And get her leave to part. For not alone The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches, Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too Of many our contriving friends in Rome Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands The empire of the sea; our slippery people,— Whose love is never link'd to the deserter Till his deserts are past,—begin to throw Pompey the Great, and all his dignities, Upon his son; who, high in name and power, Higher than both in blood and life, stands up For the main soldier: whose quality, going on, The sides o' the world may danger: much is breeding,

Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life, And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure, To such whose place is under us, requires Our quick remove from hence.

Eno. I shall do't.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in CLEOPATRA'S Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he does:—

I did not send you:—if you find him sad,

Say I am dancing; if in mirth, report

That I am sudden sick: quick, and return.

[Exit ALEXAS.]

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,

You do not hold the method to enforce

The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not?

Char. In each thing give him way; cross him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool,—the way to lose him. [forbear:]

Char. Tempt him not so too far; I wish, In time we hate that which we often fear.

But here comes Antony.

Cleo. I am sick and sullen.

Enter ANTONY.

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose,— [fall:]

Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian; I shall It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature Will not sustain it.

Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—

Cleo. Pray you, stand further from me.

Ant. What's the matter?

Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.

What says the married woman?—You may go: Would she had never given you leave to come! Let her not say 'tis I that keep you here,— I have no power upon you; hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know,—

Cleo. O, never was there queen So mightily betray'd! Yet at the first I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Why should I think you can be mine and true,

Though you in swearing shake the throned gods,

Who have been false to Fulvia? Riotous madness,

To be entangled with those mouth-made vows, Which break themselves in swearing!

Ant. Most sweet queen,—

Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going,

But bid farewell, and go: when you su'd staying,

Then was the time for words: no going then:— Eternity was in our lips and eyes,

Bless in our brows' bent; none our parts so poor But was a race of heaven: they are so still,

Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world, Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady!

Cleo. I would I had thy inches; thou shouldst know

There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, queen:

The strong necessity of time commands Our services awhile; but my full heart Remains in use with you. Our Italy

Shines o'er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius

Makes his approaches to the port of Rome:

Equality of two domestic powers [strength,

Breeds scrupulous faction: the hated, grown to

Are newly grown to love: the condemn'd

Pompey,

Rich in his father's honour, creeps apace

Into the hearts of such as have not thriv'd

Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;

And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge
By any desperate change. My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my
going,

Is Fulvia's death.

Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me freedom,

It does from childishness:—can Fulvia die?

Ant. She's dead, my queen:

Look here, and, at thy sovereign leisure, read
The garboils she awak'd; at the last, best.
See when and where she died.

Cleo. O most false love!

Where be the sacred vials thou shouldst fill
With sorrowful water? Now I see, I see,
In Fulvia's death how mine receiv'd shall be.

Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepar'd to
know

The purposes I bear; which are, or cease,
As you shall give the advice. By the fire
That quickens Nilus' slime, I go from hence
Thy soldier, servant; making peace or war
As thou affect'st.

Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come;—
But let it be:—I am quickly ill and well,
So Antony loves.

Ant. My precious queen, forbear;
And give true evidence to his love, which stands
An honourable trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I prythee, turn aside and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say the tears
Belong to Egypt: good now, play one scene
Of excellent dissembling; and let it look Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll heat my blood: no more.

Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is meetly.

Ant. Now, by my sword,—

Cleo. And target.—Still he mends;
But this is not the best:—look, prythee,
Charmian,

How this Herculean Roman does become
The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.

Sir, you and I must part,—but that's not it;
Sir, you and I have lov'd,—but there's not it;
That you know well: something it is I would,—
O, my oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your royalty
Holds idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself.

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour
To bear such idleness so near the heart
As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me;
Since my becoming kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you: your honour calls you hence;
Therefore be deaf to my unpitied folly,
And all the gods go with you! upon your sword
Sit laurel victory! and smooth success
Be strew'd before your feet!

Ant. Let us go. Come
Our separation so abides, and flies,
That thou, residing here, go'st yet with me,
And I, hence fleeting, here remain with thee.
Away!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—ROME. An Apartment in CÆSAR'S House.

Enter OCTAVIUS CÆSAR, LEPIDUS, and Attendants.

Cæs. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth
know,

It is not Cæsar's natural vice to hate
Our great competitor. From Alexandria
This is the news:—he fishes, drinks, and wastes

The lamps of night in revel: is not more manlike
Than Cleopatra, nor the queen of Ptolemy [or
More womanly than he: hardly gave audience, Vouchsaf'd to think he had partners: you shall find there

A man who is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think there are
Evils enow to darken all his goodness:
His faults in him seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness; hereditary
Rather than purchas'd; what he cannot change
Than what he chooses.

Cæs. You are too indulgent. Let us grant it is not

Amiss to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy;
To give a kingdom for a mirth; to sit
And keep the turn of tuppling with a slave;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knaves that smell of sweat: say this becomes him,—

As his composure must be rare indeed
Whom these things cannot blemish,—yet must
Antony

No way excuse his soils when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness. If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits and the dryness of his bones
Call on him for't: but to confound such time,
That drums him from his sport, and speaks as loud

As his own state and ours,—'tis to be chid
As we rate boys, who, being mature in knowledge,

Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgment.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Here's more news.

Mess. Thy biddings have been done: and every hour,

Most noble Cæsar, shalt thou have report
How 'tis abroad. Pompey is strong at sea;
And it appears he is belov'd of those
That only have fear'd Cæsar: to the ports
The discontents repair, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Cæs. I should have known no less:
It hath been taught us from the primal state
That he which is was wish'd until he were;
And the ebb'd man, ne'er lov'd till ne'er worth love, [body,

Comes dear'd by being lack'd. This common
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to and back, lacking the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion.

Mess. Cæsar, I bring thee word,
Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates,

Make the sea serve them, which they ear and wound

With keels of every kind: many hot inroads
They make in Italy; the borders maritime
Lack blood to think on't, and flush youth revolt:
No vessel can peep forth but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen; for Pompey's name strikes
more

Than could his war resisted.

Cæs. Antony,
Leave thy lascivious wassails. When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtus and Pansa, consuls at thy heel
Did famine follow; whom thou fought'st against,
Though daintily brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer: thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at: thy palate then did deign

The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,

The barks of trees thou browsed'st; on the Alps
It is reported thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on: and all this,—
It wounds thine honour that I speak it now,—
Was borne so like a soldier that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'Tis pity of him.

Cæs. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome: 'tis time we twain
Did show ourselves 'i the field; and to that end Assemble we immediate council: Pompey
Thrives in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Cæsar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able
To front this present time.

Cæs. Till which encounter
It is my business too. Farewell. [meantime

Lep. Farewell, my lord: what you shall know
Of stir abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be partaker.

Cæs. Doubt not, sir;
I knew it for my bond. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Charmian,—

Char. Madam?

Cleo. Ha, ha!—

Give me to drink mandragora.

Char. Why, madam?

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of time

My Antony is away.

Char. You think of him too much.

Cleo. O, 'tis treason!

Char. Madam, I trust, not so.

Cleo. Thou, eunuch Mardian!

Mar. What's your highness' pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing, I take no
pleasure

In aught an eunuch has; 'tis well for thee
That, being unseminar'd, thy freer thoughts
May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed!

[nothing

Mar. Not in deed, madam; for I can do
But what indeed is honest to be done:
Yet have I fierce affections, and think
What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo.

O Charmian,

Where thine'st thou he is now? Stands he or sits he?

Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?

O happy horse to bear the weight of Antony!

Do bravely, horse! for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st?

The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm

And burgonet of men.—He's speaking now,

Or murmuring, Where's my serpent of old Nile?

For so he calls me.—Now I feed myself

With most delicious poison:—think on me,

That am with Phoebus' amorous pinches black,

And wrinkled deep in time? Broad-fronted

Cæsar,

When thou wast here above the ground I was

A morsel for a monarch: and great Pompey

Would stand and make his eyes grow in my brow;

There would he anchor his aspect and die

With looking on his life.

Enter ALEXAS.

Alex.

Sovereign of Egypt, hail!

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark

Antony!

[bath

Yet, coming from him, that great medicine

With his tinct gilded thee.—

How goes it with my brave Mark Antony?

Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen,

He kiss'd,—the last of many doubled kisses,—

This orient pearl:—his speech sticks in my heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alex.

Good friend, quoth he,

Say, the firm Roman to great Egypt sends

This treasure of an oyster; at whose foot,

To mend the petty present, I will piece

Her opulent throne with kingdoms; all the east,

Say thou, shall call her mistress. So he nodd'd,

And soberly did mount an arm-girt steed,

Who neigh'd so high that what I would have spoke

Was beastly dumb'd by him.

Cleo.

What, was he sad or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o' the year between the extremes

Of hot and cold, he was nor sad nor merry.

Cleo. O well-divided disposition!—Note him,

Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but

note him:

He was not sad,—for he would shine on those

That make their looks by his; he was not merry,—

Which seem'd to tell them his remembrance lay

In Egypt with his joy; but between both:

O heavenly mingle!—Be'st thou sad or merry,

The violence of either thee becomes,

So does it no man else.—Mett'st thou my posts!

Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers:

Why do you send so thick?

Cleo. Who's born that day
When I forget to send to Antony Shall die a beggar.—Ink and paper, Char-mian.—

Welcome, my good Alexas.—Did I, Charmian,
Ever love Cæsar so?

Char. O that brave Cæsar!

Cleo. Be chok'd with such another emphasis!
Say, the brave Antony.

Char. The valiant Cæsar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth
If thou with Cæsar paragon again
My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,
I sing but after you.

Cleo. My salad days,
When I was green in judgment:—cold in blood,
To say as I said then!—but, come, away;
Get me ink and paper: he shall have every day
A several greeting, or I'll unpeople Egypt.
[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—MESSINA. A Room in POMPEY'S House.

Enter POMPEY, MENEKRATES, and MENAS.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall assist

The deeds of justest men.

Mene. Know, worthy Pompey,
That what they do delay they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne, decays

The thing we sue for.

Mene. We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise
powers

Deny us for our good; so find we profit
By losing of our prayers.

Pom. I shall do well:

The people love me, and the sea is mine;
My powers are crescent, and my auguring hope
Says it will come to the full. Mark Antony
In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make No wars without doors: Cæsar gets money where

He loses hearts: Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves
Nor either cares for him.

Mene. Cæsar and Lepidus
Are in the field, a mighty strength they carry.

Pom. Where have you this? 'tis false.

Mene. From Silvius, sir.

Pom. He dreams: I know they are in Rome together, [love]

Looking for Antony. But all the charms of Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan'd lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both!
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming; Epicurean cooks
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour

Even till a Lethe'd dullness.

Enter VARRIUS.

Now now, Varius!

Var. This is most certain that I shall deliver:—

Mark Antony is every hour in Rome
Expected: since he went from Egypt 'tis
A space for further travel.

Pom. I could have given less matter
A better ear.—Menas, I did not think This amorous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm

For such a petty war; his soldiiership
Is twice the other twain: but let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er lust-wearied Antony.

Mene. I cannot hope
Cæsar and Antony shall well greet together:
His wife that's dead did trespasses to Cæsar;
His brother warr'd upon him; although, I think,
Not mov'd by Antony.

Pom. I know not, Menas,
How lesser enmities may give way to greater.
Were't not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant they should square between
themselves;

For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords: but how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know.
Be't as our gods will have't! It only stands
Our lives upon to use our strongest hands.
Come, Menas. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ROME. A Room in the House of LEPIDUS.

Enter ENOBARBUS and LEPIDUS.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your captain

To soft and gentle speech.

Eno. I shall entreat him
To answer like himself: if Cæsar move him,
Let Antony look over Cæsar's head,
And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard,
I would not shave't to-day.

Lep. 'Tis not a time
For private stomaching.

Eno. Every time
Serves for the matter that is then born in't.

Lep. But small to greater matters must give way.

Eno. Not if the small come first.

Lep. Your speech is passion:
But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes
The noble Antony.

Enter ANTONY and VENTIDIUS.

Eno. And yonder Cæsar.

Enter CÆSAR, MECÆNAS, and AGRIPPA.

Ant. If we compose well here, to Parthia:
Hark, Ventidius.

Cæs. I do not know,
Mecænas; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends, [not]
That which combin'd us was most great, and let
A leaner action rend us. What's amiss,
May it be gently heard: when we debate
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit

Murder in healing wounds: then, noble partners,—

The rather for I earnestly beseech,— [terms,
Touch you the sourest points with sweetest
Nor curstness grow to the matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well.
Were we before our armies, and to fight,
I should do thus.

Cæs. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

Cæs. Sit.

Ant. Sit, sir.

Cæs. Nay, then.

Ant. I learn, you take things ill which are not so,

Or being, concern you not.

Cæs. I must be laugh'd at
If, or for nothing or a little, I Should say myself offended, and with you Chiefly i' the world; more laugh'd at that I should [name]

Once name you derogately, when to sound you
It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt, Cæsar,
What was't to you?

Cæs. No more than my residing here at Rome

Might be to you in Egypt: yet, if you there
Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practis'd?

Cæs. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent [brother]
By what did here befall me. Your wife and Made wars upon me; and their contestation
Was theme for you, you were the word of war.

Ant. You do mistake your business; my brother never

Did urge me in his act: I did inquire it;
And have my learning from some true reports
That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather

Discredit my authority with yours;
And make the wars alike against my stomach,
Having alike your cause? Of this my letters
Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel
As matter whole you have not to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Cæs. You praise yourself
By laying defects of judgment to me; but
You patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so;
I know you could not lack, I am certain on't,
Very necessity of this thought, that I,
Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,

Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars
Which 'fronted mine own peace. As for my wife,
I would you had her spirit in such another:
The third o' the world is yours; which with a snaffle

You may pace easy, but not such a wife. [men
Eno. Would we had all such wives, that the Might go to wars with the women.

Ant. So much uncurbable, her garboils,
Cæsar,

Made out of her impatience,—which not wanted
Shrewdness of policy too,—I grieving grant
Did you too much disquiet: for that you must
But say I could not help it.

Cæs. I wrote to you

When rioting in Alexandria; you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience.

Ant. Sir,
He fell upon me ere admitted: then
Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want
Of what I was i' the morning; but next day
I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon. Let this fellow
Be nothing of our strife; if we contend,
Out of our question wipe him.

Cæs. You have broken
The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Cæsar!

Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak:
The honour is sacred which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lack'd it.—But on, Cæsar;
The article of my oath.

Cæs. To lend me arms and aid when I requir'd them;

The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather;
And then when poison'd hours had bound me up
From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,

I'll play the penitent to you: but mine honesty Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power

Work without it. Truth is, that Fulvia,
To have me out of Egypt, made wars here;
For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
So far ask pardon as befits mine honour
To stoop in such a case,

Lep. 'Tis noble spoken.

Mec. If it might please you to enforce no
further

The griefs between ye: to forget them quite
Were to remember that the present need
Speaks to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mæcenas.
Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wrangle in when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only: speak no more.
Eno. That truth should be silent I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak no more.

Eno. Go to, then; you considerate stone.

Cæs. I do not much dislike the matter, but
The manner of his speech; for't cannot be
We shall remain in friendship, our conditions
So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us stanch, from edge to edge

O' the world I would pursue it.

Agr. Give me leave, Cæsar,—

Cæs. Speak, Agrippa.

Agr. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side,
Admir'd Octavia: great Mark Antony
Is now a widower.

Cæs. Say not so, Agrippa:

If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
Were well deserv'd of rashness.

Ant. I am not married, Cæsar: let me hear
Agrippa further speak.

Ag. To hold you in perpetual amity,
To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an unslipping knot, take Antony
Octavia to his wife; whose beauty claims
No worse a husband than the best of men;
Whose virtue and whose general graces speak
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
All little jealousies, which now seem great,
And all great fears, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing: truths would then be tales,
Where now half tales be truths: her love to both
Would, each to other and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke;
For 'tis a studied, not a present thought,
By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Cæsar speak?

Cæs. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd
With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa,
If I would say, Agrippa, be it so,
To make this good?

Cæs. The power of Cæsar, and
His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shows,
Dream of impediment!—Let me have thy hand:
Further this act of grace; and from this hour
The heart of brothers govern in our loves
And sway our great designs!

Cæs. There is my hand.
A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother
Did ever love so dearly: let her live
To join our kingdoms and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen!

Ant. I did not think to draw my sword
'gainst Pompey;

For he hath laid strange courtesies and great
Of late upon me: I must thank him only,
Lest my remembrance suffer ill report;
At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon's:
Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks out us.

Ant. Where lies he?

Cæs. About the Mount Misenum.

Ant. What's his strength
By land?

Cæs. Great and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.

Would we had spoke together! Haste we for it:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, despatch we
The business we have talk'd of.

Cæs. With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I'll lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,
Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Exeunt CÆS., ANT., and LEP.
Mec. Welcome from Egypt, sir.

Eno. Half the heart of Cæsar, worthy Mecenas!—my honourable friend, Agrippa!—
Ag. Good Enobarbus!

Mec. We have cause to be glad that matters are so well digested. You stay'd well by it in Egypt.

Eno. Ay, sir; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking

Mec. Eight wild boars roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there; is this true?

Eno. This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had much more monstrous matter of feasts, which worthily deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her.

Eno. When she first met Mark Antony she purs'd up his heart, upon the river of Cydnus.

Ag. There she appeared indeed; or my reporter devised well for her.

Eno. I will tell you.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold;
Purple the sails, and so perfumed that

The winds were love-sick with them; the oars were silver, [made

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and
The water which they beat to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her own
person,

It beggar'd all description: she did lie
In her pavilion,—cloth-of-gold of tissue,—
O'er-picturing that Venus where we see
The fancy out-work nature: on each side her
Stood pretty duple boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem

To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,

And what they undid did.

Ag. O, rare for Antony!

Eno. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereids,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,
And made their bends adornings: at the helm
A seeming mermaid steers: the silken tackle Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands

That yarely frame the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her; and Antony,
Enthron'd i' the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

Ag. Rare Egyptian!

Eno. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper: she replied

It should be better he became her guest;
Which she entreated: our courteous Antony Whom ne'er the word of No woman heard
speak,

Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast,

And, for his ordinary, pays his heart

For what his eyes eat only.

Ag. Royal wench!

She made great Cæsar lay his sword to bed:

He plough'd her, and she cropp'd.

Eno.

I saw her once
Hop forty paces through the public street;
And having lost her breath, she spoke and panted,

That she did make defect perfection,
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly.

Eno. Never; he will not:

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety: other women cloy
The appetites they feed; but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies: for vilest things
Become themselves in her; that the holy priests
Bless her when she is riggish.

Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.

Agr. Let us go.—

Good Enocharbus, make yourself my guest
Whilst you abide here.

Eno. Humbly, sir, I thank you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—ROME. A Room in CÆSAR'S
House.

Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, OCTAVIA between them, and Attendants.

Ant. The world and my great office will sometimes

Divide me from your bosom.

Octa. All which time
Before the gods my knee shall bow my prayers
To them for you.

Ant. Good-night, sir.—My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come Shall all be done by the rule. Good-night, dear lady.—

Octa. Good-night, sir.

Cæs. Good-night. [Exeunt CÆS. and OCTA.]

Enter Soothsayer.

An.. Now, sirrah, you do wish yourself in Egypt? [nor you]

Sooth. Would I had never come from thence,
Thither!

Ant. If you can, your reason?

Sooth. I see it in My motion, have it not in my tongue: but yet
Hie you to Egypt again.

Ant. Say to me, [mine?]
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Cæsar's or Sooth. Cæsar's

Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side:
Thy demon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee,
is

Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Cæsar's is not; but near him thy angel Becomes afraid, as being o'erpower'd: therefore

Make space enough between you.

Ant. Speak this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee; no more but when to thee.

If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to lose; and of that natural luck
He beats thee 'gainst the odds: thy lustre thickens

When he shines by: I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him;
But, he away, 'tis noble.

Ant. Get thee gone:

Say to Ventidius I would speak with him:—
[Exit Soothsayer.]

He shall to Parthia.—Be it art or hap,
He hath spoken true: the very dice obey him;—
And in our sports my better cunning faints
Under his chance: if we draw lots he speeds;
His cocks do win the battle still of mine,
When it is all to naught; and his quails ever
Beat mine, inhoop'd, at odds. I will to Egypt:
And though I make this marriage for my peace,
I' the east my pleasure lies.

Enter VENTIDIUS.

O, come, Ventidius;
You must to Parthia: your commission's ready,
Follow me and receive it. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—ROME. A Street.

Enter LEPIDUS, MECENAS, and AGRIPPA.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no further: pray you, hasten
Your generals after.

Agr. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,

Which will become you both, farewell.

Mec. We shall,
As I conceive the journey, be at the mount
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter;
My purposes do draw me much about:
You'll win two days upon me.

Mec. and Agr. Sir, good success!

Lep. Farewell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in the Palace.

*Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS
and Attendants.*

Cleo. Give me some music,—music, moody food
Of us that trade in love.

Attend. The music, ho!

Enter MARDIAN.

Cleo. Let it alone; let's to billiards:
Come, Charmian.

Char. My arm is sore; best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play'd
As with a woman.—Come, you'll play with me,
sir?

Mar. As well as I can, madam.

Cleo. And when good-will is show'd, though't come too short,

The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now:—
Give me mine angle,—we'll to the river: there,
My music playing far off, I will betray Tawny-finn'd fishes; my bended hook shall perce

Their slimy jaws; and as I draw them up

I'll think them every one an Antony,

And say, Ah ha! you're caught.

Char. 'Twas merry when
You wagger'd on your angling; when your river
Did hang a salt fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time,—O times!—
I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night

I laugh'd him into patience: and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed;
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan.

Enter a Messenger.

O! from Italy!—
Ram thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren.

Mess. Madam, madam,—

Cleo. Antony's dead!—

If thou say so, villain, thou kill'st thy mistress:
But well and free,

If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veins to kiss,—a hand that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he's well.

Cleo. Why, there's more gold. But, surrah, mark, we use

To say the dead are well: bring it to that,
The gold I give thee will I melt and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will;
But there's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful,—why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings! If not well Thou shouldst come like a fury crown'd with snakes,

Not like a formal man.

Mess. Will't please you hear me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee ere thou speak'st:

Yet, if thou say Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Cæsar, or not captive to him,
I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pearls upon thee.

Mess. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo. Thou 'rt an honest man.

Mess. Cæsar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Mess. But yet, madam,—

Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does allay
The good precedence; fie upon but yet!
But yet is as a gaoler to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Pr'ythee, friend,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear,
The good and bad together: he's friends with
Cæsar;

In state of health, thou say'st; and, thou say'st,
free.

Mess. Free, madam! no; I made no such report:

He's bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turn?

Mess. For the best turn i' the bed.

Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.

Mess. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee! [Strikes him down.]

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you?—Hence,
[Strikes him again.]

Horrible villain! or I'll spurn thine eyes

Like balls before me; I'll unhair thy head:

[She hales him up and down.]

Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire and stew'd in brine,

Smarting in ling'ring pickle.

Mess.

Gracious madam,
I that do bring the news made not the match.

Cleo. Say 'tis not so, a province I will give thee, [hadst

And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou
Shall make thy peace for moving me to rage,
And I will boot thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.

Mess.

He's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long.

[Draws a dagger.]

Mess. Nay, then I'll run.—

What mean you, madam? I have made no fault. [Exit.]

Char. Good madam, keep yourself within yourself:

The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents scape not the thunderbolt.—

Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents!—Call the slave again:—
Though I am mad, I will not bite him:—call.

Char. He is afeard to come.

Cleo.

I will not hurt him.

[Exit CHARMIAN.]

These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause.

Re-enter CHARMIAN and Messenger.

Come hither, sir.

Though it be honest, it is never good

To bring bad news: give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves when they be felt.

Mess.

I have done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?

I cannot hate thee worse than I do

If thou again say Yes.

Mess.

He is married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still!

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo.

O, I would thou didst,
So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scald'd snakes! Go, get thee hence:
Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo.

He is married?

Mess. Take no offence that I would not offend you:

To punish me for what you make me do

Seems much unequal: he is married to Octavia.

Cleo. O that his fault should make a knave of thee, [hence:

Thou art not what thou'rt sure of!—Get thee
The merchandise which thou hast brought from Rome [hand,

Are all too dear for me: lie they upon thy
And be undone by 'em! [Exit Messenger.]

Char. Good your highness, patience.

Cleo. In praising Antony I have disprais'd
Cæsar.

Char. Many times, madam.

Cleo.

I am paid for't now.

Lead me from hence;

I faint—O Iras, Charmian!—'tis no matter.—
Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him
Report the feature of Octavia, her years
Her inclination, let him not leave out
The colour of her hair:—bring me word quickly.

[Exit ALEXAS.
Let him for ever go:—let him not—Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
T' other way he's a Mars.—Bid you Alexas

[To MARDIAN.
Bring me word how tall she is.—Pity me,
Charmian,
But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Near Misenum.

*Flourish. Enter POMPEY and MENAS at one side, with drum and trumpet, at the other,
CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, ENOBARBUS, MECÆNAS, with Soldiers marching.*

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you
mine;
And we shall talk before we fight.

Cæs. Most meet
That first we come to words; and therefore have we

Our written purposes before us sent;
Which, if thou hast consider'd, let us know
If 'twill tie up thy discontented sword,
And carry back to Sicily much tall youth
That else must perish here.

Pom. To you all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods,—I do not know
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends; since Julius Cæsar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was't
That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire; and what Made the all-honour'd, honest Roman, Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous
freedom,

To drench the Capitol, but that they would Have one man but a man? And that is it
Hath made me rig my navy; at whose burden
The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant
To scourge the ingratitude that desp'iteful Rome
Cast on my noble father.

Cæs. Take your time.

Ant. Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with thy sails; [know'st
We'll speak with thee at sea: at land thou
How much we do o'er-count thee.

Pom. At land, indeed,
Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house:
But, since the cuckoo builds not for himself,
Remain in't as thou mayst.

Lep. Be pleas'd to tell us,—
For this is from the present,—how you take
The offers we have sent you.

Cæs. There's the point.

Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh
What it is worth embrac'd.

Cæs. And what may follow,
To try a larger fortune.

Pom. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Rid all the sea of pirates; then to send Measures of wheat to Rome; this 'greed upon,

To part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our targes undinted.

Cæs., Ant., and Lep. That's our offer.

Pom. Know, then,
I came before you here a man prepar'd
To take this offer: but Mark Antony
Put me to some impatience:—though I lose
The praise of it by telling, you must know,
When Cæsar and your brother were at blows,
Your mother came to Sicily, and did find
Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey;
And am well studied for a liberal thanks
Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me have your hand:
I did not think, sir, to have met you here.

Ant. The beds i' the east are soft; and,
thanks to you, [hither;
That call'd me, timelier than my purpose,
For I have gam'd by it.

Cæs. Since I saw you last
There is a change upon you.

Pom. Well, I know not
What counts harsh fortune casts upon my face;
But in my bosom shall she never come
To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here.
Pom. I hope so, Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed:

I crave our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us.

Cæs. That's the next to do.
Pom. We'll feast each other ere we part;
and let's
Draw lots who shall begin.

Ant. That will I, Pompey.
Pom. No, Antony, take the lot: but, first
Or last, your fine Egyptian cookery [Cæsar Shall have the fame. I have heard that Julius Grew fat with feasting there.

Ant. You have heard much.
Pom. I have fair meanings, sir.

Ant. And fair words to them.
Pom. Then so much have I heard:
And I have heard Apollodorus carried,—

Eno. No more of that:—he did so.
Pom. What, I pray you?

Eno. A certain queen to Cæsar in a mattress.
Pom. I know thee now: how far'st thou, soldier?

Eno. Well;
And well am like to do; for I perceive
Four feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand;
I never hated thee: I have seen thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.

Eno. Sir,
I never lov'd you much; but I ha' prais'd ye,
When you have well deserv'd ten times as much
As I have said you did.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness,
It nothing ill becomes thee.—

Aboard my galley I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?

Cæs., Ant., and Lep. Show us the way, sir.
Pom. Come.

[Exeunt all but MEN., and ENO.
Men. [Aside.] Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—You and I have known, sir.

Eno. At sea, I think.

Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me; though it cannot be denied what I have done by land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Eno. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety: you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas: if our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men's faces are true, whatsoever their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Men. No slander; they steal hearts.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure, he cannot weep it back again.

Men. You have said, sir. We looked not for Mark Antony here: pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eno. Cæsar's sister is called Octavia.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray you, sir?

Eno. 'Tis true.

Men. Thenas Cæsar and he forever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Men. I think the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find the band that seems to tie their friendship together will be the very strangler of their amity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.

Men. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not he that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again: then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Cæsar; and, as I said before that which is the strength of their amity shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is: he married but his occasion here.

Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you aboard? I have a health for you.

Eno. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats in Egypt.

Men. Come, let's away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—On board POMPEY'S Galley, lying near Misenum.

Music. Enter two or three Servants with a banquet.

1 Serv. Here they'll be, man. Some o' their plants are ill-rooted already; the least wind i' the world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

1 Serv. They have made him drink alms-drink.

2 Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out, no more, reconciles them to his entreaty and himself to the drink.

1 Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

2 Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men's fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service as a partizan I could not heave.

1 Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.

A sennet sounded. Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, POMPEY, AGRIPPA, MECÆNAS, ENOBARBUS, MENAS, with other Captains.

Ant. [To CÆSAR.] Thus do they, sir: they take the flow o' the Nile,

By certain scales i' the pyramid; they know, By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth

Or foison follow: the higher Nilus swells

The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsman Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain, And shortly comes the harvest.

Lep. You've strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun: so is your crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine!—A health to

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll ne'er out.

Eno. Not till you have slept; I fear me you'll be in till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard the Ptolemies' pyramids are very goodly things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. [Aside to POM.] Pompey, a word.

Pom. [Aside to MEN.] Say in mine ear: what is't?

Men. [Aside to POM.] Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee, captain,

And hear me speak a word.

Pom. [Aside to MEN.] Forbear me till anon.—

This wine for Lepidus!

Lep. What manner o' thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself; and it is as broad as it hath breadth: it is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs: it lives by that which nourisheth it; and, the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so. And the tears of it are wet.

Cæs. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Pom. [Aside to MEN.] Go, hang, sir, hang! Tell me of that? away!

Do as I bid you.—Where's this cup I call'd for?

Men. [Aside to POM.] If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me,

Rise from thy stool.

Pom. [Aside to MEN.] I think thou'rt mad.
The matter? [Rises and walks aside.]
Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.
Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith.
What's else to say?—

Be jolly, lords.
Ant. These quicksands, Lepidus,
Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world?
That's twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it, and,
Although thou think me poor, I am the man
Will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.

Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jove:
Whate'er the ocean pales or sky inclips
Is thine, if thou wilt have't.

Pom. Show me which way.

Men. These three world-sharers, these competi-titors,

Are in thy vessel: let me cut the cable;
And, when we are put off, fall to their throats:
All then is thine.

Pom. Ah, thus thou shouldst have done,
And not have spoke on't! In me 'tis villainy;
In thee't had been good service. Thou must know

'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour;
Mine honour it. Repent that e'er thy tongue Hath so betray'd thine act: being done unknown,

I should have found it afterwards well done;
But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. [Aside] For this
I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more.

Who seeks, and will not take when once 'tis
offer'd,

Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus!

Ant. Bear him ashore. I'll pledge it for him,
Pompey.

Eno. Here's to thee, Menas!

Men. Enobarbus, welcome!

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Eno. There's a strong fellow, Menas.

[Pointing to the Attendant who carries off LEP.]

Men. Why?

Eno. 'A bears

The third part of the world, man; see'st not?

Men. The third part, then, is drunk: would it were all,

That it might go on wheels!

Eno. Drink thou; increase the reels.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it.—Strike the vessels,
Here is to Cæsar!

Cæs. I could well forbear't. [ho!—

It's monstrous labour when I wash my brain

And it grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Cæs. Possess it, I'll make answer:

But I had rather fast from all four days

Than drink so much in one.

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor!

[To ANTONY.]
Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals,
And celebrate our drink?

Pom. Let's ha't, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let's all take hands, [sense

Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our
In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands.—

Make battery to our ears with the loud music:—

The while I'll place you: then the boy shall sing;

The holding every man shall beat as loud

As his strong sides can volley.

[Music plays. ENO. places them hand in hand.]

SONG.

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plumpy Bacchus with pink eyne!
In thy fats our cares be drown'd,
With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd:
Cup us, till the world go round,
Cup us, till the world go round!

Cæs. What—would you more?—Pompey, good-night. Good brother,

Let me request you off: our graver business

Frowns at this levity.—Gentle lords, let's part;

You see we have burnt our cheeks: strong

Enobarb

Is weaker than the wine; and mine own tongue

Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost [night.—

Antick'd us all. What needs more words. Good-

Good Antony, your hand.

Pom. I'll try you on the shore.

Ant. And shall, sir: give's your hand.

Pom. O Antony,

You have my father's house,—but, what? we are friends.

Come, down into the boat.

Eno. Take heed you fall not.

[Exeunt POM., CÆS., ANT., and Attendants.]

Menas, I'll not on shore.

Men. No, to my cabin.—

These drums!—these trumpets, flutes! what!—

Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell

To these great fellows: sound and be hang'd, sound out!

[A flourish of trumpets, with drums.]

Eno. Hoo! says 'a.—There's my cap.

Men. Hoo!—noble captain, come. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Plain in Syria.

*Enter VENTIDIUS, in triumph, with SILIUS and other Romans, Officers, and Soldiers;
the dead body of PACORUS borne in front.*

Ven. Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck;
and now

Pleas'd fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death

Make me revenger.—Bear the king's son's body

Before our army.—Thy Pacorus, Orodes,

Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Sil. Noble Ventidius,

Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm

The fugitive Parthians follow; spur through

Media.

Mesopotamia, and the shelters whither
The routed fly: so thy grand captain Antony Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O Silius, Silius,
I have done enough: a lower place, note well,
May make too great an act; for learn this,
Silius,—

Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame when him we serve's
away.

Caesar and Antony have ever won
More in their officer, than person: Sossius,
One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,
For quick accumulation of renown,
Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favour.

Who does it? the wars more than his captain can Become his captain's captain: and ambition,
The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss
Than gain which darkens him.

I could do more to do Antonius good,
But 'twould offend him; and in his offence
Should my performance perish.

Sil. Thou hast, Ventidius, that Without the which a soldier and his sword Grants scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to Antony?

Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected;
How, with his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We have jaded out o' the field.

Sil. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposeth to Athens: whither, with what haste
The weight we must convey with's will permit,
We shall appear before him.—On, there; pass along! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ROME. An Ante-Chamber in CÆSAR'S House.

Enter AGRIPPA and ENOBARBUS, meeting.

Agr. What, are the brothers parted?

Eno. They have despatch'd with Pompey, he is gone;

The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps
To part from Rome: Cæsar is sad; and Lepidus,
Since Pompey's feast, as Menassays, is troubled
With the green sickness.

Agr. 'Tis a noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: O, how he loves
Cæsar! [Antony!]

Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark
Eno. Cæsar? Why he's the Jupiter of men.

Agr. What's Antony? The god of Jupiter.

Eno. Speak you of Cæsar? How! the nonpareil!

Agr. Of Antony. O thou Arabian bird!

Eno. Would you praise Cæsar, say Cæsar, go no further.

Agr. Indeed, he plied them both with excellent praises. [Antony:]

Eno. But he loves Cæsar best;—yet he loves Hoo! hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot [hoo!]—

Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number,—
His love to Antony. But as for Cæsar,
Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Agr. Both he loves.

Eno. They are his shards, and he their beetle.
[Trumpets within.] So,—

This is to horse.—Adieu, noble Agrippa.

Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and
farewell.

Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, and OCTAVIA.

Ant. No further, sir.

Cæs. You take from me a great part of myself;
Use me well in't.—Sister, prove such a wife
As my thoughts make thee, and as my furthest
band

Shall pass on thy approof.—Most noble Antony,
Let not the piece of virtue which is set
Betwixt us as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter
The fortress of it; for better might we
Have lov'd without this mean if on both parts
This be not chensh'd.

Ant. Make me not offended

In your distrust.

Cæs. I have said.

Ant. You shall not find,
Though you be therein curious, the least cause
For what you seem to fear: so, the gods keep
you,

And make the hearts of Romans serve your
ends!

We will here part. [well:]

Cæs. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee
The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort! Fare thee well.

Octa. My noble brother!—

Ant. The April's in her eyes: it is love's spring, [cheerful.]

And these the showers to bring it on.—Be Octa. Sir, look well to my husband's house;

and—

Cæs. What,

Octavia?

Octa. I'll tell you in your ear.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can

Her heart inform her tongue,—the swan's down feather,

That stands upon the swell at the full of tide,
And neither way inclines.

Eno. [Aside to AGRIPPA.] Will Cæsar weep?

Agr. [Aside to ENO.] He has a cloud in's face.

Eno. [Aside to AGRIPPA.] He were the worse for that, were he a horse;

So is he, being a man.

Agr. [Aside to ENO.] Why, Enobarbus,

When Antony found Julius Cæsar dead,
He cried almost to roaring; and he wept
when at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. [Aside to AGRIPPA.] That year, indeed

he was troubled with a rheum;

What willingly he did confound he wail'd:

Believe't till I weep too.

Cæs. No, sweet Octavia,

You shall hear from me still; the time shall not
Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, sir, come;

I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love:

Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,

And give you to the gods.

Cæs. Adieu, be happy!
Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light
 To thy fair way!
Cæs. Farewell, farewell! [Kisses OCTAVIA.]
Ant. Farewell!

[Trumpets sound within. Exeunt

SCENE III.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?
Alex. Half afraid to come.
Cleo. Go to, go to.

Enter a Messenger.

Come hither, sir.

Alex. Good majesty,
 Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you
 But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head
 I'll have: but how? when Antony is gone,
 Through whom I might command it?—Come thou near.

Mess. Most gracious majesty,—
Cleo. Didst thou behold

Octavia?

Mess. Ay, dread queen.
Cleo. Where?

Mess. Madam, in Rome
 I look'd her in the face, and saw her led Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?

Mess. She is not, madam.

Cleo. Didst hear her speak? is she shrill tongue'd or low?

Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is low voic'd. [her long.]

Cleo. That's not so good—he cannot like

Char. Like her! O Isis! 'tis impossible.

Cleo. I think so, Charmian: dull of tongue and dwarfish!—

What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
 If e'er thou look'dst on majesty.

Mess. She creeps,—
 Her motion and her station are as one;
 She shows a body rather than a life,
 A statue than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain?

Mess. Or I have no observance.

Char. Three in Egypt
 Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing;
 I do perceiv't:—there's nothing in her yet:—
 The fellow has good judgment.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guess at her years, I pr'ythee.

Mess. Madam,
 She was a widow.

Cleo. Widow!—Charmian, hark!

Mess. And I do think she's thirty.

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is't long or round?

Mess. Round even to faultiness.

Cleo. For the most part, too, they are foolish that are so.—
 Her hair, what colour?

Mess. Brown, madam: and her forehead
 As low as she would wish it.

Cleo. There's gold for thee.
 Thou must not take my former sharpness ill:—
 I will employ thee back again; I find thee
 Most fit for business: go make thee ready;
 Our letters are prepar'd. [Exit Messenger.]

Char. A proper man.
Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much
 That so I harried him. Why, methinks, by him
 This creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing, madam.
Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know.

Char. Hath he seen majesty? Isis else defend,

And serving you so long!

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, good Charmian:

But 'tis no matter; thou shalt bring him to me
 Where I will write. All may be well enough.

Char. I warrant you, madam. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—ATHENS. A Room in ANTONY'S House.

Enter ANTONY and OCTAVIA.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—
 That were excusable, that and thousands more
 Of semblable import,—but he hath wag'd
 New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and read it

To public ear: [not]
 Spoke scantily of me: when perforce he could
 But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly
 He vented them; most narrow measure lent me:
 When the best hint was given him, he not took't,

Or did it from his teeth.

Octa. O my good lord,
 Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
 Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,
 If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
 Praying for both parts:
 Sure the good gods will mock me presently
 When I shall pray, O, bless my lord and husband!

Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
 O, bless my brother! Husband win, win
 brother,
 Prays and destroys the prayer; no midway
 'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,
 Let your best love draw to that point which

Best to preserve it: if I lose mine honour
 I lose myself: better I were not yours
 Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested, [lady,]
 Yourself shall go between's: the meantime,
 I'll raise the preparation of a war [haste;]
 Shall stain your brother: make your soonest
 So your desires are yours.

Octa. Thanks to my lord.
 The Jove of power make me, most weak, most weak, [be]
 Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would
 As if the world should cleave, and that slain
 men
 Should solder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,
Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal that your love
Can equally move with them. Provide your going;
Choose your own company, and command what
Your heart has mind to. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—ATHENS. Another Room in ANTONY'S House.

Enter ENOBARBUS and EROS, meeting.

Eno. How now, friend Eros!
Eros. There's strange news come, sir.
Eno. What, man? [upon Pompey.]
Eros. Cæsar and Lepidus have made wars
Eno. This is old: what is the success?
Eros. Cæsar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry; would not let him partake in the glory of the action: and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal seizes him: so the poor third is up, till death enlarge his confine.

Eno. Then world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no more;
And throw between them all the food thou hast,
They'll grind the one the other. Where's Antony? [spurns]

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and the rush that lies before him; cries, Fool Lepidus!

And threatens the throat of that his officer
That murder'd Pompey.

Eno. Our great navy's rigg'd.
Eros. For Italy and Cæsar. More, Domstus;
My lord deserves you presently: my news
I might have told hereafter.

Eno. 'Twill be naught:
But let it be.—Bring me to Antony.

Eros. Come, sir. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—ROME. A Room in CÆSAR'S House.

Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, and MÆCENAS.

Cæs. Contemning Rome, he has done all this, and more,
In Alexandria: here's the manner of't:—
I' the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd: at the feet sat Cæsarion, whom they call my father's son,
And all the unlawful issue that their lust [her Since then hath made between them. Unto
He gave the 'stabishment of Egypt; made her
Of Lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia,
Absolute queen.

Mec. This in the public eye?

Cæs. I' the common show-place, where they exercise.

His sons he there proclaim'd the kings of kings:
Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia
He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia: she
In the habiliments of the goddess Isis [ence,
That day appear'd; and oft before gave audi-
As 'tis reported, so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus Inform'd.

Agr. Who, queasy with his insolence
Already, will their good thoughts call from him.

Cæs. The people know it: and have now receiv'd

His accusations.

Agr. Who does he accuse?

Cæs. Cæsar: and that, having in Sicily
Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him
His part o' the isle: then does he say he lent me
Some shipping, unrestor'd: lastly, he frets
That Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Cæs. 'Tis done already, and the messenger gone.

I have told him Lepidus was grown too cruel;
That he his high authority abus'd,
And did deserve his change: for what I have conquer'd

I grant him part; but then, in his Armenia
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.

Cæs. Nor must not, then, be yielded to in this.

Enter OCTAVIA, with her Train.

Octa. Hail, Cæsar, and my lord! hail, most dear Cæsar!

Cæs. That ever I should call thee castaway!

Octa. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause. [come not]

Cæs. Why have you stol'n upon us thus? You
Like Cæsar's sister, the wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell of her approach
Long ere she did appear; the trees by the way
Should have borne men; and expectation fainted,

Longing for what it had not; nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,
Rais'd by your populous troops: but you are come

A market-maid to Rome; and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which left unshown
Is often left unlov'd we should have met you
By sea and land; supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Octa. Good my lord,
To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My lord, Mark Antony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted
My grieved ear withal: whereon I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Cæs. Which soon he granted,
Being an obstruct 'tween his lust and him.

Octa. Do not say so, my lord.

Cæs. I have eyes upon him,
And his affairs come to me on the wind.
Where is he now?

Octa. My lord, in Athens.

Cæs. No, my most wronged sister; Cleopatra Hath nodded him to her. He hath given his
Up to a whore; who now are levying [bled
The kings o' the earth for war: he hath assem-

Bocchus, the king of Libya; Archelaus Of Cappadocia; Philadelphos, king Of Paphlagonia; the Thracian king, Adallas; King Malchus of Arabia; King of Pont; Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, king Of Comagene; Polemon and Amyntas, The kings of Mede and Lycaonia, with a More larger list of sceptres.

Octa. Ay me, most wretched, That have my heart parted betwixt two friends That do afflict each other!

Cæs. Welcome hither: Your letters did withhold our breaking forth, Till we perceiv'd both how you were wrong led And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart: Be you not troubled with the time, which drives O'er your content these strong necessities; But let determin'd things to destiny Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome; Nothing more dear to me. You are abus'd Beyond the mark of thought; and the high gods, To do you justice, make their ministers Of us and those that love you. Best of comfort; And ever welcome to us.

Agr. Welcome, lady.

Mec. Welcome, dear madam.

Each heart in Rome does love and pity you: Only the adulterous Antony, most large In his abominations, turns you off; And gives his potent regiment to a trull That noises it against us.

Octa. Is it so, sir? [you

Cæs. Most certain. Sister, welcome: pray Be ever known to patience: my dear'st sister! [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—ANTONY'S Camp near the Promontory of Actium.

Enter CLEOPATRA and ENOBARBUS.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.

Eno. But why, why, why? [wars,

Cleo. Thou hast forspoke my being in these And say'st it is not fit.

Eno. Well, is it, is it?

Cleo. If not denounc'd against us, why should not we Be there in person?

Eno. [Aside.] Well, I could reply:—

If we should serve with horse and mares together [bear The horse were merely lost; the mares would A soldier and his horse.

Cleo. What is't you say?

Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony; [time,

Take from his heart, take from his brain, from'st What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for levity: and 'tis said in Rome That Photinus an eunuch and your maids Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome, and their tongues rot That speak against us! A charge we bear i' the war,

And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it; I will not stay behind.

Eno. Nay, I have done.

Here comes the emperor.

Enter ANTONY and CANIDIUS.

Ant. Is it not strange, Canidius, That from Tarentum and Brundisium He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea, And take in Toryne?—You have heard on't, sweet?

Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke, Which might have well become the best of men To taunt at slackness.—Canidius, we Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! what else? Can. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to't.

Eno. So hath my lord dar'd him to single fight.

Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia, Where Cæsar fought with Pompey: but these eifers,

Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off; And so should you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann'd: Your mariners are muleteers, reapers, people Ingross'd by swift impress; in Cæsar's fleet Are those that often have 'gainst Pompey fought:

Their ships are yare; yours heavy: no disgrace Shall fall you for refusing him at sea, Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.

Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away

The absolute soldiership you have by land; Distract your army, which doth most consist Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego The way which promises assurance; and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.

Cleo. I have sixty sails, Cæsar none better.

Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn; And, with the rest full-mann'd, from the head of Actium Beat the approaching Cæsar. But if we fail We then can do't at land.

Enter a Messenger.

Thy business?

Mess. The news is true, my lord; he is desced;

Cæsar has taken Toryne. [possible;

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'tis impossible that his power should be.—Canidius, Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land, And our twelve thousand horse.—We'll to our ship:

Away, my Thetis!

Enter a Soldier.

How now, worthy soldier?

Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea; Trust not to rotten planks. do you misdoubt This sword and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians

And the Phœnicians go a-ducking; we Have used to conquer standing on the earth And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well:—away.

[Exeunt ANT., CLEO., and ENO.]

Sold. By Hercules, I think I am i' the right.

Can. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action grows

Not in the power on't: so our leader's led,
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?

Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcius Justeius,
Publicola, and Cælius are for sea:

But we keep whole by land. This speed of Cæsar's

Carries beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome
His power went out in such distractions as Begui'd all spies.

Can. Who's his lieutenant, hear you?

Sold. They say one Taurus.

Can. Well I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The emperor calls Canidius.

Can. With news the time's with labour: and throes forth

Each minute some. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—A Plain near Actium.

Enter CÆSAR, TAURUS, Officers, and others.

Cæs. Taurus,—

Taur. My lord?

Cæs. Strike not by land; keep whole; provoke not battle

Till we have done at sea. Do not exceed
The prescript of this scroll: our fortune lies
Upon this jump. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Another part of the Plain.

Enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on yon side o'
the hull,

In eye of Cæsar's battle; from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—Another part of the Plain.

*Enter CANIDIUS, marching with his land
Army one way; and TAURUS, the Lieutenant of CÆSAR, with his Army, the other way.
After their going in, is heard the noise of a sea-fight.*

Alarum. Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold no longer:

The Antoniad, the Egyptian admiral,
With all their sixty, fly and turn the rudder:
To see't mine eyes are blasted.

Enter SCARUS.

Scar. Gods and goddesses,
All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion?

Scar. The greater cantle of the world is lost
With very ignorance; we have kiss'd away
Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno.

How appears the fight?
Scar. On our side like the token'd pestilence,
Where death is sure. Yon ribaudred nag of Egypt,—

Whom leprosy o'ertake!—' the midst o' the
When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd,
Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,—
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,— Hoists sails and flies.

Eno. That I beheld: [not Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could Endure a further view.

Scar. She once being loof'd
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony, Claps on his sea-wing, and, like a doting
mallard,

Leaving the fight in height, flies after her:
I never saw an action of such shame;
Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before
Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!

Enter CANIDIUS.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Had our general
Been what he knew himself, it had gone well:
O, he has given example for our fight
Most grossly by his own!

Eno. Ay, are you thereabouts?

Why, then, good-night indeed.

Can. Towards Peloponnesus are they fled.
Scar. 'Tis easy to't; and there I will attend
What further comes.

Can. To Cæsar will I render
My legions and my horse; six kings already Show me the way of yielding.

Eno. I'll yet follow
The wounded chance of Antony, though my reason

Sits in the wind against me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XI.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY and Attendants.

Ant. Hark! the land bids me tread no more upon't,—

It is asham'd to bear me!—Friends, come [hither:
I am so lated in the world that I
Have lost my way forever:—I have a ship
Laden with gold, take that, divide it; fly,
And make your peace with Cæsar.

All. Fly! not we.

Ant. I have fled myself, and have instructed cowards

To run and show their shoulders.—Friends, be [gone;
I have myself resolv'd upon a course
Which has no need of you; begone:
My treasure's in the harbour, take it.—O,
I follow'd that I blush to look upon:
My very hairs do mutiny; for the white
Reprove the brown for rashness, and they them
For fear and doting.—Friends, be gone: you shall

Have letters from me to some friends that will Sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad,

Nor make replies of loathness: take the hint
Which my despair proclaims; let that be left

Which leaves itself: to the sea-side straightway:
I will possess you of that ship and treasure.
Leave me, I pray, a little: pray you now:—
Nay, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command,
Therefore I pray you:—I'll see you by and by.
[Sits down.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, led by CHARMIAN and IRAS, EROS following.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him,—comfort him.

Irás. Do, most dear queen.

Char. Do! why, what else?

Cleo. Let me sit down. O Juno!

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, sir?

Ant. O fie, fie, fie!

Char. Madam,—

Irás. Madam, O good empress,—

Eros. Sir, sir,—

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes;—he at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer; while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and 'twas I
That the mad Brutus ended; he alone
Dealt on lieutenantry, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war: yet now—no matter.

Cleo. Ah, stand by.

Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.

Irás. Go to him, madam, speak to him:
He is unqualified with very shame.

Cleo. Well then,—sustain me:—O!

Eros. Most noble sir, arise; the queen approaches:
Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her,
but

Your comfort make the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation,—
A most unnoble swerving.

Eros. Sir, the queen. [See

Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt?
How I convey my shame out of thine eyes
By looking back, what I have left behind
'Stroy'd in dishonour.

Cleo. O my lord, my lord,
Forgive my fearful sails! I little thought
You would have follow'd.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well
My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings,
And thou shouldst tow me after; o'er my spirit
Thy full supremacy thou knew'st, and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods Command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon!

Ant. Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties, dodge
And palter in the shifts of lowness; who
With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I
pleas'd,
Making and marring fortunes. You did know
How much you were my conqueror; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon!

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say; one of them rates
All that is won and lost: give me a kiss;
Even this repays me.—We sent our school-
master;
Is he come back?—Love, I am full of lead.—

Some wine, within there, and our viands!—
Fortune knows
We scorn her most when most she offers blows. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XII.—CÆSAR'S Camp in Egypt.

Enter CÆSAR, DOLABELLA, THYREUS,
and others.

Cæs. Let him appear that's come from Antony.—

Know you him?

Dol. Cæsar, 'tis his schoolmaster:

An argument that he is pluck'd, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing,
Which had superfluous kungs for messengers
Not many moons gone by.

Enter EUPHRONIUS.

Cæs. Approach, and speak.

Eup. Such as I am, I come from Antony:
I was of late as petty to his ends
As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea.

Cæs. Be't so; declare thy office.

Eup. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee,
and
Requires to live in Egypt: which not granted,
He lessens his requests; and to thee sues
To let him breathe between the heavens and
earth,

A private man in Athens: this for him.
Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness;
Submits her to thy might; and of thee craves
The circle of the Ptolemies for her heirs,
Now hazarded to thy grace.

Cæs. For Antony,

I have no ears to his request. The queen
Of audience nor desire shall fail; so she
From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend,
Or take his life there: thus if she perform
She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

Eup. Fortune pursue thee!

Cæs. Bring him through the bands.

[Exit EUPHRONIUS.]
To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time: despatch;
From Antony win Cleopatra: promise,

[To THYR.]
And in our name, what she requires; add more,
From thine invention, offers: women are not
In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal: try thy cunning,
Thyreus;

Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we
Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Cæsar, I go.

Cæs. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw,
And what thou think'st his very action speaks
In every power that moves.

Thyr. Cæsar, I shall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XIII.—ALEXANDRIA A Room in
the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Think, and die.

Cleo. Is Antony or we in fault for this?

Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you fled From that great face of war, whose several ranges

Frighted each other why should we follow?

The itch of his affection should not then Have nick'd his captainship; at such a point, When half to half the world oppos'd, he being The mered question: 'twas a shame no less Than was his loss to course your flying flags And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Pr'ythee, peace.

Enter ANTONY, with EUPHRONIUS.

Ant. Is that his answer?

Eup. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen shall then have courtesy, so she

Will yield us up.

Eup. He says so.

Ant. Let her know't.—

To the boy Cæsar send this grizzled head.

And he will fill thy wishes to the brim

With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again: tell him he wears the rose

Of youth upon him; from which the world should note

Something particular: his coins, ships, legions, May be a coward's; whose ministers would prevail

Under the service of a child as soon [fore As] ' the command of Cæsar: I dare him there- To lay his gay comparisons apart, And answer me declin'd, sword against sword, Ourselves alone. I'll write it: follow me.

[Exit ANTONY and EUPHRONIUS]

Eno. Yes, like enough, high-battled Cæsar will

Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to the show

Against a sword.—I see men's judgments are A parcel of their fortunes; and things outward Do draw the inward quality after them, To suffer all alike. That he should dream, Knowing all measures, the full Cæsar will Answer his empress!—Cæsar, thou hast sub- du'd

His judgment too.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. A messenger from Cæsar.

Cleo. What, no more ceremony?—See, my women!—

Against the blown rose may they stop their That kneel'd unto the buds.—Admit him, sir.

[Exit Attendant.]

Eno. [Aside.] Mine honesty and I begin to square.

The loyalty well held to fools does make Our faith mere folly:—yet he that can endure To follow with allegiance a fallen lord Does conquer him that did his master conquer, And earn a place ' the story.

Enter THYREUS.

Cleo. Cæsar's will?

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends: say boldly.

Thyr. So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Cæsar has; Or needs not us. If Cæsar please, our master Will leap to be his friend: for us, you know Whose he is we are, and that is Cæsar's.

Thyr. So.—

Thus then, thou most renown'd: Cæsar en- treats

Not to consider in what case thou stand'st, Further than he is Cæsar.

Cleo. Go on: right royal.

Thyr. He knows that you embrace not Antony

As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. O! [he

Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore, Does pity, as constrained blemishes, Not as deserv'd.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows

What is most right: mine honour was not yielded,

But conquer'd merely.

Eno. [Aside.] To be sure of that, I will ask Antony.—Sir, sir, thou art so leaky That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee. [Exit.]

Thyr. Shall I say to Cæsar

What you require of him? for he partly begs To be desir'd to give. It much would please him That of his fortunes you should make a staff To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits To hear from me you had left Antony, And put yourself under his shroud, who is The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thyr. My name is Thyreus.

Cleo. Most kind messenger,

Say to great Cæsar this:—in deputation I kiss his conquering hand: tell him I am prompt

To lay my crown at's feet, and there to kneel: Tell him, from his all-obeying breath I hear The doom of Egypt.

Thyr. 'Tis your noblest course.

Wisdom and fortune combating together, If that the former dare but what it can, No chance may shake it. Give me grace to lay My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Cæsar's father

Oft, when he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,

Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place, As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders!— What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One that but performs The bidding of the fullest man, and worstest To have command obey'd.

Eno. [Aside.] You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach there!—Ay, you kate!—Now, gods and devils! [Ho]

Authority melts from me: of late, when I cried, Like boys unto a muss, kings would start forth And cry, Your will? Have you no ears? I am Antony yet.

Enter Attendants.

Take hence this Jack and whip him.
Eno. 'Tis better playing with a lion's whelp
 Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Moon and stars!
 Whip him.—Were't twenty of the greatest tributaries
 That do acknowledge Cæsar, should I find them
 So saucy with the hand of she here,—what's her name

Since she was Cleopatra?—Whip him, fellows,
 Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
 And whine aloud for mercy: take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony,—
Ant. Tug him away: being whipp'd,
 Bring him again.—This Jack of Cæsar's shall Bear us an errand to him.—

[Exeunt Attend. with THYR.
 You were half blasted ere I knew you.—Hal
 Have I my pillow left unpress'd in Rome,
 Forborne the getting of a lawful race,
 And by a gem of women, to be abus'd
 By one that looks on feeders?

Cleo. Good my lord,—
Ant. You have been a boggler ever:—
 But when we in our viciousness grow hard,—
 O misery on't!—the wise gods seal our eyes;
 In our own filth drop our clear judgments;
 make us

Adore our errors; laugh at's, while we strut
 To our confusion.

Cleo. O, is't come to this?
Ant. I found you as a morsel cold upon
 Dead Cæsar's trencher; nay, you were a fragment

Of Cneius Pompey's; besides what hotter hours
 Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out:—for I am sure, [be,
 Though you can guess what temperance should
 You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?
Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,
 And say, God quit you! be familiar with
 My playfellow, your hand; this kingly seal
 And plighting of high hearts!—O that I were
 Upon the hill of Basan, to outroar
 The horned herd! for I have savage cause;
 And to proclaim it civilly were like
 A halter'd neck which does the hangman thank
 For being yare about him.

Re-enter Attendants with THYREUS.

Is he whipp'd?

1 Att. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Cried he? and begg'd he pardon?

1 Att. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent
 Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou
 sorry

To follow Cæsar in his triumph, since Thou hast been whipp'd for following him:
 henceforth

The white hand of a lady fever thee,
 Shake thou to look on't.—Get thee back to
 Cæsar,

Tell him thy entertainment: look thou say
 He makes me angry with him; for he seems
 Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,

Not what he knew I was: he makes me angry;
 And at this time most easy 'tis to do't,
 When my good stars, that were my former guides,

Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
 Into the abyss of hell. If he mislike
 My speech and what is done, tell him he has Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd bondman, whom
 He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
 As he shall like, to quit me: urge it thou:
 Hence with thy stripes, be gone.

[Exit THYREUS.

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, our terrestre moon
 Is now eclips'd; and it portends alone
 The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time. [eyes
Ant. To flatter Cæsar, would you mingle
 With one that ties his points?

Cleo. Not know me yet?
Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,
 From my cold heart let heaven engender hail,
 And poison it in the source; and the first stone
 Drop in my neck: as it determines, so
 Dissolve my life! The next Cæsar on smite!
 Till, by degrees, the memory of my womb,
 Together with my brave Egyptians all,
 By the discarding of this pelleted storm,
 Lie graveless,—till the flies and gnats of Nile
 Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.
 Cæsar sits down in Alexandria; where
 I will oppose his fate. Our force by land
 Hath nobly held: our sever'd navy too
 Have knit again, and fleet, threat'ning most sea-like. [hear, lady?

Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou
 If from the field I shall return once more
 To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood:
 I and my sword will earn our chronicle:
 There's hope in't yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!
Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted,
 breath'd,

And fight maliciously: for when mine hours
 Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives
 Of me for jests; but now I'll set my teeth,
 And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,
 Let's have one other gaudy night: call to me
 All my sad captains, fill our bowls; once more
 Let's drink the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birthday.
 I had thought to have held it poor; but since
 my lord

Is Antony again I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.
Ant. Do so; we'll speak to them: and tonight I'll force [my queen;

The wine peep through their scars.—Come on,
 There's sap in't yet. The next time I do fight
 I'll make death love me; for I will contend
 Even with his pestilent scythe.

[Exeunt all but ENO.

Eno. Now he'll outstare the lightning. To be furious

Is to be frightened out of fear; and in that mood
 The dove will peck the estridge; and I see still
 A diminution in our captain's brain

Restores his heart: when valour preys on reason
 It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek
 Some way to leave him. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—CÆSAR'S Camp at Alexandria.

Enter CÆSAR reading a letter; AGRIPPA,
 MÆCENAS, and others.

Cæs. He calls me boy; and chides as he had
 power

To beat me out of Egypt; my messenger
 He hath whipp'd with rods; dares me to personal combat,

Cæsar to Antony:—let the old ruffian know
 I have many other ways to die; meantime
 Laugh at his challenge.

Mec. Cæsar must think,
 When one so great begins to rage, he's hunted
 Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
 Make boot of his distraction:—never anger
 Made good guard for itself.

Cæs. Let our best heads
 Know that to-morrow the last of many battles
 We mean to fight.—Within our files there are,
 Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,
 Enough to fetch him in. See it done:
 And feast the army; we have store to do't,
 And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony!
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS,
 CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius.
 Eno. No.

Ant. Why should he not? [fortune,

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better
 He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,
 By sea and land I'll fight: or I will live,
 Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
 Shall make it live again. Woo't thou fight well?

Eno. I'll strike, and cry, Take all.

Ant. Well said; come on.—
 Call forth my household servants: let's to-night
 Be bounteous at our meal.—

Enter Servants.

Give me thy hand,
 Thou hast been rightly honest;—so hast thou;—
 Thou,—and thou,—and thou,—you have serv'd me well,

And kings have been your fellows.

Cleo. [Aside to ENO.] What means this?

Eno. [Aside to CLEO.] 'Tis one of those odd tricks which sorrow shoots
 Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too.

I wish I could be made so many men,
 And all of you clapp'd up together in An Antony, that I might do you service
 So good as you have done.

Serv. The gods forbid!

Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-
 night:

Scant not my cups; and make as much of me
 As when mine empire was your fellow too,
 And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. [Aside to ENO.] What does he mean?

Eno. [Aside to CLEO.] To make his followers
 weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night;
 Maybe it is the period of your duty:
 Haply you shall not see me more; or if,
 A mangled shadow: perchance to-morrow
 You'll serve another master. I look on you
 As one that takes his leave. Mine honest
 friends,

I turn you not away; but, like a master
 Married to your good service, stay till death:
 Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
 And the gods yield you for't!

Eno. What mean you, sir,
 To give them this discomfort? Look, they weep;
 And I, an ass, am onion-ey'd: for shame,
 Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho!
 Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus!
 Grace grow where those drops fall! My hearty friends,

You take me in too dolorous a sense; [you,
 For I spake to you for your comfort,—did desire To burn this night with torches: know, my
 hearts,

I hope well of to-morrow; and will lead you
 Where rather I'll expect victorious life
 Than death and honour. Let's to supper;
 come,

And drown consideration. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—ALEXANDRIA Before the Palace

Enter two Soldiers to their guard.

1 Sold. Brother, good-night: to-morrow is the day. [well.]

2 Sold. It will determine one way: fare you Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?

1 Sold. Nothing. What news? [to you.]

2 Sold. Belike 'tis but a rumour. Good-night

1 Sold. Well, sir, good-night.

Enter two other Soldiers.

2 Sold. Soldiers, have careful watch.

3 Sold. And you. Good-night, good-night.
 [The first two place themselves at their posts.]

4 Sold. Here we: [The third and fourth take their posts.] and if to-morrow

Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope
 Our landmen will stand up.

3 Sold. 'Tis a brave army,
 And full of purpose.

[Music as of hautboys under the stage.]
 4 Sold. Peace, what noise?

1 Sold. List, list!

2 Sold. Hark!

1 Sold. Music! 'the air.

3 Sold. Under the earth.

4 Sold. It signs well, does it not?

3 Sold. No.

1 Sold. Peace, I say!

What should this mean?

2 Sold. 'Tis the god Hercules, whom Antony
 Now leaves him.

1 Sold. Walk; let's see if other watchmen Do hear what we do.

[They advance to another post.]

2 Sold. How now, masters!

Soldiers. [Speaking together.] How now! How now! do you hear this?

1 Sold. Ay; is't not strange?

3 Sold. Do you hear, masters? do you hear?

1 Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quarter;

Let's see how't will give off.

Soldiers. [Speaking together.] Content. 'Tis strange. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA; CHARMIAN IRAS, and others attending.

Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros!

Cleo. Sleep a little.

Ant. No, my chuck.—Eros, come; mine armour, Eros!

Enter EROS with armour.

Come, good fellow, put mine iron on.—

If fortune be not ours to-day, it is Because we brave her.—Come.

Cleo. Nay, I'll help too.

What's this for?

Ant. Ah, let be, let be! thou art

The armourer of my heart. False, false; this, this.

Cleo. Sooth, la, I'll help: thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well;

We shall thrive now.—Seest thou, my good fellow?

Go put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly, sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled well?

Ant. Rarely, rarely:

He that unbuckles this, till we do please

To doff't for our repose, shall hear a storm.—

Thou fumblest, Eros; and my queen's a squire

More tight at this than thou: despatch.—O

love,

[knew'st]
That thou couldst see my wars to-day, and

The royal occupation! thou shouldst see

A workman in't.—

Enter an Officer, armed.

Good-morrow to thee; welcome:

Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike charge:

To business that we love we rise betime,

And go to't with delight.

Off. A thousand, sir,

Early though it be, have on their riveted trim,

And at the port expect you.

[Shout. Flourish of Trumpets within.]

Enter other Officers and Soldiers.

2 Off. The morn is fair.—Good-morrow, general.

All. Good-morrow, general.

Ant. 'Tis well blown, lads:

This morning, like the spirit of a youth

That means to be of note, begins betimes.—

So, so; come, give me that: this way; well said.—

Fare thee well, dame, whate'er becomes of me:

This is a soldier's kiss: rebukable, [Kisses her.]

And worthy shameful check it were, to stand

On more mechanic compliment; I'll leave thee

Now, like a man of steel.—You that will fight,

Follow me close; I'll bring you to't.—Adieu.

[Exeunt ANT., EROS, Officers, and Soldiers.]

Char. Please you, retire to your chamber.

Cleo. Lead me.

He goes forth gallantly. That he and Cæsar might

Determine this great war in single fight!

Then, Antony,—but now—Well, on.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—ANTONY'S Camp near Alexandria.

Trumpets sound within. Enter ANTONY and EROS; a Soldier meeting them.

Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony!

Ant. Would thou and those thy scars had once prevail'd

To make me fight at land!

Sold. Hadst thou done so,

The kings that have revolted, and the soldier

That has this morning left thee, would have still

Follow'd thy heels.

Ant. Who's gone this morning?

Sold. Who.

One ever near thee: call for Enobarbus,

He shall not hear thee; or from Cæsar's camp

Say, I am none of thine.

Ant. What say'st thou?

Sold. Sir,

He is with Cæsar.

Eros. Sir, his chests and treasure

He has not with him.

Ant. Is he gone?

Sold. Most certain.

Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do

it;

Detain no jot, I charge thee; write to him,—

I will subscribe,—gentle adieus and greetings;

Say that I wish he never find more cause

To change a master.—O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men!—Eros, despatch.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—CÆSAR'S Camp before Alexandria.

Flourish. Enter CÆSAR, with AGRIPPA, ENOBARBUS, and others.

Cæs. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight:

Our will is Antony be took alive;

Make it so known.

Agr. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit.]

Cæs. The time of universal peace is near:

Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd

world

Shall bear the olive freely.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Antony

Is come into the field.

Cæs. Go charge Agrippa

Plant those that have revolted in the van,

That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself. [Exeunt CÆSAR and his Train.]

Ero. Alexas did revolt; and went to Jewry
On affairs of Antony; there did persuade Great Herod to incline himself to Cæsar,
And leave his master Antony: for this pains Cæsar hath hang'd him. Canidius, and the rest

That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill;
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of CÆSAR'S.

Sold. Enobarbus, Antony
Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with
His bounty overplus: the messenger
Came on my guard, and at thy tent is now
Unloading of his mules.

Ero. I give it you.

Sold. Mock not, Enobarbus.
I tell you true: best you sa'd the bringer
Out of the host; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done't myself. Your emperor Continues still a Jove. [Exit.]

Ero. I am alone the villain of the earth
And feel I am so most. O Antony, Thou mine of bounty, how would'st thou have
My better service, when my turpitude Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows my heart:

If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrike thought: but thought will do't.
I feel,

I fight against thee!—No: I will go seek
Some ditch wherein to die; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.]

SCENE VII.—Field of Battle between the Camps.

Alarum. Drums and trumpets. *Enter
AGRIPPA and others.*

Agri. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far:
Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. [Exeunt.]

Alarum. *Enter ANTONY, and SCARUS
wounded.*

Scar. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!
Had we done so at first, we had driven them
home
With clouts about their heads.

Ant. Thou bleed'st apace.

Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.

Ant. They do retire.

Scar. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes: I have yet
Room for six scotches more.

Enter EROS.

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage serves
For a fair victory.

Scar. Let us score their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind:
'Tis sport to maul a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy spritely comfort, and tenfold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. I'll halt after. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—Under the Walls of Alexandria.

Alarum. *Enter ANTONY marching; SCARUS
and Forces.*

Ant. We have beat him to his camp. Run
one before, [morrow,
And let the queen know of our gestic.—To-
Before the sun shall see us, we'll spill the blood
That has to-day escap'd. I thank you all;
For doughty-handed are you, and have fought
Not as you serv'd the cause, but as 'st had been
Each man's like mine; you have shown all Hectors.

*Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats; whilst they with joyful tears [kiss
Wash the congealment from your wounds, and
The honour'd gashes whole.—Give me thy
hand;*

[To SCARUS.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, attended.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee. O thou day o'
the world, [all,
Chain mine arm'd neck; leap thou, attire and
Through proof of harness to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of lords!
O infinite virtue, com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare uncaught?

Ant. My nightingale,
We have beat them to their beds. What, girl!
though grey [yet ha' we

Do something mingle with our younger brown;
A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get goal for goal of youth. Behold this man;
Commend unto his lips thy favouring hand;—
Kiss it, my warrior: he hath fought to-day
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo. I'll give thee, friend,
An armour all of gold; it was a king's.

Ant. He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncled
Like holy Phoebus' car.—Give me thy hand:
Through Alexandria make a jolly march;
Bear our hack'd targets like the men that owe
them:

Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together,
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear;
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines;
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds
together,

Applauding our approach. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—CÆSAR'S Camp.

Sentinels at their Post.

1 Sold. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard: the
night

Is shiny; and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour i' the morn.

2 Sold. This last day was A shrewd one to's.

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. O, bear me witness, night.—

3 Sold. What man is this?

2 Sold. Stand close and list to him.

Eno. Be witness to me, O thou blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did Before thy face repent!—

1 Sold. Enobarbus!

3 Sold. Peace!

Hark further.

Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The poisonous damp of night disponge upon
me,

That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me: throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,

And finish all foul thoughts. O Antony
Nobler than my revolt is infamous,
Forgive me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver and a fugitive:

O Antony! O Antony! [Dies.

2 Sold. Let's speak
To him.

1 Sold. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks
May concern Cæsar.

3 Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.

1 Sold. Swoons rather; for so bad a prayer

as his

Was never yet fore sleep.

2 Sold. Go we to him.

3 Sold. Awake, sir, awake; speak to us.

2 Sold. Hear you, sir?

1 Sold. The hand of death hath raught him.

[Drums afar off.] Hark! the drums
Do merrily wake the sleepers. Let us bear
him

To the court of guard; he is of note: our hour
Is fully out.

3 Sold. Come on, then;

He may recover yet. [Exit with the body.]

SCENE X.—Ground between the two Camps.

Enter ANTONY and SCARUS, with Forces,
marching.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea;
We please them not by land.

Scar. For both, my lord.

Ant. I would they'd fight i' the fire or i' the air;

We'd fight there too. But this it is; our foot
Upon the hills adjoining to the city

Shall stay with us:—order for sea is given;

They have put forth the haven:—forward now,

Where their appointment we may best discover,

And look on their endeavour. [Exit.

SCENE XI.—Another part of the Ground.

Enter CÆSAR, with his Forces, marching.

Cæs. But being charg'd, we will be still by
land,

Which, as I take't, we shall; for his best force
Is forth to man his galleys. To the vales,
And hold our best advantage. [Exit.

SCENE XII.—Another part of the Ground.

Enter ANTONY and SCARUS.

Ant. Yea they're not join'd: where yond pine does stand

I shall discover all: I'll bring thee word
Straight how 'tis like to go. [Exit.

Scar. Swallows have built

In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augurers Say they knew not,—they cannot tell;—look grimly,

And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony
Is valiant and dejected, and by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not.

[Alarum afar off, as at a sea-fight.]

Re-enter ANTONY.

Ant. All is lost;
This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me:
My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder
They cast their caps up, and carouse together
Like friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whore!

'tis thou
Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart
Makes only wars on thee.—Bid them all fly;
For when I am reveng'd upon my charm,
I have done all.—Bid them all fly; begone.

[Exit SCARUS.]

O sun, thy uprise shall I see no more:
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands.—All come to this!—The hearts

That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wishes, do discandy, melt their sweets
On blossoming Cæsar; and thus pine is bark'd
That overtopp'd them all. Betray'd I am:
O this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm,
Whose eyebeck'd forth my wars and call'd them home;

Whose bosom was my crownet, my chief end,
Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose,
Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss.—
What, Eros, Eros!

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt!

Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love?

Ant. Vanish; or I shall give thee thy deserving, [thee,

And blemish Cæsar's triumph. Let him take
And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians:

Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot

Of all thy sex; most monster-like, be shown

For poor'st diminutives, for douts, and let

Patent Octavia plough thy visage up

With her prepared nails. [Exit CLEO.] 'Tis

well thou 'rt gone,

If it be well to live; but better 'twere
 Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
 Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho!—
 The shirt of Nessus is upon me: teach me,
 Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage:
 Let me lodge Lichas on the horns o' the moon;
 And with those hands, that grasp'd the heaviest club, [die:
 Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall
 To the young Roman boy she hath sold me,
 and I fall
 Under this plot: she dies for't.—Eros, ho!
 [Exit.

SCENE XIII.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in
 the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and
 MARDIAN.

Cleo. Help me, my woman! O, he is more mad [sally
 Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thes-
 Was never so emboss'd.

Char. To the monument!
 There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead.

The soul and body rive not more in parting
 Than greatness going off.

Cleo. To the monument!—
 Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself:
 Say that the last I spoke was Antony
 And word it, pr'ythee, piteously: hence, Mardian;

And bring me how he takes my death.—
 To the monument! [Exeunt.

SCENE XIV.—ALEXANDRIA. Another Room.

Enter ANTONY and EROS.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?

Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish;

A vapour sometime like a bear or lion,
 A tower'd citadel, a pendant rock,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory
 With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
 And mock our eyes with air: thou hast seen
 these signs;

They are black vespers' pageants.

Eros. Ay, my lord.

Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought
 The rack dislimns; and makes it indistinct,
 As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord. [is

Ant. My good knave Eros, now thy captain
 Even such a body: here I am Antony;
 Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
 I made these wars for Egypt; and the queen,—
 Whose heart I thought I had, for she had mine;
 Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto't
 A million more now lost,—she, Eros, has Pack'd cards with Cæsar, and false-play'd my glory

Unto an enemy's triumph.—

Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us
 Ourselves to end ourselves.—

Enter MARDIAN.

O, thy vile lady!
 She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony;
 My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled
 With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy eunuch; peace!
 She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once, [do

And that she has discharg'd: what thou wouldst
 Is done unto thy hand: the last she spake

Was, Antony! most noble Antony!

Then in the midst a tearing groan did break
 The name of Antony; it was divided

Between her heart and lips: she render'd life,
 Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Unarm, Eros; the long day's task is done, [safe

And we must sleep.—That thou depart'st hence
 Does pay thy labour richly; go.

[Exit MARDIAN.
 Off, pluck off;—

The sevenfold shield of Ajax cannot keep
 The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides!

Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,
 Crack thy frail case!—Apace, Eros, apace.—

No more a soldier.—Bruised pieces, go;
 You have been nobly borne.—From me awhile.— [Exit EROS.

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now

All length is torture.—Since the torch is out,
 Lie down, and stray no further: now all labour

Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles
 Itself with strength: seal then, and all is done.—

Eros!—I come, my queen.—Eros!—stay for me: [hand,

Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in
 And with our sprightly port make the ghosts

gaze:

Dido and her Æneas shall want troops,
 And all the haunt be ours.—Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter EROS.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra died,
 I have liv'd in such dishonour that the gods
 Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back

With ships made cities, condemn myself to lack
 The courage of a woman; less noble mind

Than she which by her death our Cæsar tells,
 I am conqueror of myself. Thou art sworn,

Eros,
 That, when the exigent should come,—which
 now

Is come indeed—when I should see behind me
 The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command, Thou then wouldst kill me: do't; the time is

come:
 Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Cæsar thou defeat'st.
 Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me!
Shall I do that which all the Parthian darts,
Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Ant. Eros,
Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome, and
see

Thy master thus with pleach'd arms, bending
down

His corrugible neck, his face subdu'd
To penetrative shame; whilst the wheel'd seat
Of fortunate Cæsar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensu'd?

Eros. I would not see't.

Ant. Come, then; for with a wound I must be cur'd.

Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn

Most useful for thy country.

Eros. O, sir, pardon me!

Ant. When I did make thee free, swor'st thou not then

To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;
Or thy precedent services are all

But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turn from me then that noble countenance,

Wherein the worship of the whole world lies.

Ant. Lo thee! [Turning from him.]

Eros. My sword is drawn.

Ant. Then let it do at once
The thing why thou hast drawn it.

Eros. My dear master,
My captain and my emperor, let me say,
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said, man;—and farewell.

Eros. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike
now?

Ant. Now, Eros.

Eros. Why, there then [falls on his sword]:—
thus do I escape the sorrow

Of Antony's death. [Dies.]

Ant. Thrice nobler than myself!
Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what [Eros]
I should, and thou couldst not. My queen and Have, by their brave instruction, got upon me
A nobleness on record: but I will be
A bridegroom in my death, and run into't
As to a lover's bed. Come, then; and, Eros, Thy master dies thy scholar: to do thus

[Falling on his sword.]
I learn'd of thee. How! not dead? not dead?—
The guard, ho!—O, despatch me!

Enter DERCETAS and Guard.

1 Guard. What's the noise?
Ant. I have done my work ill, friends: O, make an end

Of what I have begun.

2 Guard. The star is fallen.

1 Guard. And time is at his period.

All. Alas, and woe!

Ant. Let him that loves me, strike me dead.

1 Guard. Not I,

2 Guard. Nor I.

3 Guard. Nor any one. [Exeunt Guard.]

Der. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly. [sings,]
This sword but shown to Cæsar, with this tid-
Shall enter me with him.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. Where's Antony?

Der. There, Diomed, there.

Dio. Lives he?

Wilt thou not answer, man?

[Exit DERCETAS.]

Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me
Sufficing strokes for death.

Dio. Most absolute lord,
My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did she send thee?

Dio. Now, my lord.

Ant. Where is she?

Dio. Lock'd in her monument. She had a prophesying fear

Of what hath come to pass: for when she saw,—
Which never shall be found,—you did suspect
She had dispos'd with Cæsar, and that your rage

Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she
was dead;

But, fearing since how it might work, hath sent
Me to proclaim the truth; and I am come,
I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late, good Diomed.—Call my guard, I pray thee.

Dio. What, ho! the emperor's guard! The guard, what, ho!

Come, your lord calls?

Enter some of the Guard.

Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra hides;

'Tis the last service that I shall command you.

1 Guard. Woe, woe are we, sir, you may not live to wear

All your true followers out.

All. Most heavy day!

Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fate

To grace it with your sorrows: bid that wel-
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it,

Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up:

I have led you off: carry me now, good friends,
And have my thanks for all.

[Exeunt, bearing ANTONY.]

SCENE XV.—ALEXANDRIA. A Monument.

Enter, above CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from
hence.

Char. Be comforted, dear madam.

Cleo. No, I will not:

All strange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we despise; our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
As that which makes it.—

Enter, below, DIOMEDES.

How now! is he dead?

Dio. His death's upon him, but not dead.
Look out o' the other side your monument;
His guard have brought him thither.

Enter, below, ANTONY, borne by the Guard.

Cleo. O sun,
Burn the great sphere thou mov'st in!—darkling stand

The varying shore o' the world.—O Antony, Antony, Antony!—Help, Charmian; help, Iras,
help,—

Help, friends below;—let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace!
Not Cæsar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,
But Antony's hath triumph'd on itself.

Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony
Should conquer Antony; but woe 'tis so!

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying; only
I here importune death awhile, until
Of many thousand kisses the poor last
I lay upon thy lips.

Cleo. I dare not, dear,—
Dear my lord, pardon,—I dare not,
Lest I be taken: not the imperious show
Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar ever shall [have

Be brooch'd with me; if knife, drugs, serpents
Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe;

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour Demurring upon me.—But come, come, Antony,— [up;—

Help me, my women,—we must draw thee
Assist, good friends.

Ant. O, quick, or I am gone.
Cleo. Here's sport indeed!—How heavy weighs my lord!

Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight: had I great Juno's power, [up,

The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee
And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,— [come;—

Wishers were ever fools,—O, come, come,
[They draw ANTONY up.

And welcome, welcome! die where thou hast
liv'd:

Quickened with kissing: had my lips that power,
Thus would I wear them out.

All. A heavy sight!
Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying:
Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.

Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail so high [wheel,
That the false housewife Fortune break her
Provok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word, sweet queen:
Of Cæsar seek your honour, with your safety.—
O!

Cleo. They do not go together.
Ant. Gentle, hear me:
None about Cæsar trust but Proculeius.

Cleo. My resolution and my hands I'll trust;
None about Cæsar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end
Lament nor sorrow at: but please your thoughts
In feeding them with those my former fortunes Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince o' the
world,

The noblest; and do now not basely die,
Not cowardly put off my helmet to
My countryman, a Roman by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now my spirit is going:
I can no more.

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't die?
Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is No better than a sty?—O, see, my women,

[ANTONY dies.
The crown o' the earth doth melt.—My lord!—
O, wither'd is the garland of the war, [girls
The soldier's pole is fallen: young boys and
Are level now with men: the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable
Beneath the visiting moon. [Faints.

Char. O, quietness, lady!
Iras. She is dead too, our sovereign.

Char. Lady,—
Iras. Madam,—
Char. O madam, madam, madam,— Iras. Royal Egypt,

Empress,—
Char. Peace, peace, Iras! [manded
Cleo. No more, but e'en a woman, and com-
By such poor passion as the maid that milks
And does the meanest chares.—It were for me
To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods;
To tell them that this world did equal theirs
Till they had stol'n our jewel. All's but naught Patience is sottish, and impatience does
Become a dog that's mad: then is it sin
To rush into the secret house of death
Ere death dare come to us?—How do you, women? [Charmian!

What, what! good cheer! Why, how now,
My noble girls!—Ah, women, women, look,
Our lamp is spent, it's out!—Good sirs, take heart!— [noble,

We'll bury him; and then, what's brave, what's
Let's do it after the high Roman fashion,
And make death proud to take us. Come,
away:

This case of that huge spirit now is cold:
Ah, women, women!—Come; we have no
friend

But resolution, and the briefest end.
[Exeunt; those above bearing off ANTONY'S body.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—CÆSAR'S Camp before Alexandria.

Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, DOLABELLA, ME-
CÆNAS, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS, and others.

Cæs. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate, tell him that he mocks
The pauses that he makes.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit.
Enter DERCETAS with the sword of ANTONY.

Cæs. Wherefore is that? and what art thou that dar'st
Appear thus to us?

Der. I am call'd Dercetas;
Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy
Best to be serv'd: whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master; and I wore my life
To spend upon his haters. If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him
I'll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is't thou say'st?

Der. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make

A greater crack: the round world
Should have shook lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens. The death of
Antony

Is not a single doom; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Der. He is dead, Cæsar;
Not by a public minister of justice,
Nor by a hired knife; but that self hand
Which writ his honour in the acts it did Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,

Split the heart.—This is his sword;
I robb'd his wound of it; behold it stain'd
With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad, friends?
The gods rebuke me, but it is tidings
To wash the eyes of kings.

Agr. And strange it is
That nature must compel us to lament
Our most persisted deeds.

Mec. His taints and honours
Weigh'd equal with him.

Agr. A rarer spirit never Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious mirror's set before him,
He needs must see himself.

Cæs. O Antony!
I have follow'd thee to this.—But we do lance
Diseases in our bodies: I must perforce
Have shown to thee such a declining day
Or look on thine; we could not stall together
In the whole world: but yet let me lament,
With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,
That thou, my brother, my competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,
The arm of mine own body, and the heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle,—that our stars,
Unreconcilable, should divide
Our equalness to this.—Hear me, good
friends,—

But I will tell you at some meetest season:

Enter a Messenger.

The business of this man looks out of him;
We'll hear him what he says.—Whence are you?

Mess. A poor Egyptian yet. The queen my mistress,

Confin'd in all she has, her monument,
Of thy intents desires instruction,
That she preparedly may frame herself
To the way she's forc'd to.

Cæs. Bid her have good heart:
She soon shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honourable and how kindly we Determine for her; for Cæsar cannot learn
To be ungentle.

Mess. So the gods preserve thee! [Exit.]

Cæs. Come hither, Proculeius. Go, and say
We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts

The quality of her passion shall require
Lest, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke
She do defeat us; for her life in Rome
Would be eternal in our triumph: go,
And with your speediest bring us what she says,
And how you find of her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit.]

Cæs. Gallus, go you along.—[Exit GALLUS.]

Where's Dolabella,

To second Proculeius?

Agr. and Mec. Dolabella!

Cæs. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he's employ'd: he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent; where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war;
How calm and gentle I proceeded still
In all my writings: go with me, and see
What I can show in this. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—ALEXANDRIA. A Room in the Monument.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life. 'Tis paltry to be Cæsar;
Not being Fortune, he's but Fortune's knave,
A minister of her will: and it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackles accidents and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dug,
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.

Enter, to the gates of the Monument, PROCULEIUS, GALLUS, and Soldiers.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the Queen of Egypt;

And bids thee study on what fair demands
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Antony
Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceiv'd,
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell
him

That majesty, to keep decorum, must
No less beg than a kingdom: if he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son,
He gives me so much of mine own as I
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer;
You are fallen into a princely hand, fear nothing:
Lend your full reference freely to my lord,
Who is so full of grace that it flows over
On all that need: let me report to him
Your sweet dependency; and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. Pray you, tell him
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. I hourly learn
A doctrine of obedience; and would gladly
Look him in the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady.
Have comfort, for I know your plight is pitied
Of him that caus'd it.

Gai. You see how easily she may be surpris'd:

[Here PROCULEIUS and two of the Guard ascend the Monument by a ladder placed against a window, and, having descended come behind CLEOPATRA. Some of the Guard unbar and open the gates.]

Guard her till Cæsar come.

[To PRO. and the Guard. Exit.

Iras. Royal queen!

Char. O Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen!

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a dagger.

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold:

[Seizes and disarms her.

Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this

Reliev'd, but not betray'd.

Cleo. What, of death too,

That bids our dogs of languish?

Pro. Cleopatra,

Do not abuse my master's bounty by

The undoing of yourself: let the world see

His nobleness well acted, which your death

Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death?

Come hither, come! come, come, and take a

queen

Worth many babes and beggars!

Pro. O, temperance, lady!

Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink,

sir;

If idle talk will once be accessary,

I'll not sleep neither: this mortal house I'll ruin,

Do Cæsar what he can. Know, sir, that I

Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;

Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye

Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up,

And show me to the shouting varletry

Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt

Be gentle grave unto me! rather on Nilus' mud

Lay me stark nak'd, and let the water-flies

Blow me into abhorring! rather make

My country's high pyramids my gibbet,

And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend

These thoughts of horror further than you shall

Find cause in Cæsar.

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Proculeius,

What thou hast done thy master Cæsar knows,

And he hath sent for thee: as for the queen,

I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella,

It shall content me best: be gentle to her.—

To Cæsar I will speak what you shall please,

[To CLEOPATRA.

If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say I would die.

[Exeunt PROCULEIUS and Soldiers.

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of

me?

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly you know me.

Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard or known.

[dreams;

You laugh when boys or women tell their

Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, madam.

Cleo. I dream'd there was an emperor

Antony:—

O, such another sleep, that I might see
But such another man!

Dol. If it might please you,—

Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck

A sun and moon, which kept their course, and lighted

The little O, the earth.

Dol. Most sovereign creature,—

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean: his rear'd arm

Crested the world: his voice was propertyed

As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends;

But when he meant to quail and shake the orb,

He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,

There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas

That grew the more by reaping: his delights

Were dolphin-like; they show'd his back above

The element they liv'd in: in his livery

Walk'd crowns and crownets; realms and islands were

As plates dropp'd from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Think you there was or might be such a man

As this I dream'd of?

Dol. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods.

But if there be, or ever were, one such,

It's past the size of dreaming: nature wants stuff

To vie strange forms with fancy: yet to imagine

An Antony were nature's peace 'gainst fancy,

Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam.

Your loss is, as yourself, great; and you bear it

As answering to the weight: would I might never

O'ertake pursu'd success, but I do feel,

By the rebound of yours, a grief that smites

My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.

Know you what Cæsar means to do with me?

Dol. I am loth to tell you what I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir,—

Dol. Though he be honourable,—

Cleo. He'll lead me, then, in triumph?

Dol. Madam, he will,

I know it. [Flourish within.

Within. Make way there.—Cæsar!

Enter CÆSAR, GALLUS, PROCULEIUS,

MECÆNAS, SELEUCUS, and Attendants.

Cæs. Which is the Queen of Egypt?

Dol. It is the emperor, madam.

[CLEOPATRA kneels.

Cæs. Arise, you shall not kneel:—

I pray you rise; rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods

Will have it thus; my master and my lord

I must obey.

Cæs. Take to you no hard thoughts:

The record of what injuries you did us,

Though written in our flesh, we shall remember

As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world,

I cannot project mine own cause so well

To make it clear: but do confess I have Been laden with like frailties which before

Have often sham'd our sex.

Cæs. Cleopatra, know
We will extenuate rather than enforce:
If you apply yourself to our intents,— [find
Which towards you are most gentle,—you shall
A benefit in this change; but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may, through all the world: 'tis yours; and we,
Your scutcheons and your signs of conquest,
shall [good lord.

Hang in what place you please. Here, my
Cæs. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels

I am possess'd of: 'tis exactly valued; [cuss?
Not petty things admitted.—Where's Seleu-
Sel. Here, madam. [my lord,

Cleo. This is my treasurer: let him speak,
Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam,
I had rather seal my lips than to my peril
Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back?
Sel. Enough to purchase what you have made known.

Cæs. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra; I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Cæsar! O, behold,
How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours; [mine.

And, should we shift estates, yours would be
The ingratitude of this Seleucus does
Even make me wild: O slave, of no more trust
Than love that's hid—What, goest thou back? thou shalt

Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes [dog!
Though they had wings; slave, soulless villain,
O rarely base!

Cæs. Good queen, let us entreat you.
Cleo. O Cæsar, what a wounding shame is
this,—

That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness

To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Say, good Cæsar,

That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,
Immortal toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal; and say,
Some nobler token I have kept apart

For Livia and Octavia, to induce
Their meditation; must I be unfolded
With one that I have bred? The gods! It smites me

Beneath the fall I have. Pr'ythee, go hence;
[To SELEUCUS.

Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits
Through the ashes of my chance.—Wert thou
a man,

Thou wouldst have mercy upon me.
Cæs. Forbear, Seleucus,
[Exit SELEUCUS.

Cleo. Be it known that we, the greatest, are misthought

For things that others do; and when we fall
We answer others' merits in our name,
And therefore to be pitied

Cæs. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd,

Put we i' the roll of conquest: still be't yours,
Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe
Cæsar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd;

Make not your thoughts your prisons: no, dear
queen;

For we intend so to dispose you as Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed and sleep:
Our care and pity is so much upon you
That we remain your friend; and so, adieu.

Cleo. My master and my lord!
Cæs. Not so. Adieu.

[Flourish. Exeunt CÆSAR and his Train.
Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not

Be noble to myself: but hark thee, Charmian!
[Whispers CHARMIAN.

Ir. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,

And we are for the dark.
Cleo. Hie thee again:

I have spoke already, and it is provided;
Go put it to the haste.

Char. Madam, I will.

Re-enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. Where is the queen?

Char. Behold, sir. [Exit.
Cleo. Dolabella!

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your command,

Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Cæsar through Syria
Intends his journey; and within three days
You with your children will be sent before:
Make your best use of this: I have perform'd
Your pleasure and my promise.

Cleo. Dolabella,
I shall remain your debtor.

Dol. I your servant.
Adieu, good queen; I must attend on Cæsar.
Cleo. Farewell, and thanks.

[Exit DOLABELLA.

Now, Iras, what think'st thou?
Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shown
In Rome as well as I: mechanic slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view; in their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

Ir. The gods forbid!
Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain, Iras:—saucy lectors [rhymers

Will catch at us like strumpets; and scald
Ballad us out o' tune: the quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy my greatness
I' the posture of a whore.

Iras. O the good gods!

Cleo. Nay, that's certain.

Iras. I'll never see't; for I am sure my nails are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo. Why, that's the way
To fool their preparation and to conquer
Their most absurd intents.

Enter CHARMIAN.

Now, Charmian!—
Show me, my women, like a queen.—Go fetch
My best attires;—I am again for Cydnus,
To meet Mark Antony:—sirrah, Iras, go.—
Now, noble Charmian, we'll despatch indeed:
And when thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee leave [all.]
To play till doomsday.—Bring our crown and Wherefore's this noise?

[Exit IRAS. A noise within.]

Enter one of the Guard.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow
That will not be demed your highness' presence:
He brings you figs.

Cleo. Let him come in. [Exit Guard.]

What poor an instrument
May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's plac'd, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: now from head to foot
I am marble-constant; now the fleeting moon
No planet is of mine.

Re-enter Guard, with Clown bringing a basket.

Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him. [Exit Guard.]
Hast thou the pretty worm of Nilus there
That kills and pains not?

Clown. Truly, I have him: but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal; those that do die of it do seldom or never recover. [on't?]

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have died

Clown. Very many, men and women too.
I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday:
a very honest woman, but something given to lie; as a woman should not do but in the way of honesty: how she died of the biting of it, what pain she felt,—truly she makes a very good report o' the worm; but he that will believe all that they say shall never be saved by half that they do: but this is most fallible, the worm's an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence; farewell.

Clown. I wish you all joy of the worm.

[Sets down the basket.]

Cleo. Farewell.

Clown. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind.

Cleo. Ay, ay; farewell.

Clown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted but in the keeping of wise people; for indeed there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care; it shall be heeded.

Clown. Very good. Give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Clown. You must not think I am so simple but I know the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whoreson devils do the gods great harm in their women, for in every ten that they make the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone; farewell.

Clown. Yes, forsooth: I wish you joy o' the worm. [Exit.]

Re-enter IRAS, with a robe, crown, &c.

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown;
I have

Immortal longings in me: now no more
The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip:—

Yare, yare, good Iris; quick.—Methinks I hear
Antony call; I see him rouse himself
To praise my noble act; I hear him mock
The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men
To excuse their after wrath. Husband, I come:
Now to that name my courage prove my title!
I am fire and air; my other elements
I give to baser life.—So,—have you done?
Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips.
Farewell, kind Charmian;—Iras, long farewell.

[Kisses them. IRAS falls and dies.]

Have I the aspic in my lips? Dost fall?
If thou and nature can so gently part,
The stroke of death is as a lover's punch,
Which hurts and is desir'd. Dost thou he still?
If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world
It is not worth leave-taking.

Char. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain; that I may say

The gods themselves do weep!

Cleo. This proves me base:

If she first meet the curled Antony,
He'll make demand of her, and spend that kiss
Which is my heaven to have.—Come, thou mortal wretch,

[To an asp, which she applies to her breast.]

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsic
Of life at once untie: poor venomous fool,
Be angry, and despatch. O couldst thou speak,
That I might hear thee call great Cæsar ass Unpoliced!

Char. O eastern star!

Cleo. Peace, peace!
Dost thou not see my baby at my breast
That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O, break! O, break!

Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle:—

O Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too:—

[Applying another asp to her arm.]
What, should I stay,—

[Falls on a bed and dies.]

Char. In this vile world?—So, fare thee
well.—

Now boast thee, death, in thy possession lies
A lass unparallel'd.—Downy windows, close;
And golden Phœbus never be beheld
Of eyes again so royal! Your crown's awry;
I'll mend it and then play.

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?

Char. Speak softly, wake her not.

1 Guard. Cæsar hath sent,—

- Char.* Too slow a messenger.
[Applies an asp.]
 O, come apace, despatch: I partly feel thee.
- 1 Guard.* Approach, ho! all's not well:
 Cæsar's beguil'd. [call him.]
- 2 Guard.* There's Dolabellasant from Cæsar;
1 Guard. What work is here!—Charmian, is this well done? [cess]
- Char.* It is well done, and fitting for a prince
 Descended of so many royal kings.
 Ah, soldier! [Dies.]
- Re-enter DOLABELLA.*
- Dol.* How goes it here?
2 Guard. All dead.
Dol. Cæsar, thy thoughts
 Touch their effects in this: thyself art coming
 To see perform'd the dreaded act which thou
 So sought'st to hinder.
Within. A way there, a way for Cæsar!
- Re-enter CÆSAR and his Train.*
- Dol.* O, sir, you are too sure an augurer;
 That you did fear is done.
Cæs. Bravest at the last,
 She levell'd at our purposes, and, being royal,
 Took her own way.—The manner of their deaths?
I do not see them bleed.
Dol. Who was last with them?
1 Guard. A simple countryman that brought her figs.
 This was his basket,
- Cæs.* Poison'd then.
1 Guard. O Cæsar,
 This Charmian liv'd but now; she stood and spake:
I found her trimming up the diadem
 On her dead mistress; tremblingly she stood,
 And on the sudden dropp'd.
Cæs. O noble weakness!—
 If they had swallow'd poison 'twould appear
 By external swelling: but she looks like sleep,—
 As she would catch another Antony
 In her strong toil of grace.
Dol. Here on her breast
 There is a vent of blood, and something blown:
 The like is on her arm.
1 Guard. This is an asp's trail: and these fig-leaves
 Have slime upon them, such as the asp's leaves
 Upon the caves of Nile.
Cæs. Most probable
 That so she died; for her physician tells me
 She hath pursu'd conclusions infinite
 Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed,
 And bear her women from the monument:—
 She shall be buried by her Antony:
 No grave upon the earth shall clip in it
 A pair so famous. High events as these Strike those that make them; and their story is No less in pity than his glory which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall
 In solemn show attend this funeral;
 And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
 High order in this great solemnity. [Exeunt.]

CYMBELINE

PERSONS REPRESENTED

CYMBELINE, King of Britain.

CLOTEN, Son to the Queen by a former Husband.

POSTHUMUS LEONATUS, a Gentleman, Husband to IMOGEN.

BELARIUS, a banished Lord, disguised under the name of MORGAN.

GUIDERIUS, Sons to CYMBELINE, disguised under the names of POLYDOR and CADWAL, supposed Sons to BELARIUS.

PHILARIO, Friend to POSTHUMUS,
IACHIMO, Friend to PHILARIO, } Italians.

A French Gentleman, Friend to PHILARIO.

CAIUS LUCIUS, General of the Roman Forces.

A Roman Captain.

Two British Captains.

PISANIO, Servant to POSTHUMUS.

CORNELIUS, a Physician.

Two Lords of CYMBELINE's Court.

Two Gentlemen of the same.

Two Gaolers.

QUEEN, Wife to CYMBELINE.

IMOGEN, Daughter to CYMBELINE by a former Queen.

HELEN, Woman to IMOGEN.

Lords, Ladies, Roman Senators, Tribunes, Apparitions, a Soothsayer, a Dutch Gentleman, a Spanish Gentleman, Musicians, Officers, Captains, Soldiers, Messengers, and other Attendants.

SCENE,—Sometimes in BRITAIN; sometimes in ITALY.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—BRITAIN. The Garden behind CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. You do not meet a man but frowns:
our bloods
No more obey the heavens than our courtiers
Still seem as does the king.

2 Gent. But what's the matter?

1 Gent. His daughter, and the heir of's kingdom, whom
He purpos'd to his wife's sole son,—a widow
That late he married,—hath referr'd herself Unto a poor but worthy gentleman. She's wedded;

Her husband banish'd; she imprison'd: all
Is outward sorrow; though I think the king
Be touch'd at very heart.

2 Gent. None but the king?

1 Gent. He that hath lost her too: so is the queen, {courtier,

That most desir'd the match. But not a
Although they wear their faces to the bent
Of the king's looks, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they scowl at.

2 Gent. And why so?

1 Gent. He that hath miss'd the princess is a thing

Too bad for bad report: and he that hath her,—
I mean that married her—alack, good man!—
And therefore banish'd,—is a creature such
As, to seek through the regions of the earth

For one his like, there would be something failing

In him that should compare. I do not think
So fair an outward and such stuff within Endows a man but he.

2 Gent. You speak him far.

1 Gent. I do extend him, sir, within himself;
Crush him together, rather than unfold
His measure duly.

2 Gent. What's his name and birth?

1 Gent. I cannot delve him to the root: his father

Was call'd Sicilius, who did join his honour,
Against the Romans, with Cassibelan,
But had his titles by Tenantius, whom
He serv'd with glory and admir'd success,—
So gain'd the sur-addition Leonatus:
And had, besides this gentleman in question,
Two other sons, who, in the wars o' the time,
Died with their swords in hand; for which their
father,—

Then old and fond of issue,—took such sorrow
That he quit being; and his gentle lady,
Big of this gentleman, our theme, deceas'd
As he was born. The king he takes the babe
To his protection; calls him Posthumus Leonatus;
Breeds him, and makes him of his bed-chamber:
Puts to him all the learnings that his time
Could make him the receiver of; which he took,
As we do air, fast as 'twas minister'd;
And in's spring became a harvest: liv'd in court,—

Which rare it is to do,—most prais'd, most lov'd;
A sample to the youngest; to the more mature
A glass that feated them; and to the graver
A child that guided dotards: to his mistress,
For whom he now is banish'd,—her own price
Proclaims how she esteem'd him and his virtue;
By her election may be truly read
What kind of man he is.

2 Gent. I honour him

Even out of your report. But, pray you, tell
me,
Is she sole child to the king?

1 Gent. His only child.

He had two sons,—if this be worth your hearing,
Mark it,—the eldest of them at three years old,
I' the swathing clothes the other, from their nursery [knowledge
Were stol'n; and to this hour no guess in Which way they went.

2 Gent. How long is this ago?

1 Gent. Some twenty years. [convey'd!]

2 Gent. That a king's children should be so
So slackly guarded! And the search so slow
That could not trace them!

1 Gent. Howsoever 'tis strange,
Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at,
Yet it is true, sir.

2 Gent. I do well believe you.

1 Gent. We must forbear: here comes the gentleman,
The queen, and princess. [Exeunt.]

Enter the QUEEN, POSTHUMUS, and IMOGEN.

Queen. No, be assur'd you shall not find me,
daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Evil-ey'd unto you: you're my prisoner, but

Your gaoler shall deliver you the keys [mus,
That lock up your restraint.—For you, Posthu-
So soon as I can win the offended king,
I will be known your advocate: marry, yet
The fire of rage is in him; and 'twere good
You lean'd unto his sentence with what patience
Your wisdom may inform you.

Post. Please your highness,
I will from hence to-day.

Queen. You know the peril.—
I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

[Exit.]

Imo. O
Dissembling courtesy! How fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds!—My dearest husband, [ing,—
I something fear my father's wrath; but not-Always reserv'd my holy duty,—what
His rage can do on me. You must be gone;
And I shall here abide the hourly shot
Of angry eyes; not comforted to live,
But that there is this jewel in the world
That I may see again.

Post. My queen! my mistress!
O lady, weep no more, lest I give cause
To be suspected of more tenderness
Than doth become a man! I will remain
The loyal'st husband that did e'er plight troth:
My residence in Rome at one Philario's,
Who to my father was a friend, to me
Known but by letter: thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,

Though ink be made of gall.

Re-enter QUEEN.

Queen. Be brief, I pray you:
If the king come I shall incur I know not
How much of his displeasure.—[Aside.] Yet
I'll move him

To walk this way: I never do him wrong
But he does buy my injuries to be friends,—
Pays dear for my offences. [Exit.]

Post. Should we be taking leave
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The loathness to depart would grow. Adieu!

Imo. Nay, stay a little:
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Look here, love;
This diamond was my mother's: take it, heart;
But keep it till you woo another wife,
When Imogen is dead.

Post. How, how! another?—
You gentle gods, give me but this I have,
And seal up my embracements from a next
With bonds of death!—Reman, remain thou here [Putting on the ring.]

While sense can keep it on! And, sweetest, fairest,

As I my poor self did exchange for you,
To your infinite loss, so in our trifles
I still win of you: for my sake wear this;
It is a manacle of love; I'll place it
Upon this fairest prisoner.

[Putting a bracelet on her arm.]

Imo. O the gods!
When shall we see again?
Post. Alack, the king!

Enter CYMBELINE and Lords.

Cym. Thou basest thing, avoid! hence from my sight!

If after this command thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou diest: away!
Thou art poison to my blood.

Post. The gods protect you!
And bless the good remainders of the court!
I am gone. [Exit.]

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death
More sharp than this is.

Cym. O disloyal thing,
That shouldst repair my youth, thou heapest
A year's age on me!

Imo. I beseech you, sir,
Harm not yourself with your vexation: I
Am senseless of your wrath; a touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all fears.

Cym. Past grace? obedience?
Imo. Past hope, and in despair; that way past grace. [my queen!]

Cym. That mightst have had the sole son of Imo. O bless'd that I might not! I chose an eagle,

And did avoid a puttock.

Cym. Thou took'st a beggar; wouldest have made my throne
A seat for baseness.

Imo. No; I rather added
A lustre to it.

Cym. O thou vile one!

Imo. Sir,
It is your fault that I have lov'd Posthumus:
You bred him as my playfellow; and he is
A man worth any woman; overbuys me
Almost the sum he pays.

Cym. What, art thou mad?
Imo. Almost, sir: heaven restore me!—
Would I were

A neat-herd's daughter, and my Leonatus
Our neighbour shepherd's son!

Cym. Thou foolish thing!—

Re-enter QUEEN.

They were again together: you have done
[To the Queen.]

Not after our command. Away with her,
And pen her up.

Queen. Beseech your patience.—Peace,
Dear lady daughter, peace!—Sweet sovereign,
Leave us to ourselves; and make yourself some comfort

Out of your best advice.

Cym. Nay, let her languish
A drop of blood a day; and, being aged,
Die of this folly! [Exit, with Lords.]

Queen. Fie! you must give way.

Enter PISANIO.

Here is your servant.—How now, sir! What news?

Pis. My lord your son drew on my master.
Queen. Ha!

No harm, I trust, is done!

Pis. There might have been,
But that my master rather play'd than fought,
And had no help of anger: they were parted
By gentlemen at hand.

Queen. I am very glad on't.
Imo. Your son's my father's friend; he takes his part.—

To draw upon an exile!—O brave sir!—
I would they were in Afric both together;
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back.—Why came you from your master?

Pis. On his command: he would not suffer
me

To bring him to the haven: left these notes
Of what commands I should be subject to,
When't pleas'd you to employ me.

Queen. This hath been
Your faithful servant: I dare lay mine honour
He will remain so.

Pis. I humbly thank your highness
Queen. Pray, walk awhile.

Imo. About some half hour hence,
I pray you, speak with me: you shall at least
Go see my lord aboard: for this time leave me.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—BRITAIN.—A Public Place.

Enter CLOTEN and two Lords.

1 Lord. Sir, I would advise you to shift a shirt; the violence of action hath made you reek as a sacrifice: where air comes out air comes in: there's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent.

Clo. If my shirt were bloody, then to shift
it.—Have I hurt him?

2 Lord. [Aside.] No, faith; not so much as his patience.

1 Lord. Hurt him! His body's a passable carcass if he be not hurt: it is a throughfare for steel if it be not hurt.

2 Lord. [Aside.] His steel was in debt; it went o' the back side the town.

Clo. The villain would not stand me.

2 Lord. [Aside.] No; but he fled forward still, toward your face.

1 Lord. Stand you! You have land enough of your own: but he added to your having;
gave you some ground.

2 Lord. [Aside.] As many inches as you have oceans.—Puppies!

Clo. I would they had not come between us,

2 Lord. [Aside.] So would I, till you had measured how long a fool you were upon the ground.

Clo. And that she should love this fellow, and refuse me!

2 Lord. [Aside.] If it be a sin to make a true election, she is damned.

1 Lord. Sir, as I told you always, her beauty and her brain go not together: she's a good sign, but I have seen small reflection of her wit.

2 Lord. [Aside.] She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her.

Clo. Come, I'll to my chamber. Would there had been some hurt done!

2 Lord. [Aside.] I wish not so; unless it had been the fall of an ass, which is no great hurt.

Clo. You'll go with us?

1 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

Clo. Nay, come, let's go together.

2 Lord. Well, my lord. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—BRITAIN. A Room in CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter IMOGEN and PISANIO.

Imo. I would thou grew'st unto the shores o' the haven,
And questioned'st every sail: if he should write,
And I not have it, 'twere a paper lost,
As offer'd mercy is. What was the last
That he spake to thee?

Pis. It was, His queen, his queen!
Imo. Then wad his handkerchief?

Pis. And kiss'd it, madam.
Imo. Senseless linen! happier therein than I—

And that was all?

Pis. No, madam; for so long
As he could make me with this eye or ear
Distinguish him from others, he did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of's mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship.

Imo. Thou shouldst have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To after-eye him.

Pis. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would have broke mine eye-strings, crack'd them, but
To look upon him, till the diminution
Of space had pointed him sharp as my needle;
Nay, follow'd him till he had melted from
The smallness of a gnat to air; and then
Have turn'd mine eye and wept.—But, good
Pisanio,

When shall we hear from him?

Pis. Be assur'd, madam,
With his next vantage.

Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him
How I would think on him, at certain hours,
Such thoughts and such; or I could make him swear

The shes of Italy should not betray [him
Mine interest and his honour; or have charg'd
At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at midnight,
To encounter me with orisons, for then
I am in heaven for him; or ere I could Give him that parting kiss which I had set Betwixt two charming words, comes in my
father,

And like the tyrannous breathing of the north
Shakes all our buds from growing.

Enter a Lady.

Lady. The queen, madam,
Desires your highness' company.

Imo. Those things I bid you do, get them despatch'd.—

I will attend the queen.

Pis. Madam, I shall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—ROME. An Apartment in PHILARIO'S House.

Enter PHILARIO, IACHIMO, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.

Iach. Believe it, sir, I have seen him in Britain: he was then of a crescent note; expected to prove so worthy as since he hath been allowed the name of: but I could then have looked on him without the help of admiration;

though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by items.

Phi. You speak of him when he was less furnished than now he is with that which makes him both without and within.

French. I have seen him in France: we had very many there could behold the sun with as firm eyes as he.

Iach. This matter of marrying his king's daughter,—wherein he must be weighed rather by her value than his own,—words him, I doubt not, a great deal from the matter.

French. And then his banishment,—

Iach. Ay, and the approbation of those that weep this lamentable divorce, under her colours, are wonderfully to extend him; be it but to fortify her judgment, which else an easy battery might lay flat, for taking a beggar without less quality. But how comes it he is to sojourn with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Phi. His father and I were soldiers together;
to whom I have been often bound for no less than my life.—Here comes the Briton: let him be so entertained amongst you as suits with gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality.

Enter POSTHUMUS.

I beseech you all, be better known to this gentleman; whom I commend to you as a noble friend of mine: how worthy he is I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

French. Sir, we have known together in Orleans.

Post. Since when I have been debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be ever to pay and yet pay still.

French. Sir, you o'errate my poor kindness:
I was glad I did atone my countryman and you; it had been pity you should have been put together with so mortal a purpose as then each bore, upon importance of so slight and trivial a nature.

Post. By your pardon, sir, I was then a young traveller; rather shunned to go even with what I heard than in my every action to be guided by others' experiences: but, upon my mended judgment,—if I offend not to say it is mended,—my quarrel was not altogether slight.

French. Faith, yes, to be put to the arbitrement of swords; and by such two that would,
by all likelihood, have confounded one the other, or have fallen both.

Iach. Can we, with manners, ask what was the difference?

French. Safely, I think: 'twas a contention in public, which may, without contradiction, suffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mistresses; this gentleman at that time vouching,—and upon warrant of bloody affirmation,—his to be more fair, virtuous, wise, chaste, constant-qualified, and less attemptable than any the rarest of our ladies in France.

Iach. That lady is not now living; or this gentleman's opinion, by this, worn out.

Post. She holds her virtue still, and I my mind.

Iach. You must not so far prefer her fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend.

Iach. As fair and as good,—a kind of hand-in-hand comparison,—had been something too fair and too good for any lady in Brittany. If she went before others I have seen, as that diamond of yours out-lustres many I have beheld, I could not but believe she excelled many; but I have not seen the most precious diamond that is, nor you the lady.

Post. I praised her as I rated her: so do I my stone.

Iach. What do you esteem it at?

Post. More than the world enjoys.

Iach. Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle.

Post. You are mistaken: the one may be sold or given, if there were wealth enough for the purchase or merit for the gift: the other is not a thing for sale, and only the gift of the gods.

Iach. Which the gods have given you?

Post. Which, by their graces, I will keep.

Iach. You may wear her in title yours: but, you know, strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds. Your ring may be stolen too: so your brace of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail and the other casual; a cunning thief or a that-way-accomplished courtier would hazard the winning both of first and last.

Post. Your Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier to convince the honour of my mistress, if in the holding or loss of that you term her frail. I do nothing doubt you have store of thieves; notwithstanding I fear not my ring.

Phi. Let us leave here, gentlemen.

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy signior, I thank him, makes no stranger of me; we are familiar at first.

Iach. With five times so much conversation I should get ground of your fair mistress; make her go back even to the yielding, had I admittance and opportunity to friend.

Post. No, no.

Iach. I dare thereupon pawn the moiety of my estate to your ring; which, in my opinion, o'ervalues it something: but I make my wager rather against your confidence than her reputation: and, to bar your offence herein too, I durst attempt it against any lady in the world.

Post. You are a great deal abused in too bold a persuasion; and I doubt not you sustain what you're worthy of by your attempt.

Iach. What's that?

Post. A repulse: though your attempt, as you call it, deserve more,—a punishment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this: it came in too suddenly; let it die as it was born, and, I pray you, be better acquainted.

Iach. Would I had put my estate and my neighbour's on the approbation of what I have spoke!

Post. What lady would you choose to assail?

Iach. Yours; whom in constancy you think stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousand ducats to your ring that, commend me to the court where your lady is, with no more advantage than the opportunity of a second conference, and I will bring from thence that honour of hers which you imagine so reserved.

Post. I will wage against your gold gold to it: my ring I hold dear as my finger; 'tis part of it.

Iach. You are afraid, and therein the wiser. If you buy ladies' flesh at a million a dram, you cannot preserve it from tainting; but I see you have some religion in you, that you fear.

Post. This is but a custom in your tongue; you bear a graver purpose, I hope.

Iach. I am the master of my speeches; and would undergo what's spoken, I swear.

Post. Will you?—I shall but lend my diamond till your return:—let there be covenants drawn between us: my mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking: I dare you to this match: here's my ring.

Phi. I will have it no lay.

Iach. By the gods, it is one.—If I bring you no sufficient testimony that I have enjoyed the dearest bodily part of your mistress, my ten thousand ducats are yours; so is your diamond too: if I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in, she your jewel, this your jewel, and my gold are yours;—provided I have your commendation for my more free entertainment.

Post. I embrace these conditions; let us have articles betwixt us.—Only, thus far you shall answer: if you make your voyage upon her, and give me directly to understand you have prevail'd, I am no further your enemy; she is not worth our debate: if she remain unseduced,—you not making it appear otherwise,—for your ill opinion and the assault you have made to her chastity you shall answer me with your sword.

Iach. Your hand,—a covenant: we will have these things set down by lawful counsel, and straight away for Britain, lest the bargain should catch cold and starve: I will fetch my gold, and have our two wagers recorded.

Post. Agreed. [Exeunt POST. and IACH.]

French. Will this hold, thank you?

Phi. Signior Iachimo will not from it. Pray, let us follow 'em. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—BRITAIN. A Room in CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter QUEEN, Ladies, and CORNELIUS.

Queen. Whiles yet the dew's on ground gather those flowers;

Make haste: who has the note of them?

1 Lady. I, madam.

Queen. Despatch.— [Exeunt Ladies.]

Now, master doctor, have you brought those drugs?

Cor. Pleaseth your highness, ay: here they are, madam; [Presenting a small box.]
But I beseech your grace, without offence,—
My conscience bids me ask,—wherefore you have

Commanded of me these most poisonous compounds,
Which are the movers of a languishing death;
But, though slow, deadly?

Queen. I wonder, doctor,
Thou ask'st me such a question. Have I not been

Thy pupil long? Hast thou not learn'd me how
To make perfumes? distil? preserve? yea, so
That our great king himself doth woo me off
For my confections? Having thus far proceeded,—

Unless thou think'st me devilish,—is't not meet
That I did amuse thy judgment in Other conclusions? I will try the forces
Of these thy compounds on such creatures as We count not worth the hanging,—but none human,—

To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their act; and by them gather
Their several virtues and effects.

Cor. Your highness
Shall from this practice but make hard your
heart:

Besides, the seeing these effects will be
Both noisome and infectious.

Queen. O, content thee.—
Here comes a flattering rascal; upon him

[Aside.] Will I first work: he's for his master,
And enemy to my son.—

Enter PISANIO.

How now, Pisanio!—
Doctor, your service for this time is ended;
Take your own way.

Cor. [Aside:] I do suspect you, madam;
But you shall do no harm.

Queen. Hark thee, a word.

[To PISANIO.]

Cor. [Aside.] I do not like her. She doth think she has

Strange lingering poisons: I do know her spirit
And will not trust one of her malice with
A drug of such damn'd nature. Those she has
Will stupify and dull the sense awhile; [dogs,
Which first perchance she'll prove on cats and Then afterward up higher: but there is
No danger in what show of death it makes,
More than the locking up the spirits a time,
To be more fresh, reviving. She is fool'd
With a most false effect; and I the truer
So to be false with her.

Queen. No further service, doctor,
Until I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leave.
[Exit.]

Queen. Weeps she still, say'st thou? Dost thou think in time

She will not quench, and let instructions enter
Where folly now possesses? Do thou work;
When thou shalt bring me word she loves my
son,

I'll tell thee on the instant thou art then
As great as is thy master; greater,—for
His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is at last gasp: return he cannot, nor Continue where he is: to shift his being
Is to exchange one misery with another;

And every day that comes comes to decay
A day's work in him. What shalt thou expect,
To be depend on a thing that leans,—
Who cannot be new built, nor has no friends

[The QUEEN drops the box: PISANIO takes it up.]

So much as but to prop him?—Thou tak'st up Thou know'st not what; but take it for thy labour:

It is a thing I made, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial:—may, I pr'ythee, take it;
It is an earnest of a further good

That I mean to thee. Tell thy mistress how
The case stands with her; do't as from thyself.
Think what a chance thou changest on; but think

Thou hast thy mistress still,—to boot, my son,
Who shall take notice of thee: I'll move the
king

To any shape of thy preferment, such
As thou'lt desire; and then myself, I chiefly,
That set thee on to this desert, am bound
To load thy merit richly. Call my women:
Think on my words. [Exit PISANIO.]

A sly and constant knave;

Not to be shak'd: the agent for his master;
And the remembrancer of her to hold
The hand-fast to her lord.—I have given him
that

Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of liegers for her sweet; and which she after,
Except she bend her humour, shall be assur'd
To taste of too.

Re-enter PISANIO and Ladies.

So, so;—well done, well done:

The violets, cowslips, and the primroses,
Bear to my closet.—Fare thee well, Pisanio;
Think on my words.

[Exit QUEEN and Ladies.]

Pis.

And shall do:

But when to my good lord I prove untrue
I'll choke myself: there's all I'll do for you.
[Exit.]

SCENE VI.—BRITAIN. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter IMOGEN.

Imo. A father cruel and a step-dame false;
A foolish sutor to a wedded lady, [band!
That hath her husband banish'd;—O, that hus-
My supreme crown of grief! and those repeated
Vexations of it! Had I been thief-stolen,
As my two brothers, happy! but most miserable

Is the desire that's glorious: bless'd be those,
How mean soe'er, that have their honest wills,
Which seasons comfort.—Who may this be?
Fie!

Enter PISANIO and IACHIMO.

Pis. Madam, a noble gentleman of Rome
Comes from my lord with letters.

Iach.

Change you, madam?
The worthy Leonatus is in safety,
And greets your highness dearly.

[Presents a letter.]

Imo. Thanks, good sir:
You're kindly welcome. [most rich!]

Iach. [Aside.] All of her that is out of door
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare,
She is alone the Arabian bird; and I
Have lost the wager. Boldness be my friend!
Arm me, audacity, from head to foot!
Or, like the Parthian, I shall flying fight;
Rather directly fly.

Imo. [Reads.] *He is one of the noblest note to whose kindnesses I am most infinitely tied.
Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust* LEONATUS.

So far I read aloud:
But even the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by the rest, and takes it thankfully.—
You are as welcome, worthy sir, as I
Have words to bid you; and shall find it so
In all that I can do.

Iach. Thanks, fairest lady.— [eyes
What, are men mad? Hath nature given them
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above and the twinn'd stones
Upon th' unnumber'd beach? and can we not Partition make with spectacles so precious 'Twixt fair and foul?

Imo. What makes your admiration?
Iach. It cannot be i' the eye; for apes and monkeys,

'Twixt two such shes, would chatter this way and [ment;
Contemn with mows the other: nor i' the judg-
For idiots in this case of favour would
Be wisely definite: nor i' the appetite;
Sluttery, to such neat excellence oppos'd,
Should make desire vomit emptiness,
Not so allur'd to feed.

Imo. What is the matter, trow?
Iach. The cloyed will,—
That satiate yet unsatisfied desire, [first
That tub both fill'd and running,—ravening
The lamb, longs after for the garbage.

Imo. What, dear sir,
Thus raps you? Are you well?

Iach. Thanks, madam; well.—Beseech you, sir, desire [To PISANIO.
My man's abode where I did leave him: he is strange and peevish.

Pis. I was going, sir,
To give him welcome. [Exit.

Imo. Continues well my lord? His health, beseech you?

Iach. Well, madam.
Imo. Is he dispos'd to mirth? I hope he is.
Iach. Exceeding pleasant; none a stranger
there

So merry and so gamesome: he is call'd
The Briton reveller.

Imo. When he was here
He did incline to sadness; and oftentimes
Not knowing why.

Iach. I never saw him sad.
There is a Frenchman his companion, one
An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
A Gallian girl at home: he furnaces [ton,—
The thick sighs from him; whilst the jolly Bri-
Your lord, I mean,—laughs from's free lungs, cries, O, [knows
Can my sides hold, to think that man,—who

*By history, report, or his own proof,
What woman is, yea, what she cannot choose
But must be,—will his free hours languish for Assured bondage?*

Imo. Will my lord say so?
Iach. Ay, madam; with his eyes in flood with laughter.

It is a recreation to be by [heavens know,
And hear him mock the Frenchman. But,
Some men are much to blame.

Imo. Not he, I hope.
Iach. Not he; but yet heaven's bounty towards him might

Be us'd more thankfully. In himself 'tis
much;

In you,—which I count his beyond all talents,— Whilst I am bound to wonder I am bound
To pity too.

Imo. What do you pity, sir?
Iach. Two creatures heartily.

Imo. Am I one, sir?
You look on me: what wreck discern you in me
Deserves your pity?

Iach. Lamentable! What,
To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
I' the dungeon by a snuff?

Imo. I pray you, sir,
Deliver with more openness your answers
To my demands. Why do you pity me?

Iach. That others do,
I was about to say, enjoy your—But
It is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to speak on't.

Imo. You do seem to know Something of me, or what concerns me: pray
you,—

Since doubting things go ill often hurts more
Than to be sure they do; for certainties
Either are past remedies, or, timely knowing,
The remedy then born,—discover to me
What both you spur and stop.

Iach. Had I this cheek
To bathe my lips upon; this hand, whose touch, Whose every touch, would force the feeler's
soul

To the oath of loyalty; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it only here;—should I,—damn'd
then,—

Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hard with hourly falsehood,—falsehood as

With labour,—then bo-peeping in an eye
Base and unlustrous as the smoky light
That's fed with stinking tallow,—it were fit
That all the plagues of hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Imo. My lord, I fear,
Has forgot Britain.

Iach. And himself. Not I,
Includ'd to this intelligence, pronounce
The beggary of his change; but 'tis your graces
That from my mutest conscience to my tongue
Charms this report out.

Imo. Let me hear no more.
Iach. O dearest soul! your cause doth strike
my heart

With pity that doth make me sick! A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,

Would make the great'st king double,—to be partner'd

With tomboys, hir'd with that self-exhibition
Which your own coffers yield! with diseases'd ventures,

That play with all infirmities for gold [stuff
Which rottenness can lend nature! such boil'd
As well might poison poison! Be reveng'd;
Or she that bore you was no queen, and you
Recoil from your great stock.

Imo. Reveng'd!
How should I be reveng'd? If this be true,—
As I have such a heart that both mine ears
Must not in haste abuse,—if it be true,
How should I be reveng'd?

Iach. Should he make me
Live like Diana's priest betwixt cold sheets,
Whiles he is vaulting variable ramps,
In your despite, upon your purse? Revenge it.
I dedicate myself to your sweet pleasure;
More noble than that runagate to your bed;
And will continue fast to your affection,
Still close as sure.

Imo. What ho, Pisanio!

Iach. Let me my service tender on your lips.

Imo. Away!—I do condemn mine ears that have [able
So long attended thee.—If thou were honour-
Thou wouldst have told this tale for virtue, not For such an end thou seek'st,—as base as strange.

Thou wrong'st a gentleman who is as far
From thy report as thou from honour; and Solicit'st here a lady that disdains
Thee and the devil alike.—What, ho, Pisanio!—
The king my father shall be made acquainted
Of thy assault: if he shall think it fit
A saucy stranger in his court to mart
As in a Romish stew, and to expound
His beastly mind to us,—he hath a court
He little cares for, and a daughter who
He not respects at all.—What, ho, Pisanio!—

Iach. O happy Leonatus! I may say:
The credit that thy lady hath of thee [ness
Deserves thy trust; and thy most perfect good-
Her assur'd credit!—Blessed live you long!
A lady to the worthiest sir that ever
Country call'd his! and you his mistress, only For the most worthiest fit! Give me your pardon.

I have spoke this to know if your affiance
Were deeply rooted; and shall make your lord
That which he is new o'er: and he is one
The truest manner'd; such a holy witch
That he enchants societies unto him;
Half all men's hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.

Iach. He sits 'mongst men like a descended
god:

He hath a kind of honour sets him off
More than a mortal seeming. Be not angry,
Most mighty princess, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report; which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment

In the election of a sir so rare, [him
Which you know cannot err: the love I bear
Made me to fan you thus; but the gods made you, [don.

Unlike all others, chaffless. Pray, your par-

Imo. All's well, sir: take my power i' the court for yours. [got

Iach. My humble thanks. I had almost for-
To entreat your grace but in a small request,
And yet of moment, too for it concerns
Your lord, myself, and other noble friends
Are partners in the business.

Imo. Pray, what is't?

Iach. Some dozen Romans of us, and your lord,— [sums

The best feather of our wing,—have mingled
To buy a present for the emperor;
Which I, the factor for the rest, have done
In France: 'tis plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form; their values great;
And I am something curious, being strange
To have them in safe stowage: may it please you
To take them in protection?

Imo. Willingly;

And pawn mine honour for their safety: since
My lord hath interest in them, I will keep them
In my bed-chamber.

Iach. They are in a trunk,
Attended by my men: I will make bold
To send them to you only for this night;
I must aboard to-morrow.

Imo. O, no, no. [word

Iach. Yes, I beseech; or I shall short my
By length'ning my return. From Gallia
I cross'd the seas on purpose and on promise
To see your grace.

Imo. I thank you for your pains:
But not away to-morrow!

Iach. O, I must, madam:
Therefore I shall beseech you, if you please
To greet your lord with writing, do't to-night:
I have outstood my time; which is material
To the tender of our present.

Imo. I will write.

Send your trunk to me; it shall safe be kept.
And truly yielded you. You're very welcome.
[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—BRITAIN. Court before CYM-
BELINE'S Palace.

Enter CLOTEN and two Lords.

Clo. Was there ever man had such luck! when I kissed the jack, upon an up-cast to be hit away! I had a hundred pound on't: and then a whoreson jackanapes must take me up for swearing; as if I borrowed mine oaths of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

1 Lord. What got he by that? You have broke his pate with your bowl.

2 Lord. [Aside.] If his wit had been like him that broke it, it would have run all out.

Clo. When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths,
ha?

2 Lord. No, my lord; [aside] nor crop the ears of them.

Clo. Whoreson dog!—I give him satisfaction? Would he had been one of my rank!

2 Lord. [Aside.] To have smelt like a fool.

Clo. I am not vexed more at anything in the earth,—a pox on't! I had rather not be so noble as I am; they dare not fight with me, because of the queen my mother: every jack-slave hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match.

2 Lord. [Aside.] You are cock and capon too; and you crow, cock, with your comb on.

Clo. Sayest thou?

1 Lord. It is not fit your lordship should undertake every companion that you give offence to.

Clo. No, I know that: but it is fit I should commut offence to my inferiors.

2 Lord. Ay, it is fit for your lordship only.

Clo. Why, so I say.

1 Lord. Did you hear of a stranger that's come to court to-night?

Clo. A stranger, and I not know on't!

2 Lord. [Aside.] He's a strange fellow himself, and knows it not.

1 Lord. There's an Italian come; and 'tis thought, one of Leonatus' friends.

Clo. Leonatus! a banished rascal; and he's another, whatsoever he be. Who told you of this stranger?

1 Lord. One of your lordship's pages.

Clo. Is it fit I went to look upon him? Is there no derogation in't.

1 Lord. You cannot derogate, my lord.

Clo. Not easily, I think.

2 Lord. [Aside.] You are a fool granted; therefore your issues, being foolish, do not derogate.

Clo. Come, I'll go see this Italian: what I have lost to-day at bowls I'll win to-night of him. Come, go.

2 Lord. I'll attend your lordship.

[Exit CLOTEN and first Lord.]

That such a crafty devil as is his mother
Should yield the world this ass! a woman that Bears all down with her brain; and this her son Cannot take two from twenty, for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Alas, poor princess,
Thou divine Imogen, what thou endur'st,—
Betwixt a father by thy stepdame govern'd:
A mother hourly coining plots; a wooer
More hateful than the foul expulsion is
Of thy dear husband, than that horrid act
Of the divorce he'd make! The heavens hold firm

The walls of thy dear honour; keep unshak'd
That temple, thy fair mind; that thou mayst
stand

To enjoy thy banish'd lord and this great land!
[Exit.]

SCENE II.—BRITAIN. IMOGEN'S Bed-chamber; in one part of it a Trunk.

IMOGEN in bed reading; a Lady attending.

Imo. Who's there? my woman Helen?

Lady. Please you, madam.

Imo. What hour is it?

Lady. Almost midnight, madam.

Imo. I have read three hours, then: mine eyes are weak:

Fold down the leaf where I have left to bed:
Take not away the taper, leave it burning;
And if thou canst awake by four o' the clock, pr'ythee, call me. Sleep hath seiz'd me wholly.

[Exit Lady.]

To your protection I commend me, gods!
From fairies and the tempters of the night
Guard me, beseech ye!

[Sleeps. IACHIMO comes from the trunk.]

Iach. The crickets sing, and man's o'er-labour'd sense

Repairs itself by rest. Our Tarquin thus
Did softly press the rushes ere he waken'd
The chastity he wounded.—Cytherea,
How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! fresh lily!
And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!
But kiss; one kiss!—Rubies unparagon'd,
How dearly they do't!—'Tis her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus: the flame o' the taper

Bows toward her, and would underpeep her lids,

To see the enclosed lights, now canopied
Under these windows, white and azure, lac'd
With blue of heaven's own tinct.—But my design

To note the chamber:—I will write all down:—
Such and such pictures;—there the window:— such

The adornment of her bed;—the arras, figures,
Why, such and such;—and the contents o' the story,—

Ah, but some natural notes about her body
Above ten thousand meaner movables
Would testify, to enrich mine inventory.

O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her!
And be her sense but as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying!—Come off, come off;

[Taking off her bracelet.]

As slippery as the Gordian knot was hard!—
'Tis mine; and thus will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,

To the madding of her lord. On her left breast
A mole cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
P' the bottom of a cowslip. Here's a voucher
Stronger than ever law could make: this secret
Will force him think I have pick'd the lock and ta'en [what end?

The treasure of her honour. No more. To
Why should I write this down, that's riveted, Screw'd to my memory?—She hath been reading late

The tale of Tereus; here the leaf's turn'd down
Where Philomel gave up.—I have enough:
To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night, that dawning

May bare the raven's eye! I lodge in fear;
Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here.

[Clock strikes.]

One, two, three,—Time, time!

[Goes into the trunk. Scene closes.]

SCENE III.—BRITAIN. An Ante-chamber adjoining IMOGEN'S Apartment.

Enter CLOTEN and Lords.

1 Lord. Your lordship is the most patient man in loss, the most coldest that ever turned up ace.

Clo. It would make any man cold to lose.

1 Lord. But not every man patient after the noble temper of your lordship. You are most hot and furious when you win.

Clo. Winning will put any man into courage. If I could get this foolish Imogen, I should have gold enough. It's almost morning, is't not?

1 Lord. Day, my lord.

Clo. I would this music would come: I am advised to give her music o' mornings; they say it will penetrate.

Enter Musicians.

Come on; tune: if you can penetrate her with your fingering, so; we'll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remain; but I'll never give o'er. First, a very excellent good-conceited thing; after a wonderful sweet air, with admirable rich words to it,—and then let her consider.

SONG.

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,
And Phoebus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at those springs
On chalced' flowers that lies;
And winking Mary-buds begin
To ope their golden eyes;
With everything that pretty is:
My lady sweet, arise;
Arise, arise!

So, get you gone. If this penetrate, I will consider your music the better: if it do not, it is a vice in her ears; which horse-hairs and calves' guts, nor the voice of unpaired eunuch to boot, can never mend. [Exeunt Musicians.]

2 Lord. Here comes the king.

Clo. I am glad I was up so late; for that's the reason I was up so early: he cannot choose but take this service I have done fatherly.—

Enter CYMBELINE and QUEEN.

Good-morrow to your majesty and to my gracious mother. [daughter?]

Cym. Attend you here the door of our stern Will she not forth?

Clo. I have assailed her with music, but she vouchsafes no notice.

Cym. The exile of her minion is too new; She hath not yet forgot him: some more time Must wear the print of his remembrance out, And then she's yours.

Queen. You are most bound to the king, Who lets go by no vantages that may Prefer you to his daughter. Frame yourself To orderly solicit, and be friended With aptness of the season; make denials Increase your services; so seem as if You were inspir'd to do those duties which You tender to her; that you in all obey her, Save when command to your dismissal tends, And therein you are senseless.

Clo. Senseless! not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. So like you, sir, ambassadors from Rome;

The one is Caius Lucius.

Cym. A worthy fellow.

Albeit he comes on angry purpose now; But that's no fault of his: we must receive him According to the honour of his sender; [us, And towards himself, his goodness forespent on

We must extend our notice.—Our dear son, When you have given good-morning to your mistress,

Attend the queen and us; we shall have need To employ you towards this Roman.—Come, our queen.

[Exeunt CYM., QUEEN., Lords, and Mess.]

Clo. If she be up, I'll speak with her; if not, Let her lie still and dream.—By your leave, ho!— [Knocks.]

I know her women are about her: what If I do line one of their hands? 'Tis gold Which buys admittance; oft it doth; yea, and makes

Diana's rangers false themselves, yield up Their deer to the stand o' the stealer; and 'tis gold [thief; Which makes the true man kill'd and saves the Nay, sometimes hangs both thief and true man: what

Can it not do and undo? I will make One of her women lawyer to me; for I yet not understand the case myself. By your leave. [Knocks.]

Enter a Lady.

Lady. Who's there that knocks?

Clo. A gentleman.

Lady. No more?

Clo. Yes, and a gentlewoman's son.

Lady. That's more

Than some, whose tailors are as dear as yours, Can justly boast of. What's your lordship's pleasure?

Clo. Your lady's person: is she ready?

Lady. Ay,

To keep her chamber.

Clo. There is gold for you; sell me your good report. [of you]

Lady. How! my good name? or to report What I shall think is good?—The princess!

Enter IMOGEN.

Clo. Good-morrow, fairest: sister, your sweet hand. [much pains]

Imo. Good-morrow, sir. You lay out too For purchasing but trouble: the thanks I give Is telling you that I am poor of thanks, And scarce can spare them.

Clo. Still, I swear I love you.

Imo. If you but said so, 'twere as deep with me:

If you swear still, your recompense is still that I regard it not.

Clo. This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say I yield, being silent, [faith,

I would not speak. I pray you, spare me: I shall unfold equal discourtesy [knowing]

To your best kindness: one of your great Should learn, being taught, forbearance.

Clo. To leave you in your madness 'twere my sin:

I will not.

Imo. Fools are not mad folks.

Clo. Do you call me fool?

Imo. As I am mad, I do:

If you'll be patient I'll no more be mad;

That cures us both. I am much sorry, sir,
 You put me to forget a lady's manners
 By being so verbal: and learn now, for all,
 That I, which know my heart, do here pronounce,
 By the very truth of it, I care not for you;
 And am so near the lack of charity,—
 To accuse myself,—I hate you; which I had rather
 You felt than make't my boast.

Clo. You sin against Obedience, which you owe your father. For The contract you pretend with that base wretch,—

One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,
 With scraps o' the court,—it is no contract,
 none:

And though it be allow'd in meaner parties,— Yet who than he more mean?—to knit their souls,—

On whom there is no more dependency
 But brats and beggary,—in self-figur'd knot;
 Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by
 The consequence o' the crown; and must not soil

The precious note of it with a base slave,
 A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth,
 A pantler,—not so eminent.

Imo. Profane fellow!
 Wert thou the son of Jupiter, and no more
 But what thou art besides, thou wert too base
 To be his groom: thou wert dignified enough,
 Even to the point of envy, if 'twere made
 Comparative for your virtues, to be styl'd
 The under-hangman of his kingdom; and hated
 For being preferr'd so well.

Clo. The south fog rot him!
Imo. He never can meet more mischance than come

To be but nam'd of thee. His meanest garment,
 That ever hath but clipp'd his body, is dearer
 In my respect than all the hairs above thee,
 Were they all made such men.

Enter PISANIO.

How now, Pisanio!

Clo. His garment! Now, the devil,—

Imo. To Dorothy my woman hie thee presently,—

Clo. His garment!

Imo. I am sprited with a fool;
 Frighted, and anger'd worse.—Go, bid my woman

Search for a jewel that too casually [me
 Hath left mine arm: it was thy master's; shrew
 If I would lose it for a revenue
 Of any king's in Europe. I do think
 I saw't this morning: confident I am
 Last night 'twas on mine arm; I kiss'd it:
 I hope it be not gone to tell my lord
 That I kiss aught but he.

Pis. 'Twill not be lost.

Imo. I hope so: go and search.

[Exit PISANIO.]

Clo. You have abus'd me.—
 His meanest garment?

Imo. Ay, I said so, sir:
 If you will make 't an action, call witness to 't.

Clo. I will inform your father.

Imo. Your mother too:
 She's my good lady; and will conceive, I hope,
 But the worse of me. So I leave you, sir,
 To the worst of discontent. [Exit.
Clo. I'll be reveng'd:—
 His meanest garment!—Well. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—ROME. An Apartment in PHILARIO'S House.

Enter POSTHUMUS and PHILARIO.

Post. Fear it not, sir: I would I were so sure
 To win the king as I am bold her honour
 Will remain hers.

Phi. What means do you make to him?

Post. Not any; but abide the change of time;
 Quake in the present winter's state, and wish
 That warmer days would come: in these sear'd hopes

I barely gratify your love; they failing,
 I must die much your debtor.

Phi. Your very goodness and your company
 O'erpays all I can do. By this your king
 Hath heard of great Augustus: Caius Lucius
 Will do's commission thoroughly: and I think
 He'll grant the tribute, send the arrearsages,
 Or look upon our Romans, whose remembrance
 Is yet fresh in their grief.

Post. I do believe,— Statist though I am none, nor like to be,—
 That this will prove a war; and you shall hear
 The legions now in Gallia sooner landed
 In our not-fearing Britain than have tidings
 Of any penny tribute paid. Our countrymen
 Are men more ordered than when Julius Cæsar Smil'd at their lack of skill, but found their courage

Worthy his frowning at: their discipline,— Now mingled with their courage,—will make known

To their approvers they are people such
 That mend upon the world.

Phi.

See! Iachimo!

Enter IACHIMO.

Post. The swiftest harts have posted you by
 land;
 And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails,
 To make your vessel nimble.

Phi. Welcome, sir.
Post I hope the briefness of your answer
 made

The speediness of your return.
Iach. Your lady
 Is one of the fairest that I have look'd upon.

Post. And therewithal the best; or let her beauty
 Look through a casement to allure false hearts,
 And be false with them.

Iach. Here are letters for you.

Post. Their tenor good, I trust.

Iach. 'Tis very like.
Phi. Was Caius Lucius in the Britain court
 When you were there?

Iach. He was expected then,
 But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet.—
 Sparkles this stone as it was wont? or is't not Too dull for your good wearing?

Iach. If I had lost it I should have lost the worth of it in gold. I'll make a journey twice as far, to enjoy A second night of such sweet shortness which Was mine in Britain; for the ring is won.

Post. The stone's too hard to come by.

Iach. Not a whit, Your lady being so easy.

Post. Make not, sir, Your loss your sport: I hope you know that we Must not continue friends.

Iach. Good sir, we must, If you keep covenant. Had I not brought The knowledge of your mistress home, I grant We were to question further: but I now Profess myself the winner of her honour, Together with your ring; and not the wronger Of her or you, having proceeded but By both your wills.

Post. If you can make't apparent That you have tasted her in bed, my hand And ring is yours: if not, the foul opinion You had of her pure honour gains or loses Your sword or mine, or masterless leaves both To who shall find them.

Iach. Sir, my circumstances, Being so near the truth as I will make them, Must first induce you to believe: whose strength I will confirm with oath; which I doubt not You'll give me leave to spare when you shall find

You need it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her bedchamber,— Where, I confess, I slept not; but profess Had that was well worth watching,—it was hang'd

With tapestry of silk and silver; the story Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman, And Cydnus swell'd above the banks, or for The press of boats or pride: a piece of work So bravely done, so rich, that it did strive In workmanship and value; which I wonder'd Could be so rarely and exactly wrought, Since the true life on't was,—

Post. This is true; And this you might have heard of here, by me Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars Must justify my knowledge.

Post. So they must, Or do your honour injury.

Iach. The chimney Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece Chaste Dian bathing: never saw I figures So likely to report themselves: the cutter Was as another nature, dumb; outwent her, Motion and breath left out.

Post. This is a thing Which you might from relation likewise reap; Being, as it is, much spoke of.

Iach. The roof o' the chamber With golden cherubins is fretted: her and-irons,—

I had forgot them,—were two winking Cupids Of silver, each on one foot standing, nicely Depending on their brands.

Post. This is her honour!— Let it be granted you have seen all this,—and praise

Be given to your remembrance,—the description

Of what is in her chamber nothing saves The wagger you have laid.

Iach. Then, if you can.

[Pulling out the bracelet.]

Be pale; I beg but leave to air this jewel; see!— And now 'tis up again: it must be married To that your diamond; I'll keep them.

Post. Jove!— Once more let me behold it: is it that Which I left with her?

Iach. Sir,—I thank her,—that: She stripp'd it from her arm; I see her yet; Her pretty action did outsell her gift, And yet enrich'd it too: she gave it me, and said

She priz'd it once.

Post. Maybe she pluck'd it off To send it me.

Iach. She writes so to you? doth she? Post. O, no, no, no! 'tis true. Here, take this too; [Gives the ring.]

It is a basilisk unto mine eye, Kills me to look on't.—Let there be no honour Where there is beauty; truth where semblance; love

Where there's another man: the vows of women Of no more bondage be to where they are made Than they are to their virtues; which is nothing.—

O, above measure false!

Phi. Have patience, sir, And take your ring again; 'tis not yet won: It may be probable she lost it; or,

Who knows if one o' her women, being corrupted, Hath stolen it from her?

Post. Very true; And so I hope he came by't.—Back my ring: Render to me some corporal sign about her, More evident than this; for this was stolen.

Iach. By Jupiter, I had it from her arm.

Post. Hark you, he swears; by Jupiter he swears. [sure]

'Tis true,—nay, keep the ring,—'tis true: I am She would not lose it: her attendants are All sworn and honourable—they induc'd to steal it!

And by a stranger!—No, he hath enjoyed her: The cognizance of her incontinency Is this,—she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly.—

There, take thy hire; and all the fiends of hell Divide themselves between you!

Phi. Sir, be patient: This is not strong enough to be believ'd Of one persuaded well of,— Post. Never talk on't. She hath been colted by him.

Iach. If you seek For further satisfying, under her breast,— Worthy the pressing,—lies a mole, right proud Of that most delicate lodging: by my life, I kiss'd it; and it gave me present hunger To feed again, though full. You do remember This stain upon her?

Post. Ay, and it doth confirm Another stain, as big as hell can hold, Were there no more but it.

Iach. Will you hear more?

Post. Spare your arithmetic: never count the turns;
Once, and a million!

Iach. I'll be sworn,—

Post. No swearing.

If you will swear you have not don't, you lie;
And I will kill thee if thou dost deny
Thou'st made me cuckold.

Iach. I'll deny nothing.

Post. O, that I had her here to tear her limb-meal!

I will go there and do't; i' the court; before
Her father: I'll do something,— [Exit.]

Phi. Quite besides
The government of patience!—You have won:
Let's follow him, and pervert the present wrath
He hath against himself.

Iach. With all my heart.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—ROME. Another Room in PHILARIO'S House.

Enter POSTHUMUS.

Post. Is there no way for men to be, but women

Must be half-workers? We are all bastards;
And that most venerable man which I Did call my father was I know not where
When I was stamp'd; some coiner with his tools
Made me a counterfeit: yet my mother seem'd
The Dian of that time: so doth my wife
The nonpareil of this.—O, vengeance, vengeance!—

Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance: did it with
A pudency so rosy, the sweet view on't?
Might well have warm'd old Saturn; that I thought her

As chaste as unsunn'd snow.—O, all the devils!—

This yellow Iachimo in an hour,—was't not?
Or less,—at first?—Perchance he spoke not,
but,

Like a full-acorn'd boar, a German one,
Cried O! and mounted; found no opposition
But what he look'd for should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
The woman's part in me! For there's no motion

That tends to vice in man but I affirm
It is the woman's part: be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, hers; deceiving,
hers; [hers;

Lust and rank thoughts, hers, hers; revenges,
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
Nice longung, slanders, mutability,
All faults that have a name, nay, that hell
knows,

Why, hers, in part or all; but rather all;
For ev'n to vice

They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that. I'll write against them,
Detest them, curse them.—Yet 'tis greater skill
In a true hate to pray they have their will:
The very devils cannot plague them better.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—BRITAIN. A Room of State in CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter, at one side, CYMBELINE, QUEEN,
CLOTEN, and Lords; at the other CAIUS
LUCIUS and Attendants.

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Cæsar with us? [brance yet

Luc. When Julius Cæsar,—whose remember lives in men's eyes, and will to ears and tongues

Be theme and hearing ever,—was in this Britain
And conquer'd it, Cassibelan, thine uncle,—
Famous in Cæsar's praises no whit less
Than in his feats deserving it,—for him
And his succession granted Rome a tribute Yearly three thousand pounds; which by thee lately

Is left untender'd.

Queen. And, to kill the marvel,
Shall be so ever.

Clo. There be many Cæsars
Ere such another Julius. Britain is A world by itself; and we will nothing pay
For wearing our own noses.

Queen. That opportunity,
Which then they had to take from's, to resume
We have again.—Remember, sir, my liege,
The kings your ancestors; together with
The natural bravery of your isle, which stands
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unscaleable and roaring waters;
With sands that will not bear your enemies'
boats, [conquest

But suck them up to the top-mast. A kind of Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame: with shame,—
The first that ever touch'd him,—he was carried From off our coast, twice beaten; and his shipping,—

Poor ignorant baubles!—on our terrible seas,
Like egg-shells mov'd upon their surges, crack'd

As easily 'gainst our rocks: for joy whereof
The fam'd Cassibelan, who was once at point,—
O, giglot fortune!—to master Cæsar's sword,
Made Lud's town with rejoicing fires bright
And Britons strut with courage.

Clo. Come, there's no more tribute to be paid: our kingdom is stronger than it was at that time; and, as I said, there is no more such Cæsars: other of them may have crooked noses; but to owe such straight arms, none.

Cym. Son, let your mother end.

Clo. We have yet many among us can gripe as hard as Cassibelan: I do not say I am one;
but I have a hand.—Why tribute? why should we pay tribute? If Cæsar can hide the sun from us with a blanket, or put the moon in his pocket, we will pay him tribute for light; else, sir, no more tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You must know,
Till the injurious Romans did extort
This tribute from us, we were free: Cæsar's ambition,—

Which swell'd so much that it did almost stretch
The sides o' the world,—against all colour, here
Did put the yoke upon's; which to shake off

Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon
Ourselves to be.

Clo. We do.

Cym. Say then to Cæsar,
Our ancestor was that Mulmutus which Ordain'd our laws,—whose use the sword of Cæsar [franchise]

Hath too much mangled; whose repair and
Shall, by the power we hold, be our good deed, Though Rome be therefore angry:—Mulmutus made our laws,

Who was the first of Britain which did put
His brows within a golden crown, and call'd
Himself a king.

Luc. I am sorry, Cymbeline,
That I am to pronounce Augustus Cæsar,— Cæsar, that hath more kings his servants than Thyself domestic officers,—thine enemy:
Receive it from me, then:—War and confusion
In Cæsar's name pronounce I 'gainst thee: look
For fury not to be resisted.—Thus defied,
I thank thee for myself.

Cym. Thou art welcome, Caius.
Thy Cæsar knighted me; my youth I spent Much under him; of him I gather'd honour;
Which he to seek of me again, perforce,
Behoves me keep at utterance. I am perfect
That the Pannonians and Dalmatians for Their liberties are now in arms,—a precedent
Which not to read would show the Britons cold:
So Cæsar shall not find them.

Luc.

Clo. His majesty bids you welcome. Make pastime with us a day or two, or longer: if you seek us afterwards in other terms, you shall find us in our salt-water girdle: if you beat us out of it, it is yours; if you fall in the adventure, our crowns shall fare the better for you; and there's an end.

Luc. So, sir.

[mine:

Cym. I know your master's pleasure, and he
All the remain is, welcome. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—BRITAIN. Another Room in the Palace.

Enter PISANIO with a letter.

Pis. How! of adultery? Wherefore write
you not
What monster's her accuser?—Leonatus!
O master! what a strange infection
Is fallen into thy ear! What false Italian,—
As poisonous tongu'd as handed,—hath prevail'd

On thy too ready hearing?—Disloyal! No:
She's punish'd for her truth; and undergoes,
More goddess-like than wife-like, such assaults
As would t'ke in some virtue.—O my master!
Thy mind to her is now as low as were
Thy fortunes.—How! that I should murder her?
Upon the love, and truth, and vows which I Have made to thy command?—I, her?—her
blood?

If it be so to do good service, never Let me be counted serviceable. How look I,
That I should seem to lack humanity
So much as this fact comes to? [Reading.]

Do't: the letter

That I have sent her, by her own command
Shall give thee opportunity:—O damn'd paper!

Black as the ink that's on thee! Senseless bauble,
Art thou a fedary for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without? Lo, here she comes.
I am ignorant in what I am commanded.

Enter IMOGENE.

Imo. How now, Pisanio!

Pis. Madam, here is a letter from my lord.

Imo. Who? thy lord? that is my lord,— Leonatus?

O, learn'd indeed were that astronomer
That knew the stars as I his characters;
He'd lay the future open.—You good gods,
Let what is here contain'd relish of love,
Of my lord's health, of his content,—yet not
That we two are asunder,—let that grieve him;
Some griefs are med'cinable; that is one of
them,

For it doth physic love;—of his content [be
All but in that!—Good wax, thy leave:—bless'd
You beest that make these locks of counsel!

Lovers

And men in dangerous bonds pray not alike:
Though forfeiters you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables.—Good news, gods! [Reads.]

Justice, and your father's wrath, should he take me in his dominion, could not be so cruel to me, as you, O the dearest of creatures, would even renew me with your eyes. Take notice that I am in Cambria, at Milford-Haven:
what your own love will, out of this, advise you, follow. So he wishes you all happiness that remains loyal to his vow, and your, increasing in love, LEONATUS POSTHUMUS.

O for a horse with wings!—Hear'st thou,
Pisanio?

He is at Milford-Haven: read, and tell me
How far 'tis thither. If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day?—then, true Pisanio,— Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord; who long'st—

O, let me 'bate—but not like me; yet long'st,
But in a fainter kind: O, not like me;
For mine's beyond beyond,—say, and speak thick,—

Love's councillor should fill the bores of hearing
To the smothering of the sense,—how far it is To this same blessed Milford: and, by the
way,

Tell me how Wales was made so happy as
To inherit such a haven: but, first of all,
How we may steal from hence; and for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going [hence:]

And our return, to excuse. But first, how get
Why should excuse be born or e'er begot?
We'll talk of that hereafter. Pr'ythee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour?

Pis.

One core 'twixt sun and sun,

Madam, 's enough for you, and too much too.
Imo. Why, one that rode to's execution, man,
Could never go so slow: I have heard of riding
wagers,

Where horses have been nimbler than the sands
That run i' the clock's behalf;—but this is foolery:

Go bid my woman feign a sickness; say
She'll home to her father: and provide me presently

A riding suit no costlier than would fit
A franklin's housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.

Imo. I see before me, man, nor here, nor
here,

Nor what ensues; but have a fog in them
That I cannot look through. Away, I pry thee;
Do as I bid thee: there's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—WALES. A mountainous Country with a Cave.

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such [gate]
Whose roof's as low as ours! Stoop, boys: this Instructs you how to adore the heavens, and bows you

To a morning's holy office: the gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun.—Hail, thou fair
heaven!

We house i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Gui. Hail, heaven!

Arv. Hail, heaven!

Bel. Now for our mountain sport: up to yond hill,

Your legs are young; I'll tread these flats.

Consider,

When you above perceive me like a crow,
That it is place which lessens and sets off:
And you may then revolve what tales I have told you

Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:

This service is not service so being done,

But being so allow'd: to apprehend thus
Draws us a profit from all things we see;

And often, to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold

Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O, this life

Is nobler than attending for a check,

Richer than doing nothing for a bauble,

Prouder than rustling in unpaid-for silk:

Such gain the cap of him that makes 'em fine,

Yet keeps his book uncross'd: no life to ours.

Gui. Out of your proof you speak: we, poor unfleg'd, [know not]

Have never wing'd from view o' the nest; nor

What air's from home. Haply this life is best,

If quiet life be best; sweeter to you

That have a sharper known; well corresponding

With your stiff age: but unto us it is

A cell of ignorance; travelling abed;

A prison for a debtor, that not dares

To stride a limit.

Arv. What should we speak of

When we are old as you? when we shall hear

The rain and wind beat dark December, how,

In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse

The freezing hours away? We have seen
nothing:

We are beastly; subtle as the fox for prey;

Like warlike as the wolf for what we eat:

Our valour is to chase what flies; our cage
We make a quire, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak!

Did you but know the city's usuries,
And felt them knowingly: the art o' the court,
As hard to leave as keep; whose top to climb
Is certain falling, or so slippery that
The fear's as bad as falling: the toil o' the war,
A pain that only seems to seek out danger
I' the name of fame and honour; which dies i'
the search,

And hath as oft a slanderous epitaph
As record of fair act; nay, many times
Doth ill deserve by doing well; what's worse,
Must court'sy at the censure.—O, boys, this story

The world may read in me: my body's mark'd
With Roman swords; and my report was once
First with the best of note: Cymbeline lov'd me;
And when a soldier was the theme, my name

Was not far off: then was I as a tree [night]
Whose boughs did bend with fruit: but in one
A storm or robbery, call it what you will,

Shook, down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves,

And left me bare to weather.

Gui. Uncertain favour?

Bel. My fault being nothing,—as I have told you oft,— [vail'd]

But that two villains, whose false oaths pre-
Before my perfect honour, swore to Cymbeline

I was confederate with the Romans: so
Follow'd my banishment; and this twenty years

This rock and these demesnes have been my
world:

Where I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid

More pious debts to heaven than in all

The fore-end of my time.—But up to the mountains!

This is not hunters' language.—He that strikes
The venison first shall be the lord o' the feast;

To him the other two shall minister;

And we will fear no poison, which attends

In place of greater state. I'll meet you in the valleys. [Exeunt GUI. and ARV.]

How hard it is to hide the sparks of nature!

These boys know little they are sons to the
king;

Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive.

They think they are mine: and though train'd up thus meanly [hit]

I' the cave wherein they bow, their thoughts do
The roofs of palaces; and nature prompts them,

In simple and low things, to prize it much

Beyond the trick of others. This Polydore,—

The heir of Cymbeline and Britain, who

The king his father call'd Guiderius,—Jove!

When on my three-foot stool I sit, and tell

The warlike feats I have done, his spirits fly out

Into my story: say, Thus mine enemy fell,

And thus I set my foot on's neck; even then

The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats, Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture [Cadwal,—]

That acts my words. The younger brother,

Once Arviragus,—in as like a figure

Strikes life into my speech, and shows much more [rous'd!—]

His own conceiving. Hark, the game's is

O Cymbeline! heaven and my conscience knows
 Thou didst unjustly banish me: whereon,
 At three and two years old, I stole these babes;
 Thinking to bar thee of succession, as
 Thou rett'st me of my lands. Euriphile, Thou wast their nurse; they took thee for their
 mother,
 And every day do honour to her grave:
 Myself, Belarius, that am Morgan call'd,
 They take for natural father. The game is up.
 [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Wales, near Milford-Haven.

Enter PISANIO and IMOGEN.

Imo. Thou told'st me, when we came from horse, the place
 Was near at hand.—Ne'er long'd my mother so
 To see me first as I have now.—Pisanio! Man!
 Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind
 That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breaks that sigh
 From the inward of thee? One but painted thus
 Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd
 Beyond self-explication: put thyself
 Into a 'haviour of less fear, ere wildness Vanquish my steadier senses. What's the matter?
 Why tender'st thou that paper to me, with
 A look untender? It'st be summer news,
 Smile to't before; if winterly, thou need'st
 But keep that countenance still.—My husband's hand!
 That drug-damn'd Italy hath out-craft'd him,
 And he's at some hard point.—Speak, man;
 thy tongue
 May take off some extremity, which to read
 Would be even mortal to me.

Pis. Please you, read;
 And you shall find me, wretched man, a thing
 The most disdain'd of fortune.

Imo. [Reads.] Thy mistress, Pisanio, hath played the strumpet in my bed; the testimonies whereof lie bleeding in me. I speak not out of weak surmises; but from proof as strong as my grief and as certain as I expect my revenge.
That apart thou, Pisanio, must act for me, if thy faith be not tainted with the breach of hers. Let thine own hands take away her life; I shall give thee opportunity at Milford-Haven: she hath my letter for the purpose: where, if thou fear to strike, and to make me certain it is done, thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me disloyal.

Pis. What, shall I need to draw my sword?
 the paper

Hath cut her throat already.—No, 'tis slander; Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose
 tongue

Outvenoms all the worms of Nile; whose breath
 Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
 All corners of the world: kings, queens, and states,

Maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave
 This viperous slander enters.—What cheer, madam? [false?]

Imo. False to his bed? What is it to be
 To lie in watch there, and to think on him?
 To weep 'twixt clock and clock? if sleep charge
 nature,

To break it with a fearful dream of him,
 And cry myself awake? that's false to his bed,
 Is it?

Pis. Alas, good lady! [Iachimo,

Imo. I false! Thy conscience witness:—
 Thou didst accuse him of incontinency;
 Thou then look'dst like a villain; now, methinks,

Thy favour's good enough.—Some jay of Italy,
 Whose mother was her painting, hath betray'd
 him:

Poor I am stale, a garment out of fashion;
 And for I am richer than to hang by the walls
 I must be ripp'd: to pieces with me!—O,
 Men's vows are women's traitors! All good seeming,

By thy revolt, O husband, shall be thought
 Put on for villainy,—not born where't grows,
 But worn a bait for ladies.

Pis. Good madam, hear me.

Imo. True honest men being heard, like false

Æneas, [weeping

Were, in his time, though false: and Simon's
 Did scandal many a holy tear; took pity
 From most true wretchedness: so thou, Posthumus,

Wilt lay the heaven on all proper men;
 Goodly and gallant shall be false and perjur'd
 From thy great fail.—Come, fellow, be thou honest: [him,

Do thou thy master's bidding: when thou sees't
 A little witness my obedience: look!

I draw the sword myself: take it, and hit
 The innocent mansion of my love, my heart:
 Fear not; 'tis empty of all things but grief:
 Thy master is not there; who was indeed
 The riches of it: do his bidding; strike.
 Thou mayst be valiant in a better cause;
 But now thou seem'st a coward.

Pis. Hence, vile instrument!
 Thou shalt not damn my hand.

Imo. Why, I must die;

And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
 Noservant of thy master's: against self-slaughter
 There is a prohibition so divine [heart:
 That cravens my weak hand. Come, here's my Something's afore 't.—Soft, soft! we'll no defence;

Obedient as the scabbard.—What is here?
 The scriptures of the loyal Leonatus
 All turn'd to heresy? Away, away,
 Corrupters of my faith! you shall no more
 Bestomachers to my heart. Thus may poor fools Believe false teachers: though those that are betray'd

Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor
 Stands in worse case of woe.

And thou, Posthumus, that didst set up
 My disobedience 'gainst the king my father,
 And make me put into contempt the suits
 Of princely fellows, shalt hereafter find
 It is no act of common passage, but
 A strain of rareness: and I grieve myself

To think, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her
 That now thou tir'st on, how thy memory
 Will then be pang'd by me.—Pr'ythee, despatch:
 The lamb entreats the butcher: where's thy knife?

Thou art too slow to do thy master's bidding,
 When I desire it too.

Pis. O gracious lady,
Since I receiv'd command to do this business
I have not slept one wink.

Imo. Do't, and to bed then.

Pis. I'll wake mine eyeballs blind first.

Imo. Wherefore then
Didst undertake it? Why hast thou abus'd
So many miles with a pretence? thus place?
Mine action and thine own? our horses' labour?
The time inviting thee? the perturb'd court,
For my being absent; whereunto I never Purpose return? Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
The elected deer before thee?

Pis. But to win time
To lose so bad employment; in the which I have consider'd of a course. Good lady,
Hear me with patience.

Imo. Talk thy tongue weary: speak:
I have heard I am a strumpet: and mine ear,
Therein false struck, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent to bottom that. But speak.

Pis. Then, madam,
I thought you would not back again.

Imo. Most like,—
Bringing me here to kill me.

Pis. Not so neither:
But if I were as wise as honest, then
My purpose would prove well. It cannot be
But that my master is abus'd:
Some villain, ay, and singular in his art,
Hath done you both this cursed injury.

Imo. Some Roman courtesan.

Pis. No, on my life:
I'll give but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody sign of it; for 'tis commanded
I should do so: you shall be miss'd at court,
And that will well confirm it.

Imo. Why, good fellow,
What shall I do the while? where bide? how
live?

Or in my life what comfort when I am
Dead to my husband?

Pis. If you'll back to the court,—

Imo. No court, no father; nor no more ado
With that harsh, noble, simple nothing,—
That Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege.

Pis. If not at court,
Then not in Britain must you bide.

Imo. Where then?
Hath Britain all the sun that shines? Day,
night.

Are they not but in Britain? I' the world's volume

Our Britain seems as of it, but not in't;
In a great pool a swan's nest: pry'thee, think
There's livers out of Britain.

Pis. I am most glad
You think of other place. The ambassador,
Lucius the Roman, comes to Milford-Haven
To-morrow: now, if you could wear a mind
Dark as your fortune is, and but disguise
That which to appear itself must not yet be,
But by self-danger, you should tread a course Privy and full of view; yea, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus,—so nigh at least
That though his actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your ear,
As truly as he moves.

Imo. O, for such means,
Though peril to my modesty, not death on't,
I would adventure.

Pis. Well then, here's the point:
You must forget to be a woman; change
Command into obedience; fear and niceness,—
The handmaids of all women, or, more truly,
Woman its pretty self,—into a waggish courage;
Ready in gibes, quick-answer'd, saucy, and
As quarrelous as the weasel; nay, you must Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,
Exposing it,—but, O, the harder heart!
Alack, no remedy!—to the greedy touch
Of common-kissing Titan; and forget
Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Juno angry.

Imo. Nay, be brief;
I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make yourself but like one.
Fore-thinking this, I have already fit,—
'Tis in my cloak-bag,—doublet, hat, hose, all That answer to them: would you, in their serving,

And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season, 'fore noble Lucius
Present yourself, desire his service, tell him Wherein you are happy,—which you'll make him know
If that his head have ear in music,—doubtless
With joy he will embrace you; for he's honourable

And, doubling that, most holy. Your means abroad

You have me, rich; and I will never fail
Beginning nor supplement.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The gods will diet me with. Pry'thee, away:
There's more to be consider'd; but we'll even
All that good time will give us: this attempt
I am soldier to, and will abide it with
A prince's courage. Away, I pry'thee.

Pis. Well, madam, we must take a short
farewell,

Lest, being miss'd, I be suspected of [tress,
Your carriage from the court. My noble mis-
Here is a box; I had it from the queen;
What's in't is precious; if you are sick at sea
Or stomach-qualm'd at land, a dram of this
Will drive away distemper.—To some shade,
And fit you to your manhood:—may the gods
Direct you to the best!

Imo. Amen: I thank thee.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—BRITAIN. A Room in CYM-
BELINE'S Palace.

Enter CYMBELINE, QUEEN, CLOTEN, LUCIUS, and Lords.

Cym. Thus far; and so farewell.

Luc. Thanks, royal sir.
My emperor hath wrote; I must from hence;
And am right sorry that I must report ye
My master's enemy.

Cym. Our subjects, sir,
Will not endure his yoke; and for ourself
To show less sovereignty than they, must needs
Appear unkinglike.

Luc. So, sir, I desire of you
A conduct over-land to Milford-Haven.—
Madam, all joy befall his grace and you!

Cym. My lords, you are appointed for that office;

The due of honour in no point omit.—
So farewell, noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my lord.

Clo. Receive it friendly: but from this time
forth

I wear it as your enemy.

Luc. Sir, the event
Is yet to name the winner: fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my
lords,

Till he have cross'd the Severn.—Happiness!
[Exeunt LUCIUS and Lords.]

Queen. He goes hence frowning: but it honours us
That we have given him cause.

Clo. 'Tis all the better;
Your valiant Britons have their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the emperor

How it goes here. It fits us therefore ripely
Our chariots and our horsemen be in readiness:
The powers that he already hath in Gallia
Will soon be drawn to head, from whence he moves

His war for Britain.

Queen. 'Tis not sleepy business;
But must be look'd to speedily and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus Hath made us forward. But, my gentle queen,
Where is our daughter? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender'd
The duty of the day: she looks us like
A thing more made of malice than of duty:
We have noted it.—Call her before us; for
We have been too slight in sunderance.

[Exit an Attendant.]

Queen. Royal sir,
Since the exile of Posthumus, most retir'd
Hath her life been; the cure whereof, my lord,
'Tis time must do. Beseech your majesty,
Forbear sharp speeches to her: she's a lady
So tender of rebukes that words are strokes,
And strokes death to her.

Re-enter Attendant.

Cym. Where is she, sir? How
Can her attempt be answer'd?

Atten. Please you, sir,
Her chambers are all lock'd; and there's no answer [make].

That will be given to the loud'st of noise we Queen. My lord, when last I went to visit
her,

She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close;
Whereto constrain'd by her infirmity
She should that duty leave unpaid to you
Which daily she was bound to proffer: this She wish'd me to make known; but our great court

Made me to blame in memory.

Cym. Her door's lock'd?
Not seen of late? Grant, heavens, that which
I fear

Prove false!
[Exit.]

Queen. Son, I say, follow the king. [Exit.]
Clo. That man of hers, Pisanio, her old servant, I have not seen these two days.

Queen. Go, look after.—
[Exit CLOTEN.]

Pisanio, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus!—
He hath a drug of mine; I pray his absence
Proceed by swallowing that; for he believes
It is a thing most precious. But for her, [her]
Where is she gone? Haply despair hath seiz'd
Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her dear'd Posthumus: gone she is
To death or to dishonour; and my end
Can make good use of either: she being down,
I have the placing of the British crown.

Re-enter CLOTEN.

How now, my son!

Clo. 'Tis certain she is fled.
Go in and cheer the king: he rages; none
Dare come about him.

Queen. All the better: may
This night forestall him of the coming day!

[Exit.]

Clo. I love and hate her: for she's fair and royal, [quiseite]

And that she hath all courtly parts more ex-
Than lady, ladies, woman; from every one
The best she hath, and she, of all compounded, Outsells them all.—I love her therefore: but,
Disdaining me, and throwing favours on
The low Posthumus, slanders so her judgment
That what's else rare is chok'd and in that point

I will conclude to hate her, nay, indeed,
To be reveng'd upon her. For when fools shall—

Enter PISANIO.

Who is here? What, are you packing, sirrah?
Come hither: ah, you precious pander! Villain,
Where is thy lady? In a word; or else
Thou art straightway with the fiends.

Pis. O, good my lord!
Clo. Where is thy lady? or, by Jupiter—
I will not ask again. Close villain,
I'll have this secret from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to find it. Is she with Posthumus?
From whose so many weights of baseness cannot
A dram of worth be drawn.

Pis. Alas, my lord,
How can she be with him? When was she miss'd?

He is in Rome.
Clo. Where is she, sir? Come nearer;
No further halting: satisfy me home
What is become of her.

Pis. O, my all-worthy lord!
Clo. All-worthy villain!

Discover where thy mistress is at once,
At the next word,—no more of worthy lord,— Speak, or thy silence on the instant is Thy condemnation and thy death.

Pis. Then, sir,
This paper is the history of my knowledge
Touching her flight. [Presenting a letter.]

Clo. Let's see't.—I will pursue her
Even to Augustus' throne.

Pis. [Aside.] Or this or perish.
She's far enough; and what he learns by this
May prove his travel, not her danger.

Clo. Hum!
Pis. [Aside.] I'll write to my lord she's dead.

O Imogen,
 Safe mayst thou wander, safe return again!

Clo. Sirrah, is this letter true?

Pis. Sir, as I think.

Clo. It is Posthumus' hand; I know't.—
 Sirrah, if thou wouldst not be a villain, but do me true service, undergo those employments wherein I should have cause to use thee with a serious industry,—that is, what villainy so'er I bid thee do, to perform it directly and truly,—
 I would think thee an honest man: thou shouldst neither want my means for thy relief nor my voice for thy preferment.

Pis. Well, my good lord.

Clo. Will thou serve me?—for since patiently and constantly thou hast stuck to the bare fortune of that beggar Posthumus, thou canst not, in the course of gratitude, but be a diligent follower of mine,—wilt thou serve me?

Pis. Sir, I will.

Clo. Give me thy hand; here's my purse.
 Hast any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?

Pis. I have, my lord, at my lodging, the same suit he wore when he took leave of my lady and mistress.

Clo. The first service thou dost me, fetch that suit hither: let it be thy first service; go.

Pis. I shall, my lord. [Exit.]

Clo. Meet thee at Milford-Haven!—I forgot to ask him one thing; I'll remember't anon:
 even there, thou villain Posthumus, will I kill thee.—I would these garments were come.
 She said upon a time,—the bitterness of it I now belch from my heart,—that she held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. With that suit upon my back will I ravish her: first kill him, and in her eyes; there shall she see my valour,
 which will then be a torment to her contempt.
 He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead body,—and when my lust hath dined,—which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the clothes that she so praised,—to the court I'll knock her back, foot her home again. She hath despised me rejoicingly, and I'll be merry in my revenge.

Re-enter PISANIO, with the clothes.

Be those the garments?

Pis. Ay, my noble lord.

Clo. How long is't since she went to Milford-Haven?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet.

Clo. Bring this apparel to my chamber; that is the second thing that I have commanded thee; the third is, that thou wilt be a voluntary mute to my design. Be but duteous, and true preferment shall tender itself to thee.—
 My revenge is now at Milford: would I had wings to follow it!—Come, and be true.

[Exit.]

Pis. Thou bidd'st me to my loss: for true to
 thee

Were to prove false, which I will never be,
 To him that is most true. To Milford go,

And find not her whom thou pursu'st.—Flow,
 flow,
 You heavenly blessings on her!—This fool's
 Be cross'd with slowness; labour be his meed!
 [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—WALES. Before the Cave of BELARIUS.

Enter IMOGEN, in boy's clothes.

Imo. I see a man's life is a tedious one:
 I have tir'd myself; and for two nights together
 Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick,

But that my resolution helps me.—Milford
 When from the mountain-top Pisanio show'd
 thee,

Thou wast within a ken: O Jove! I think
 Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
 Where they should be reliev'd. Two beggars told me

I could not miss my way: will poor folks lie,
 That have afflictions on them, knowing 'tis
 A punishment or trial? Yes; no wonder,
 When rich ones scarce tell true: to lapse in fulness

Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
 Is worse in kings than beggars.—My dear lord!
 Thou art one o' the false ones: now I think on thee

My hunger's gone; but even before, I was
 At point to sink for food.—But what is this?
 Here is a path to't: 'tis some savage hold:
 I were best not call; I dare not call: yet famine,
 Ere clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it valiant.
 Plenty and peace breeds cowards; hardness
 ever

Of hardness is mother.—Ho! who's here?
 If anything that's civil, speak; if savage,
 Take or lend.—Ho!—No answer? then I'll enter.

Best draw my sword; and if mine enemy
 But fear the sword like me, he'll scarcely look on't.

Such a foe, good heavens! [Goes into the Cave.]

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. You, Polydore, have prov'd best woodman, and

Are master of the feast: Cadwal and I
 Will play the cook and servant; 'tis our match:
 The sweat of industry would dry and die
 But for the end it works to. Come; our stomachs
 Will make what's homely savoury: weariness
 Can snore upon the flint, when restive sloth Finds the down pillow hard.—Now, peace be
 here,

Poor house, that keep'st thyself!

Gui. I am thoroughly weary.

Arv. I am weak with toil, yet strong in appetite.

Gui. There is cold meat i' the cave; we'll browse on that

Whilst what we have kill'd be cook'd.

Bel. Stay; come not in.

[Looking into the Cave.]

But that it eats our victuals, I should think
 Here were a fairy.

Gui. What's the matter, sir?
Bel. By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,
 An earthly paragon!—Behold divineness
 No elder than a boy!

Re-enter IMOGEN.

Imo. Good masters, harm me not:
 Before I enter'd here I call'd; and thought
 To have begg'd or bought what I have took:
 good troth,
 I have stol'n nought; nor would not, though
 I had found
 Gold strew'd o' the floor. Here's money for my meat:
 I would have left it on the board, so soon
 As I had made my meal; and parted
 With prayers for the provider.

Gui. Money, youth?
Arv. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt!
 And 'tis no better reckon'd, but of those Who worship dirty gods.

Imo. I see you are angry:
 Know, if you kill me for my fault, I should Have died had I not made it.

Bel. Whither bound?
Imo. To Milford-Haven.

Bel. What's your name?
Imo. Fidele, sir. I have a kinsman who
 Is bound for Italy; he embark'd at Milford;
 To whom being going, almost spent with hunger,

I am fallen in this offence.

Bel. Pr'ythee, fair youth,
 Think us no churls, nor measure our good minds
 By this rude place we live in. Well encounter'd!
 'Tis almost night: you shall have better cheer
 Ere you depart; and thanks to stay and eat it.—
 Boys, bid him welcome.

Gui. Were you a woman, youth,
 I should woo hard but be your groom.—In honesty

I'd bid for you as I do buy.

Arv. I'll mak't my comfort
 He is a man; I'll love him as my brother:—
 And such a welcome as I'd give to him,
 After long absence, such as yours:—most welcome!

Be sprightly, for you fall 'mongst friends.

Imo. 'Mongst friends,
 If brothers.—[Aside.] Would it had been so that they
 Had been my father's sons! then had my prize
 Been less; and so more equal ballasting
 To thee, Posthumus.

Bel. He wrings at some distress.

Gui. Would I could free't!

Arv. Or I; whate'er it be,
 What pain it cost, what danger! gods!

Bel. Hark, boys. [Whispering.]

Imo. Great men,
 That had a court no bigger than this cave,
 That did attend themselves, and had the virtue Which their own conscience seal'd them,— laying by
 That nothing gift of differing multitudes,—
 Could not out-peer these twain. Pardon me,
 gods!
 I'd change my sex to be companion with them,
 Since Leonatus' false.

Bel. It shall be so.
 Boys, we'll go dress our hunt.—Fair youth,
 come in:
 Discourse is heavy, fasting; when we have sup'd
 We'll mannerly demand thee of thy story,
 So far as thou wilt speak it.

Gui. Pray, draw near.

Arv. The night to the owl and morn to the lark less welcome.

Imo. Thanks, sir.

Arv. I pray, draw near.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—ROME. A public Place.

Enter two Senators and Tribunes.

1 Sen. This is the tenor of the Emperor's writ:

That since the common men are now in action
 'Gainst the Pannonians and Dalmatians,
 And that the legions now in Gallia are Full weak to undertake our wars against
 The fallen-off Britons, that we do incite
 The gentry to this business. He creates
 Lucius pro-consul: and to you, the tribunes,
 For this immediate levy, he commends
 His absolute commission. Long live Cæsar!
1 Tri. Is Lucius general of the forces?
2 Sen. Ay.

1 Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?
1 Sen. With those legions
 Which I have spoke of, whereunto your levy
 Must be suppliant: the words of your commission

Will tie you to the numbers, and the time
 Of their despatch.

1 Tri. We will discharge our duty.
 [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—WALES. The Forest near the Cave of BELARIUS.

Enter CLOTEN.

Clo. I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pisanio have mapped it truly. How fit his garments serve me! Why should his mistress, who was made by him that made the tailor, not be fit too? the rather,—saving reverence of the word,—for 'tis said a woman's fitness comes by fits. Therein I must play the workman. I dare speak it to myself,—for it is not vainglory for a man and his glass to confer in his own chamber,—I mean, the lines of my body are as well drawn as his; no less young, more strong, not beneath him in fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in birth, alike conversant in general services, and more remarkable in single oppositions: yet this imperceivable thing loves him in my despite. What mortality is! Posthumus, thy head, which now is growing upon thy shoulders, shall within this hour be off, thy mistress enforced, thy garments cut to pieces before thy face; and all this done, spurn her home to her father, who may haply be a little angry for my so rough usage; but my mother, having power of his testiness, shall turn all into my commendations. My horse is tied up safe out, sword, and to a sore purpose! Fortune, put them into my hand! This is the very description of their meetingplace: and the fellow dares not deceive me. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—WALES. Before the Cave.

Enter, from the Cave, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, and IMOGEN.

Bel. [To IMOGEN.] You are not well: remain here in the cave;

We'll come to you after hunting.

Arv. [To IMOGEN.] Brother, stay here: Are we not brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be; But clay and clay differs in dignity, Whose dust is both alike. I am very sick.

Gui. Go you to hunting. I'll abide with him.

Imo. So sick I am not,—yet I am not well; But not so citizen a wanton as [me]; To seem to die ere sick: so please you, leave Stick to your journal course: the breach of custom [me] Is breach of all. I am ill; but your being by Cannot amend me: society is no comfort The one not sociable: I am not very sick, Since I can reason of it. Pray you, trust me here:

I'll rob none but myself; and let me die, Stealing so poorly.

Gui. I love thee; I have spoke it: How much the quantity, the weight as much, As I do love my father.

Bel. What? how! how!

Arv. If it be sin to say so, sir, I yoke me In my good brother's fault: I know not why I love this youth; and I have heard you say Love's reason's without reason: the bier at door, And a demand who is't shall die, I'd say My father, not this youth.

Bel. [Aside.] O noble strain! O worthiness of nature! breed of greatness! Cowards father cowards, and base things sire base:

Nature hath meal and bran, contempt and grace.

I'm not their father; yet who this should be Doth miracle itself, lov'd before me.— 'Tis the ninth hour o' the morn.

Arv. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish ye sport.

Arv. You health,—so please you, sir.

Imo. [Aside.] These are kind creatures. Gods, what lies I have heard!

Our courtiers say all's savage but at court: Experience, O, thou disprov'st report! The imperious seas breed monsters; for the dish,

Poor tributary rivers as sweet fish.

I am sick still; heart-sick.—Pisamio, I'll now taste of thy drug. [Swallows some.]

Gui. I could not stir him:

He said he was gentle, but unfortunate; Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest. [after]

Arv. Thus did he answer me: yet said here— I might know more.

Bel. To the field, to the field!—

We'll leave you for this time: go in and rest.

Arv. We'll not be long away.

Bel. Pray, be not sick, For you must be our housewife.

Imo. Well, or ill,

I am bound to you.

Bel. And shalt be ever.

[Exit IMOGEN into the Cave.] This youth, howe'er distress'd, appears he hath had Good ancestors.

Arv. How angel-like he sings!

Gui. But his neat cookery! He cut our roots in characters;

And sauc'd our broths as Juno had been sick, And he her dieter.

Arv. Nobly he yokes

A smiling with a sigh,—as if the sigh

Was that it was for not being such a smile;

The smile mocking the sigh that it would fly

From so divine a temple to commix

With winds that sailors rail at.

Gui. I do note,

That grief and patience, rooted in him both,

Mingle their spurs together.

Arv. Grow, patience!

And let the stinking elder, grief, untwine

His perishing root with the increasing vine!

Bel. It is great morning. Come, away!— Who's there?

Enter CLOTEN.

Clo. I cannot find those runagates; that villain

Hath mock'd me.—I am faint.

Bel. Those runagates!

Means he not us? I partly know him; 'tis Cloten, the son o' the queen. I fear some ambush.

I saw him not these many years, and yet I know 'tis he.—We are held as outlaws: hence!

Gui. He is but one: you and my brother search

What companies are near: pray you, away;

Let me alone with him.

[Exeunt BELARIUS and ARVIRAGUS.]

Clo. Soft!—What are you That fly me thus? some villain mountaineers? I have heard of such.—What slave art thou?

Gui. A thing

More slavish did I ne'er than answering

A slave without a knock.

Clo. Thou art a robber,

A law-breaker, a villain: yield thee, thief.

Gui. To whom? to thee? What art thou? have not I

An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?

Thy words, I grant, are bigger; for I wear not

My dagger in my mouth. Say what thou art, Why I should yield to thee?

Clo. Thou villain base,

Know'st me not by my clothes?

Gui. No, nor thy tailor, rascal,

Who is thy grandfather: he made those clothes, Which, as it seems, make thee.

Clo. Thou precious varlet,

My tailor made them not.

Gui. Hence, then, and thank

The man that gave them thee. Thou art some fool;

I am loth to beat thee.

Clo. Thou injurious thief,
Hear but my name, and tremble.

Gui. What's thy name?

Clo. Cloten, thou villain.

Gui. Cloten, thou double villain, be thy name,

I cannot tremble at it; were it toad, or adder, spider,

'Twould move me sooner.

Clo. To thy further fear,
Nay, to thy mere confusion, thou shalt know
I'm son to the queen.

Gui. I'm sorry for't; not seeming
So worthy as thy birth.

Clo. Art not afraid?

Gui. Those that I reverence, those I fear,
the wise:

At fools I laugh, not fear them.

Clo. Die the death:
When I have slain thee with my proper hand,
I'll follow those that even now fled hence,
And on the gates of Lud's town set your heads:
Yield, rustic mountaineer. [Exeunt fighting.]

Re-enter BELARIUS and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. No company's abroad.

Arv. None in the world: you did mistake
him, sure.

Bel. I cannot tell: long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of favour

Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his: I am absolute

'Twas very Cloten.

Arv. In this place we left them:
I wish my brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarce made up,
I mean to man, he had not apprehension
Of roaring terrors; for defect of judgment
Is oft the cure of fear.—But, see, thy brother.

Re-enter GUDERIUS with CLOTEN'S head.

Gui. This Cloten was a fool, an empty purse,—
There was no money in't: not Hercules Could have knock'd out his brains, for he had
none:

Yet I not doing this, the fool had borne
My head as I do his.

Bel. What hast thou done?

Gui. I am perfect what: cut off one Cloten's
head,

Son to the queen, after his own report;
Who call'd me traitor, mountaineer; and swore,
With his own single hand he'd take us in,
Displace our heads where,—thank the gods!—
they grow,

And set them on Lud's town.

Bel. We are all undone.

Gui. Why, worthy father, what have we to lose

But that he swore to take, our lives? The law
Protects not us: then why should we be tender,
To let an arrogant piece of flesh threat us;
Play judge and executioner all himself,
For we do fear the law? What company
Discover you abroad?

Bel. No single soul
Can we set eye on, but in all safe reason

He must have some attendants. Though his humour

Was nothing but mutation,—ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse; not frenzy, not Absolute madness could so far have rav'd,
To bring him here alone: although perhaps
It may be heard at court that such as we
Cave here, hunt here, are outlaws, and in time
May make some stronger head: the which he hearing,—

As it is like him,—might break out, and swear
He'd fetch us in; yet is't not probable
To come alone, either he so undertaking [fear,
Or they so suffering: then on good ground we
If we do fear this body hath a tail
More perilous than the head.

Arv. Let ordinance
Come as the gods foresay it: howsoever,
My brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no mind
To hunt this day: the boy Fidele's sickness
Did make my way long forth.

Gui. With his own sword,
Which he did wave against my throat, I have ta'en

His head from him: I'll throw't into the creek
Behind our rock; and let it to the sea,
And tell the fishes he's the queen's son, Cloten:
That's all I reck. [Exit.]

Bel. I fear 'twill be reveng'd;
Would, Polydore, thou hadst not done't!
though valour
Becomes thee well enough.

Arv. Would I had done't,
So the revenged alone pursu'd me!—Polydore,
I love thee brotherly; but envy much Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would revenges, [us through,
That possible strength might meet, would seek
And put us to our answer.

Bel. Well, 'tis done:—
We'll hunt no more to-day, nor seek for danger
Where there's no profit. I pry'thee, to our rock;
You and Fidele play the cooks: I'll stay
Till hasty Polydore return, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arv. Poor sick Fidele!
I'll willingly to him: to gain his colour
I'd let a parish of such Cloten's blood,
And praise myself for charity. [Exit.]

Bel. O thou goddess,
Thou divine nature, how thyself thou blazon'st
In these two princely boys! They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head; and yet as rough,
Their royal blood enchain'd, as the rud'st wind
That by the top doth take the mountain pine,
And make him stoop to the vale. 'Tis wonder
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To royalty unlearn'd; honour untaught;
Civility not seen from other; valour
That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop
As if it had been sow'd. Yet still it's strange
What Cloten's being here to us portends,
Or what his death will bring us.

Re-enter GUDERIUS.

Gui. Where's my brother?
I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream,

In embassy to his mother: his body's hostage
For his return. [Solemn music.]

Bel. My ingenious instrument!
Hark, Polydore, it sounds! But what occasion
Hath Cadwal now to give it motion? Hark!

Gui. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.

Gui. What does he mean? since death of my dear'st mother

It did not speak before. All solemn things
Should answer solemn accidents. The matter?
Triumphs for nothing and lamenting toys
Is jollity for apes and grief for boys.
Is Cadwal mad?

Bel. Look, here he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his arms
Of what we blame him for!

Re-enter ARVIRAGUS, bearing IMOGEN as dead in his arms.

Arv. The bird is dead
That we have made so much on. I had rather Have skip'd from sixteen years of age to sixty,

To have turn'd my leaping time into a crutch,
Than have seen this.

Gui. O sweetest, fairest lily!
My brother wears thee not the one half so well
As when thou grew'st thyself.

Bel. O melancholy!
Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? find
The ooze to show what coast thy sluggish crure Might easiliest harbour in?—Thou blessed thing!

Jove knows what man thou might'st have made;
but I,

Thou diest, a most rare boy, of melancholy!
How found you him?

Arv. Stark, as you see:
Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled slumber,
Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at: his right cheek

Reposing on a cushion.

Gui. Where?

Arv. O' the floor;
His arms thus leagu'd: I thought he slept; and put

My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose Answer'd my steps too loud.

Gui. Why, he but sleeps:
If he be gone he'll make his grave a bed;
With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
And worms will not come to thee.

Arv. With fairest flowers,
Whilst summer lasts and I live here, Fidele,
I'll sweeten thy sad grave: thou shalt not lack
The flower that's like thy face, pale primrose;
nor

The azure hare-bell, like thy veins; no, nor
The leaf of eglantine, whom not to slander
Out-sweeten'd not thy breath: the ruddock
would

With charitable bill,—O bill, sore shaming
Those rich-left heirs that let their fathers lie
Without a monument!—bring thee all this;
Yea, and furr'd moss besides, when flowers are
none,

To winter-ground thy corse.

Gui. Prythee, have done;
And do not play in wench-like words with that

Which is so serious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration what
Is now due debt.—To the grave!

Arv. Say, where shall's lay him?

Gui. By good Euriphile, our mother.

Arv.

Be't so:

And let us, Polydore, though now our voices
Have got the mannish crack, sing him to the ground,

As once our mother; use like note and words,
Save that Euriphile must be Fidele.

Gui. Cadwal,

I cannot sing: I'll weep, and word it with thee;
For notes of sorrow out of tune are worse
Than priests and fanes that lie.

Arv.

We'll speak it, then.

Bel. Great griefs, I see, medicine the less:
for Cloten

Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys;
And though he came our enemy, remember,
He was paid for that: thou mean and mighty,
rotting

Together, have one dust, yet reverence,—
That angel of the world,—doth make distinction Of place 'tween high and low. Our foe was princely;

And though you took his life, as being our foe,
Yet bury him as a prince.

Gui.

Pray you, fetch him hither.
Thersites' body is as good as Ajax',
When neither are alive.

Arv.

If you'll go fetch him,
We'll say our song the whilst.—Brother, begin.

[Exit BELARIUS.]

Gui. Nay, Cadwal, we must lay his head to the east;

My father hath a reason for't.

Arv.

'Tis true.

Gui. Come on, then, and remove him.

Arv.

So.—Begin.

SONG.

Gui. Fear no more the heat o' the sun,
Nor the furious winter's rages;
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages:
Golden lads and girls all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Arv. Fear no more the frown o' the great;
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke:
Care no more to clothe and eat;
To thee the reed is as the oak:
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust.

Gui. Fear no more the lightning-flash,
Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone;
Fear not slander, censure rash;
Thou hast finish'd joy and moan:
All lovers young, all lovers must
Consign to thee, and come to dust.

Gui. No excoriser harm thee!
Nor no withcraft charm thee!
Ghost unlaid forbear thee!
Nothing ill come near thee!
Both. Quiet consummation have;
And renowned be thy grave!

Re-enter BELARIUS with the body of CLOTEN.

Gui. We have done our obsequies: come,
lay him down.

Bel. Here's a few flowers; but 'bout midnight, more:

The herbs that have on them cold dew o' the night

[faces.—
Are strewings fit'tst for graves.—Upon their You were as flowers, now wither'd: even so These herblets shall, which we upon you strew.—

Come on, away: apart upon our knees.

The ground that gave them first has them again:

Their pleasures here are past, so is their pain.

[Exeunt BEL. GUI., and ARV.

Imo. [Awakening.] Yes, sir, to Milford-Haven; which is the way?—

[thither? I thank you.—By yon bush?—Pray, how far 'Ods pittikins! can it be six mile yet?—

I have gone all night. Faith, I'll lie down and sleep.

But, soft! no bedfellow:—O gods and goddesses!

[Seeing the body. These flowers are like the pleasures of the world;]

[dream; This bloody man, the care on't.—I hope I For so I thought I was a cave-keeper,

And cook to honest creatures: but 'tis not so; 'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,

Which the brain makes of fumes: our very eyes Are sometimes, like out judgments, blind.

Good faith,

I tremble still with fear: but if there be Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity

As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it! The dream's here still: even when I wake it is Without me, as within me; not imagin'd, felt. A headless man!—The garments of Posthumus!

I know the shape o'f's leg: this is his hand; His foot Mercurial; his Martial thigh;

The brawns of Hercules: but his Jovial face— Murder in heaven?—How!—'Tis gone.—Pisanio,

All curses madd'd Hecuba gave the Greeks, And mine to boot, be darted on thee! Thou,

Conspir'd with that irregular devil, Cloten, Hast here cut off my lord.—To write and read

Be henceforth treacherous!—Damn'd Pisanio Hath with his forged letters,—damn'd Pisanio,—

From this most bravest vessel of the world Struck the main-top!—O Posthumus! alas,

Where is thy head? where's that? Ay me! where's that?

Pisanio might have kill'd thee at the heart, And left thy head on.—How should this be?

Pisanio?

'Tis he and Cloten: malice and lucre in them Have laid this woe here. O 'tis pregnant, pregnant!

The drug he gave me, which he said was precious And cordial to me, have I not found it?]

home Murderous to the senses? That confirms it This is Pisanio's deed and Cloten's: O!—

Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood, That we the horrider may seem to those

Which chance to find us: O, my lord, my lord!

Enter LUCIUS, a Captain and other Officers, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them, the legions garrison'd in Gallia,

After your will, have cross'd the sea; attending You here at Milford-Haven with your ships:

They are in readiness.

Luc.

But what from Rome?

Cap. The senate hath stirr'd up the confiners And gentlemen of Italy; most willing spirits,

That promise noble service; and they come

Under the conduct of bold Iachimo,

Sienna's brother.

Luc.

When expect you them?

Cap. With the next benefit o' the wind.

Luc.

This forwardness Makes our hopes fair. Command our present numbers

[sir, Be muster'd; bid the captains look to't.—Now, What have you dream'd of late of this war's purpose?

Sooth. Last night the very gods show'd me a vision,—

I fast and pray'd for their intelligence,—thus:— I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd

From the spongy south to this part of the west, There vanish'd in the sunbeams: which portends,—

Unless my sins abuse my divination,—

Success to the Roman host.

Luc.

Dream often so, And never false.—Soft, ho! what trunk is here Without his top?—The ruin speaks that some-

time

It was a worthy building.—How! a page!— Or dead or sleeping on him? But dead, rather;

For nature doth abhor to make his bed With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead.—

Let's see the boy's face.

Cap.

He's alive, my lord.

Luc. He'll then, instruct us of this body.—

Young one,

Inform us of thy fortunes; for it seems They crave to be demanded. Who is this

Thou mak'st thy bloody pillow? or who was he, That otherwise than noble nature did, [terest

Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy in- In this sad wreck? How came it? Who is it?

What art thou?

Imo.

I am nothing: or if not, Nothing to be were better. This was my master, A very valiant Briton and a good,

That here by mountaineers lies slain: alas! There is no more such masters: I may wander

From east to accident, cry out for service, Try many, all good, serve truly, never Find such another master.

Luc.

'Lack, good youth! Thou mov'st no less with thy complaining than Thy master in bleeding: say his name, good friend.

[lie, and do Imo. Richard du Champ.—[Aside.] If I do No harm by it, though the gods hear, I hope They'll pardon it.—Say you, sir?

Luc.

Imo.

Thy name? Thy name? Fidele.

Luc.

Thou dost approve thyself the very same: [name. Thy name well fits thy faith, thy faith thy

Wilt take thy chauce with me? I will not say Thou shalt be so well master'd; but, be sure, No less belov'd. The Roman emperor's letters, Sent by a consul to me, should not sooner

Than thine own worth prefer thee: go with me.

Imo. I'll follow, sir. But first, an't please the gods,
I'll hide my master from the flies, as deep
As these poor pickaxes can dig: and when
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd
his grave,
And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you entertain me.

Luc. Ay, good youth;
And rather father thee than master thee.—
My friends,
The boy hath taught us manly duties: let us
Find out the prettiest dasied plot we can,
And make him with our pikes and partisans
A grave: come, arm him.—Boy, he is prefer'd
By thee to us; and he shall be interr'd
As soldiers can. Be cheerful; wipe thine eyes:
Some falls are means the happier to arise.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—BRITAIN. A Room in CYMBELINE'S Palace.

Enter CYMBELINE, Lords, PISANIA, and Attendants.

Cym. Again; and bring me word how 'tis with her.

A fever with the absence of her son;

A madness, of which her life's in danger,—
[Exit an Attendant.]

Heavens,
How deeply you at once do touch me! Imogen,
The great part of my comfort, gone; my queen
Upon a desperate bed, and in a time
When fearful wars point at me; her son gone,
So needful for this present: it strikes me, past
The hope of comfort.—But for thee, fellow,
Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seem so ignorant, we'll enforce it from thee
By a sharp torture.

Pis. Sir, my life is yours, [tress,
I humbly set it at your will: but, for my mis-
I nothing know where she remains, why gone, Nor when she purposes return. Beseech your highness,

Hold me your loyal servant.

Lord. Good my liege,
The day that she was missing he was here:
I dare be bound he's true, and shall perform
All parts of his subjection loyally.
For Cloten,—

There wants no diligence in seeking him,
And will no doubt be found.

Cym. The time is troublesome,—
We'll slip you for a season; but our jealousy
[To PISANIA.]

Does yet depend.

Lord. So please your majesty,
The Roman legions, all from Gallia drawn,
Are landed on your coast; with a supply
Of Roman gentlemen by the senate sent.

Cym. Now for the counsel of my son and queen!—

I am amaz'd with matter.

Lord. Good my liege,
Your preparation can affront no less Than what you hear of: come more, for more you're ready:

The want is but to put those powers in motion
That long to move.

Cym. I thank you. Let's withdraw,
And meet the time as it seeks us. We fear not What can from Italy annoy us; but
We grieve at chances here.—Away!

[Exeunt all but PISANIA.]

Pis. I heard no letter from my master since
I wrote him Imogen was slain: 'tis strange:
Nor hear I from my mistress, who did promise
To yield me often tidings; neither know I
What is betid to Cloten; but remain
Perplex'd in all: the heavens still must work.
Wherein I am false I am honest; not true to be true:

These present wars shall find I love my country,
Even to the note o' the king, or I'll fall in them.
All other doubts, by time let them be clear'd:
Fortune brings in some boats that are not steer'd.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV.—WALES. Before the Cave.

Enter BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Gui. The noise is round about us.

Bel. Let us from it.

Arv. What pleasure, sir, find we in life, to lock it

From action and adventure?

Gui. Nay, what hope
Have we in hiding us? this way the Romans
Must or for Britons slay us or receive us
For barbarous and unnatural revolts
During their use, and slay us after.

Bel. Sons,
We'll higher to the mountains; there secure us.
To the king's party there's no going: newness
Of Cloten's death,—we being not known, not muster'd

Among the bands,—may drive us to a render
Where we have liv'd; and so extort from's
That which we've done, whose answer would be death,

Drawn on with torture.

Gui. This is, sir, a doubt

In such a time nothing becoming you

Nor satisfying us.

Arv. It is not likely

That when they hear the Roman horses neigh, Behold their quarter'd fires, have both their eyes

And ears so cloy'd importantly as now,
That they will waste their time upon our note,
To know from whence we are.

Bel. O, I am known
Of many in the army: many years,
Though Cloten then but young, you see, not wore him

From my remembrance. And, besides, the king
Hath not deserv'd my service nor your loves;
Who find in my exile the want of breeding
The certainty of this hard life; aye hopeless
To have the courtesy your cradle promis'd,
But to be still hot summer's tanlings and
The shrinking slaves of winter.

Gui. Than be so,
Better to cease to be. Pray, sir, to the army:
I and my brother are not known; yourself

So out of thought, and thereto so o'ergrown,
Cannot be question'd.

Arv. By this sun that shines,
I'll thither: what thing is it that I never Did see man die! scarce ever look'd on blood,
But that of coward hares, hot goats, and venison!

Never bestrid a horse, save one that had
A rider like myself, who ne'er wore rowel
Nor iron on his heel! I am asham'd
To look upon the holy sun, to have
The benefit of his blessed beams, remaining
So long a poor unknown.

Gui. By heavens, I'll go:
If you will bless me, sir, and give me leave,
I'll take the better care; but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me by
The hands of Romans!

Arv. So say I,—Amen.
Bel. No reason I, since of your lives you set
So slight a valuation, should reserve
My crack'd one to more care. Have with you, boys!

If in your country wars you chance to die,
That is my bed too, lads, and there I'll lie:
Lead, lead.—[Aside.] The time seems long;
their blood thinks scorn
Till it fly out, and show them princes born.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—BRITAIN. A Field between the British and Roman Camps.

Enter POSTHUMUS with a bloody handkerchief

Post. Yea, bloody cloth, I'll keep thee; for
I wish'd
Thou shouldst be colour'd thus. You married ones,
If each of you should take this course, how many
Must murder wives much better than themselves

For wrying but a little! O Pisanio!
Every good servant does not all commands:
No bond but to do just ones.—Gods! if you Should have ta'en vengeance on my faults, I never

Had liv'd to put on this: so had you sav'd
The noble Imogen to repent; and struck Me, wretch more worth your vengeance. But alack,

You snatch some hence for little faults; that's
love,

To have them fall no more: you some permit
To second ills with ills, each elder worse,
And make them dread it, to the doers' thrift.
But Imogen is your own: do your best wills,
And make me bless'd to obey!—I am brought hither

Among the Italian gentry, and to fight Against my lady's kingdom: 'tis enough
That, Britain, I have kill'd thy mistress; peace!
I'll give no wound to thee. Therefore, good
heavens,

Hear patiently my purpose:—I'll disrobe me
Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself
As does a Briton peasant: so I'll fight

Against the part I come with; so I'll die
For thee, O Imogen, even for whom my life
Is every breath a death: and thus unknown,
Pitied nor hated, to the face of peril
Myself I'll dedicate. Let me make men know
More valour in me than my habits show.
Gods, put the strength o' the Leonati in me!
To shame the guise o' the world, I will begin
The fashion,—less without and more within.
[Exit.]

SCENE II.—BRITAIN. A Field between the Camps.

Enter, at one side, LUCIUS, IACHIMO, IMOGEN and the Roman Army; at the other side, the British Army; LEONATUS POSTHUMUS following it like a poor soldier. They march over and go out. Alarums. Then enter again, in skirmish, IACHIMO and POSTHUMUS: he vanquisheth and disarmeth IACHIMO, and then leaves him.

Iach. The heaviness and guilt within my bosom
Takes off my manhood: I have belied a lady,
The princess of this country, and the air on't
Revengeably enfeebles me; or could this carl,
A very drudge of nature's, have subdu'd me
In my profession? Knighthoods and honours borne

As I wear mine are titles but of scorn.
If that thy gentry, Britain, go before
Thus lout as he exceeds our lords, the odds
Is that we scarce are men, and you are gods.
[Exit.]

The battle continues; the Britons fly; CYMBELINE is taken: then enter to his rescue BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, and ARVIRAGUS.

Bel. Stand, stand! We have the advantage of the ground;
The lane is guarded: nothing routs us but
The villainy of our fears.

Gui. and Arv. Stand, stand, and fight!

Re-enter POSTHUMUS and seconds the Britons: they rescue CYMBELINE, and exeunt. Then re-enter LUCIUS, IACHIMO, and IMOGEN.

Luc. Away, boy, from the troops, and save
thyself;

For friends kill friends, and the disorder's such
As war were hoodwink'd.

Iach. 'Tis their fresh supplies.
Luc. It is a day turn'd strangely: or betimes
Let's re-enforce or fly.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—BRITAIN. Another part of the Field.

Enter POSTHUMUS and a British Lord.

Lord. Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?

Post. I did:
Though you, it seems, come from the fliers.
Lord. I did.

Post. No blame be to you, sir; for all was lost,
But that the heavens fought: the king himself

Of his wings destitute, the army broken,
And but the backs of Britons seen all flying
Through a straight lane; the enemy full-hearted, Lolling the tongue with slaughtering, having
work

More plentiful than tools to do't, struck down
Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling

Merely through fear; that the strait path was damn'd

With dead men hurt behind, and cowards living,
To die with lengthen'd shame.

Lord. Where was this lane?

Post. Close by the battle, ditch'd, and wall'd with turf,

Which gave advantage to an ancient soldier,—
An honest one, I warrant; who deserv'd
So long a breeding as his white beard came to,
In doing this for's country,—athwart the lane
He, with two striplings,—lads more like to run
The country base than to committ such slaughter;
With faces fit for masks, or rather fairer
Than those for preservation cas'd, or shame,—
Made good the passage; cried to those that fled,
*Our Britain's harts die flying, not our men:
To darkness fleet, souls that fly backwards!*

Stand;

Or we are Romans, and will give you that Like beasts which you shun beastly, and may save,

But to look back in frown: stand, stand!—

These three,

Three thousand confident, in act as many,—
For three performers are the file when all
The rest do nothing,—with this word, Stand,
stand!

Accommodated by the place, more charming
With their own nobleness,—which could have turn'd

A distaff to a lance,—gilded pale looks,
Part shame, part spirit renew'd; that some,
turn'd coward

But by example,—O, a sin in war
Damn'd in the first beginners!—gan to look
The way that they did, and to grin like lions
Upon the pikes o' the hunters. Then began
A stop i' the chaser, a retire; anon
A rout, confusion thick: forthwith they fly,
Chuckens, the way which they stoop'd eagles;
slaves, [cowards,—

The strides they victors made: and now our Like fragments in hard voyages,—became
The life o' the need; having found the backdoor open [wound!

Of the unguarded hearts, heavens, how they
Some slain before; some dying; some their friends

O'erborne i' the former wave: ten chas'd by one
Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty:
Those that would die or ere resist are grown
The mortal bugs o' the field.

Lord. This was strange chance,—
A narrow lane, an old man, and two boys!

Post. Nay, do not wonder at it: you are made
Rather to wonder at the things you hear
Than to work any. Will you rhyme upon't,
And vent it for a mockery? Here is one:
*Two boys, an old man twice a boy, a lane,
Preserv'd the Britons, was the Romans' bane,*

Lord. Nay, be not angry, sir.

Post.

'Lack, to what end?
Who dares not stand his foe I'll be his friend;
For if he'll do as he is made to do
I know he'll quickly fly my friendship too.
You have put me into rhyme.

Lord.

Farewell; you're angry.

[Exit.]

Post. Still going?—This is a lord! O noble misery,—

To be i' the field and ask what news of me!

To-day how many would have given their honours

To have sav'd their carcasses! took heel to do't,
And yet died too! I, in mine own woe charm'd,
Could not find death where I did hear him
groan, [monster,

Nor feel him where he struck: being an ugly
'Tis strange he hides him in fresh cups, soft beds,

Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we
That draw his knives i' the war.—Well, I will find him:

For being now a favourer to the Briton,
No more a Briton, I have resum'd again
The part I came in: fight I will no more,
But yield me to the veriest hind that shall [is Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter
Here made by the Roman; great the answer be Britons must take: for me, my ransom's death:
On either side I come to spend my breath;
Which neither here I'll keep nor bear again,
But end it by some means for Imogen.

Enter two British Captains and Soldiers.

1 Cap. Great Jupiter be prais'd! Lucius is taken:

'Tis thought the old man and his sons were angels.

2 Cap. There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,

That gave the affront with them.

1 Cap. So 'tis reported:
But none of 'em can be found.—Stand! who's there?

Post. A Roman;

Who had not now been drooping here if seconds
Had answer'd him.

2 Cap. Lay hands on him; a dog!—
A leg of Rome shall not return to tell

What crows have peck'd them here:—he brags his service,

As if he were of note: bring him to the king.

Enter CYMBELINE attended; BELARIUS, GUID-ERIUS, ARVIRAGUS, PISANIO, and Roman Captives. The Captains present POSTHUMUS to CYMBELINE, who delivers him over to a Gaoler: after which all go out.

SCENE IV.—BRITAIN. A Prison.

Enter POSTHUMUS and two Gaolers.

1 Gaol. You shall not now be stolen, you have locks upon you;

So, graze as you find pasture.

2 Gaol. Ay, or a stomach.

[Exeunt Gaolers.]

Post. Most welcome, bondage! for thou art
a way,

I think, to liberty: yet am I better [rather Than one that's sick o' the gout; since he had Groan so in perpetuity than be cur'd
By the sure physician death, who is the key To unbar these locks. My conscience, thou art fetter'd [gods, give me

More than my shanks and wrists: you good
The penitent instrument to pick that bolt,
Then free for ever! Is't enough I am sorry?
So children temporal fathers do appease;
Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repent?
I cannot do it better than in gyves,
Desir'd more than constrain'd: to satisfy,
If of my freedom 'tis the main part, take
No stricter render of me than my all.

I know you are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again
On their abatement: that's not my desire:
For Imogen's dear life take mine; and though
'Tis not so dear, yet 'tis a life; you coin'd it:
'Tween man and man they weigh not every
stamp;

Though light, take pieces for the figure's sake:
You rather mine, being yours: and so, great
powers,

If you will take this audit, take this life,
And cancel these cold bonds.—O Imogen!
I'll speak to thee in silence.

Solemn Music. Enter, as in an apparition, SICILIUS LEONATUS, father to POSTHUMUS an old man attired like a warrior, leading in his hand an ancient matron, his wife and mother to POSTHUMUS, with music before them: then, after other music, follow the two young LEONATI, brothers to POSTHUMUS with wounds, as they died in the wars. They circle POSTHUMUS round as he lies sleeping.

Sici. No more, thou thunder-master, show
Thy spite on mortal flies:

With Mars fall out, with Juno chide,
That thy adulteries

Rates and revenges.
Hath my poor boy done aught but well,
Whose face I never saw?

I died whilst in the womb he stay'd
Attending nature's law:

Whose father then,—as men report
Thou orphans' father art,—
Thou shouldst have been, and shielded him
From this earth-vexing smart.

Moth. Lucina lent not me her aid,
But took me in my throes;
That from me was Posthumus ripp'd,
Came crying 'mongst his foes,
A thing of pity!

Sici. Great nature, like his ancestry,
Moulded the stuff so fair
That he deserv'd the praise o' the world
As great Sicilius' heir.

1 Bro. When once he was mature for man,
In Britain where was he
That could stand up his parallel;
Or fruitful object be
In eye of Imogen, that best
Could deem his dignity?

Moth. With marriage wherefore was he mock'd,
To be exil'd, and thrown
From Leonati' seat, and cast
From her his dearest one,
Sweet Imogen?

Sici. Why did you suffer Iachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his nobler heart and brain
With needless jealousy;
And to become the geck and scorn
O' the other's villainy?

2 Bro. For this from stiller seats we came.
Our parents and us twain,
That, striking in our country's cause,
Fell bravely and were slain;
Our fealty and Tenantius' right
With honour to maintain.

1 Bro. Like hardiment Posthumus hath
To Cymbeline perform'd:
Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why hast thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due,
Being all to dolours turn'd?

Sici. Thy crystal window ope; look out;
No longer exercise
Upon a valiant race thy harsh
And potent injuries.

Moth. Since, Jupiter, our son is good,
Take off his miseries.

Sici. Peep through thy marble mansion; help;
Or we poor ghosts will cry
To the shining synod of the rest
Against thy deity.

Both Bro. Help, Jupiter; or we appeal,
And from thy justice fly.

*JUPITER descends in thunder and lightning, sitting upon an eagle: he throws a thunderbolt.
The Ghosts fall on their knees.*

Jup. No more, you petty spirits of region low, Offend our hearing; hush!—How dare you
ghosts

Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt, you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts?
Poor shadows of Elysium, hence; and rest

Upon your never-withering banks of flowers:
Be not with mortal accidents oppress'd;

No care of yours it is; you know 'tis ours.
Whom best I love I cross; to make my gift,
The more delay'd, delighted. Be content;

Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his trials well are spent.

Our Jovial star reign'd at his birth, and in Our temple was he married.—Rise, and fade!—

He shall be lord of Lady Imogen,
And happier much by his affliction made.

This tablet lay upon his breast, wherein
Our pleasure his full fortune doth confine:

And so away: no further with your din
Express impatience, lest you stir up mine.—

Mount, eagle, to my palace crystalline.
[ascends.

Sici. He came in thunder; his celestial breath
Was sulphurous to smell: the holy eagle
Stoop'd, as to foot us: his ascension is More sweet than our bless'd fields: his royal bird

Prunes the immortal wing, and cloyes his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd.

All. Thanks, Jupiter!

Sici. The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd
His radiant roof.—Away! and, to be blest,
Let us with care perform his great behest.

[Ghosts vanish.]

Post. [Waking.] Sleep, thou hast been a grandsire, and begot

A father to me; and thou hast created

A mother and two brothers: but, O scorn!

Gene! they went hence so soon as they were born.

And so I am awake.—Poor wretches that depend

On greatness' favour dream as I have done,
Wake and find nothing.—But, alas, I swerve:

Many dream not to find, neither deserve,

And yet are steep'd in favours; so am I,
That have this golden chance, and know not

why. [rare one!]

What fairies haunt this ground? A book? O
Be not, as is our fangled world, a garment

Nobler than that it covers: let thy effects

So follow, to be most unlike our courtiers,

As good as promise.

[Reads.] *When as a lion's whelp shall, to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when from a stately cedar shall be lopped branches which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly grow; then shall Posthumus end his miseries,
Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and*

'Tis still a dream; or else such stuff as madmen
Tongue, and brain not: either both or nothing:
Or senseless speaking, or a speaking such
As sense cannot untie. Be what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which
I'll keep, if but for sympathy.

Re-enter Gaoler.

Gaol. Come, sir, are you ready for death?

Post. Over-roasted rather; ready long ago.

Gaol. Hanging is the word, sir: if you be ready for that, you are well cooked.

Post. So, if I prove a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot.

Gaol. A heavy reckoning for you, sir. But the comfort is, you shall be called to no more payments, fear no more tavern bills; which are often the sadness of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for want of meat, depart reeling with too much drink, sorry that you have paid too much, and sorry that you are paid too much; purse and brain both empty,— the brain the heavier for being too light, the purse too light, being drawn of heaviness: O, of this contradiction you shall now be quit.—
O, the charity of a penny cord! it sums up thousands in a trice: you have no true debtor and creditor but it; of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge:—your neck, sir, is pen,

book, and counters; so the acquittance follows.
Post. I am merrier to die than thou art to live.

Gaol. Indeed, sir, he that sleeps feels not the toothache: but a man that were to sleep your sleep, and a hangman to help him to bed, I think he would change places with his officer; for, look you, sir, you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes, indeed do I, fellow.

Gaol. Your death has eyes in's head, then;
I have not seen him so pictured: you must either be directed by some that take upon them to know, or take upon yourself that which I am sure you do not know; or jump the after-inquiry on your own peril: and how you shall speed in your journey's end I think you'll never return to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, fellow, there are none want eyes to direct them the way I am going, but such as wink and will not use them.

Gaol. What an infinite mock is this, that a man should have the best use of eyes to see the way of blindness! I am sure hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Knock off his manacles; bring your prisoner to the king.

Post. Thou bringest good news,—I am called to be made free.

Gaol. I'll be hanged, then.

Post. Thou shalt be then freer than a gaoler;
no bolts for the dead.

[Exeunt Post. and Messenger.]

Gaol. Unless a man would marry a gallows and beget young gibbets I never saw one so prone. Yet, on my conscience, there are verier knaves desire to live, for all he be a Roman:
and there be some of them too that die against their wills; so should I if I were one. I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good;
O, there were desolation of gaolers and gal-lowses! I speak against my present profit; but my wish hath a preferment in't. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—BRITAIN. CYMBELINE'S Tent.

Enter CYMBELINE, BELARIUS, GUIDERIUS, ARVRAGUS, PISANIO, Lords, Officers, and Attendants.

Cym. Stand by my side, you whom the gods have made

Preservers of my throne. Woe is my heart

That the poor soldier that so richly fought,
Whose rags sham'd gilded arms, whose naked
breast

Stepp'd before targes of proof, cannot be found:
He shall be happy that can find him, if
Our grace can make him so.

Bel. I never saw

Such noble fury in so poor a thing;
Such precious deeds in one that promis'd naught
But beggary and poor looks.

Cym. No tidings of him?

Pis. He hath been search'd among the dead and living,
But no trace of him.

Cym. To my grief, I am
The heir of his reward, which I will add
To you, the liver, heart, and brain of Britain,
[To BEL., GUI., and ARV.
By whom I grant she lives. 'Tis now the time
To ask of whence you are:—report it.

Bel. Sir,
In Cambria are we born, and gentlemen:
Further to boast were neither true nor modest,
Unless I add we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees.
Arise my knights o' the battle: I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates.

Enter CORNELIUS and Ladies.

There's business in these faces.—Why so sadly
Greet you our victory? you look like Romans,
And not o' the court of Britain.

Cor. Hail, great king!
To sour your happiness, I must report
The queen is dead.

Cym. Who worse than a physician
Would this report become? But I consider
By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too.—How ended she?

Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life;
Which, being cruel to the world, concluded
Most cruel to herself. What she confess'd
I will report, so please you: these her women
Can trip me if I err; who with wet cheeks
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Pr'ythee, say.
Cor. First, she confess'd she never lov'd you;
only

Affected greatness got by you, not you:
Married your royalty, was wife to your place;
Abhor'd your person.

Cym. She alone knew this;
And but she spoke it dying, I would not Believe her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Cor. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand to love

With such integrity, she did confess
Was as a scorpion to her sight; whose life,
But that her flight prevented it, she had Ta'en off by poison.

Cym. O most delicate fiend!
Who is't can read a woman?—Is there more?

Cor. More, sir, and worse. She did confess she had

For you a mortal mineral; which, being took,
Should by the minute feed on life, and, linger-
ing,

By inches waste you: in which time she pur-pos'd,

By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to O'come you with her show; and in time,
When she had fitted you with her craft, to work
Her son into the adoption of the crown:

But, failing of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shameless-desperate; open'd, in despite
Of heaven and men, her purposes; repented
The evils she hatch'd were not effected; so,
Despairing, died.

Cym. Heard you all this, her women?
Lady. We did, so please your highness.

Cym. Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for she was beautiful;

Mine ears, that heard her flattery; nor my heart
That thought her like her seeming; it had been vicious

To have mistrusted her: yet, O my daughter!
That it was folly in me thou mayst say,
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all!

Enter LUCIUS, IACHIMO, the Soothsayer, and other Roman Prisoners, guarded; POSTHU-MUS behind, and IMOGEN.

Thou com'st not, Caius, now for tribute; that
The Britons have raz'd out, though with the loss

Of many a bold one, whose kinsmen have made
That their good souls may be appeas'd with slaughter

Of you their captives, which ourself have
So, think of your estate.

Luc. Consider, sir, the chance of war: the
Was yours by accident; had it gone with us
We should not, when the blood was cool, have threaten'd

Our prisoners with the sword. But since the
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call'd ransom, let it come: sufficeth
A Roman with a Roman's heart can suffer:

Augustus lives to think on't: and so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing only
I will entreat; my boy, a Briton born,
Let him be ransom'd: never master had

A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occasions, true,
So feat, so nurse-like: let his virtue join
With my request, which I'll make bold your highness

Cannot deny; he hath done no Briton harm
Though he have serv'd a Roman: save him, sir,
And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I have surely seen him:
His favour is familiar to me.—

Boy, thou hast look'd thyself into my grace,
And art mine own.—I know not why nor wherefor

To say live, boy: ne'er thank thy master; live:
And ask of Cymbeline what boon thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty and thy state, I'll give it;
Yes, though thou do demand a prisoner,
The noblest ta'en.

Imo. I humbly thank your highness.

Luc. I do not bid thee beg my life, good lad;
And yet I know thou wilt.

Imo. No, no: alack,
There's other work in hand: I see a thing
Bitter to me as death: your life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself.

Luc. The boy disdains me,
He leaves me, scorns me: briefly die their joys
That place them on the truth of girls and boys.—

Why stands he so perplex'd?

Cym. What wouldst thou, boy?
I love thee more and more: think more and
more

What's best to ask. Know'st him thou look'st
Wilt have him live? Is he thy kin? thy friend?

Imo. He is a Roman; no more kin to me Than I to your highness; who, being born your vassal,

Am something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore ey'st him so?
Imo. I'll tell you, sir, in private, if you please
 To give me hearing.

Cym. Ay, with all my heart,
 And lend my best attention. What's thy name?

Imo. Fidele, sir.

Cym. Thou'rt my good youth, my page;
 I'll be thy master: walk with me; speak freely.

[CYM. and IMO. converse apart.]

Bel. Is not this boy reviv'd from death?

Arv. One sand another
 Not more resembles that sweet rosy lad

Who died, and was Fidele.—What think you?
Gui. The same dead thing alive.

Bel. Peace, peace! see further; he eyes us not; forbear;

Creatures may be alike: were't he, I am sure
 He would have spoke to us.

Gui. But we saw him dead.

Bel. Be silent; let's see further.

Pis. [Aside.] It is my mistress:
 Since she is living, let the time run on
 To good or bad.

[CYM. and IMO. come forward.]

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side;
 Make thy demand aloud.—[To IACH.] Sir,
 step you forth;

Give answer to this boy, and do it freely;

Or, by our greatness and the grace of it,

Which is our honour, bitter torture shall

Winnow the truth from falsehood.—On, speak to him. [render]

Imo. My boon is that this gentleman may
 Of whom he had this ring.

Post. [Aside.] What's that to him?

Cym. That diamond upon your finger, say,
 How came it yours? [that]

Iach. Thou'lt torture me to leave unspoken
 Which to be spoke would torture thee.

Cym. How! me?

Iach. I am glad to be constrain'd to utter that which

Torments me to conceal. By villany

I got this ring: 'twas Leonatus' jewel,
 Whom thou didst banish; and,—which more may grieve thee,

As it doth me,—a nobler sir ne'er liv'd

'Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou hear more,
 my lord?

Cym. All that belongs to this.

Iach. That paragon, thy daughter,—
 For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits

Quail to remember,—Give me leave; I faint.

Cym. My daughter! what of her? Renew thy strength:

I had rather thou shouldst live while nature will Than die ere I hear more: strive, man, and speak.

Iach. Upon a time,—unhappy was the clock
 That struck the hour!—it was in Rome,— accurs'd [would]

The mansion where!—'twas at a feast,—O,
 Our viands had been poison'd, or at least

Those which I heav'd to head!—the good
 Posthumus,—

What should I say? he was too good to be

Where ill men were; and was the best of all
 Amongst the rar'st of good ones,—sitting sadly,
 Hearing us praise our loves of Italy

For beauty that made barren the swell'd boast
 Of him that best could speak; for feature laming
 The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva,
 Postures beyond brief nature; for condition,
 A shop of all the qualities that man
 Loves woman for; besides that hook of wiving,
 Fairness which strikes the eye,—

Cym. I stand on fire:

Come to the matter.

Iach. All too soon I shall,

Unless thou wouldst grieve quickly.—This
 Posthumus,—

Most like a noble lord in love, and one

That had a royal lover,—took his hint;

And not dispraising whom we prais'd,—therein

He was as calm as virtue,—he began

His mistress' picture; which by his tongue being made,

And then a mind put in't, either our brags

Were crack'd of kitchen trulls, or his description

Prov'd us unspeaking sots.

Cym.

Nay, nay, to the purpose.

Iach. Your daughter's chastity—there it begins.

He spake of her as Dian had hot dreams

And she alone were cold: whereat I, wretch,

Made scruple of his praise; and wager'd with
 him

Pieces of gold, 'gainst this, which then he wore

Upon his honour'd finger, to attain

In suit the place of's bed, and win this ring

By hers and mine adultery: he, true knight,

No less of her honour confident

Than I did truly find her, stakes this ring;

And would so, had it been a carbuncle

Of Phœbus' wheel; and might so safely, had
 it

Been all the worth of's car. Away to Britain

Post I in this design. Well may you, sir,

Remember me at court, where I was taught

Of your chaste daughter the wide difference

'Twixt amorous and villainous. Being thus quench'd

Of hope, not longing, mine Italian brain

'Gan in your duller Britain operate

Most vilely,—for my vantage excellent;

And, to be brief, my practice so prevail'd

That I return'd with similar proof enough

To make the noble Leonatus mad,

By wounding his belief in her renown

With tokens thus and thus; averring notes

Of chamber-hanging, pictures, thus her bracelet,—

O cunning how I got it!—nay, some marks

Of secret on her person, that he could not

But think her bond of chastity quite crack'd,

I having ta'en the forfeit. Whereupon,—

Methinks I see him now,—

Post. [Coming forward.] Ay, so thou dost,

Italian fiend!—Ah me, most credulous fool,

Egregious murderer, thief, anything

That's due to all the villains past, in being,

To come!—O, give me cord, or knife, or poison,

Some upright justicer! Thou, king, send out

For torturers ingenious: it is I

That all the abhor'd things o' the earth amend

By being worse than they. I am Posthumus,

That kill'd thy daughter:—villain-like, I lie,—

That caus'd a lesser villain than myself,

A sacrilegious thief, to do't:—the temple

Of virtue was she: yea, and she herself.
Spit, and throw stones, cast mire upon me, set
The dogs o' the street to bay me: every villain
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus; and
Be villany less than 'twast—O Imogen!
My queen, my life, my wife! O Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen!

Imo. Peace, my lord; hear, hear,—

Post. Shall's have a play of this? Thou scornful page,

There lie thy part. [Striking her: she falls.]

Pis. O, gentlemen, help! [mus!]
Mine and your mistress!—O, my lord Posthu-
You ne'er kill'd Imogen till now.—Help,
help!

Mine honour'd lady!

Cym. Does the world go round?

Post. How come these staggers on me?

Pis. Wake, my mistress!

Cym. If this be so, the gods do mean to strike me

To death with mortal joy.

Pis. How fares my mistress?

Imo. O, get thee from my sight;

Thou gav'st me poison: dangerous fellow,
hence!

Breathe not where princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen.

Pis. Lady,

The gods throw stones of sulphur on me if

That box I gave you was not thought by me

A precious thing: I had it from the queen.

Cym. New matter still?

Imo. It poison'd me.

Cor. O gods!—

I left out one thing which the queen confess'd,
Which must approve thee honest: If Pisanio
Have, said she, given his mistress that confection
Which I gave him for cordial, she is serv'd
As I would serve a rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius?

Cor. The queen, sir, very oft importun'd me

To temper poisons for her; still pretending

The satisfaction of her knowledge only

In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs,

Of no esteem: I, dreading that her purpose

Was of more danger, did compound for her

A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would cease

The present power of life; but in short time

All offices of nature should again

Do their due functions.—Have you ta'en of it?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead.

Bel. My boys,

There was our error.

Gui. This is sure Fidele.

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded lady from you?

Think that you are upon a rock; and now

Throw me again. [Embracing him.]

Post. Hang there like fruit, my soul,

Till the tree die!

Cym. How now, my flesh, my child!

What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?

Will thou not speak to me?

Imo. Your blessing, sir.

[Kneeling.]

Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye not;

You had a motive for it.

[To GUIDERIUS and ARVIRAGUS.]

Cym. My tears that fall
Prove holy water on thee! Imogen,
Thy mother's dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't, my lord.

Cym. O, she was naught; and long of her it was

That we meet here so strangely: but her son
Is gone, we know not how nor where.

Pis. My lord,
Now fear is from me, I'll speak troth. Lord

Cloten,

Upon my lady's missing, came to me

With his sword drawn; foam'd at the mouth, and swore,

If I discover'd not which way she was gone,

It was my instant death. By accident

I had a feigned letter of my master's

Then in my pocket; which directed him

To seek her on the mountains near to Milford;

Where, in a frenzy, in my master's garments,

Which he enforc'd from me, away he posts

With unchaste purpose, and with oath to violate

My lady's honour: what became of him

I further know not.

Gui. Let me end the story:

I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the gods forfend!

I would not thy good deeds should from my lips

Pluck a hard sentence: pr'ythee, valiant youth,

Deny't again.

Gui. I have spoke it, and I did it.

Cym. He was a prince. [Ime]

Gui. A most incivil one: the wrongs he did

Were nothing prince-like; for he did provoke me

With language that would make me spurn the

sea,

If it could so roar to me: I cut off's head;

And am right glad he is not standing here

To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorry for thee: [must]

By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and Endure our law: thou't dead.

Imo. That headless man

I thought had been my lord.

Cym. Bind the offender,

And take him from our presence.

Bel. Stay, sir king:

This man is better than the man he slew,

As well descended as thyself; and hath

More of thee merited than a band of Clotens

Had ever scar for.—Let his arms alone;

[To the Guard.]

They were not born for bondage.

Cym. Why, old soldier,

Wilt thou undo the worth thou art unpaid for

By tasting of our wrath? How of descent

As good as we?

Arv. In that he spake too far.

Cym. And thou shalt die for't.

Bel. We will die all three:

But I will prove that two on's are as good

As I have given out him.—My sons, I must,

For mine own part, unfold a dangerous speech,

Though, haply, well for you.

Arv. Your danger's

Ours.

Gui. And our good his.

Bel. Have at it, then!—

By leave,—thou hadst, great king, a subject who

Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him? he is
A banish'd traitor.

Bel. He it is that hath Assum'd this age: indeed, a banish'd man;
I know not how a traitor.

Cym. Take him hence:
The whole world shall not save him.

Bel. Not too hot:
First pay me for the nursing of thy sons;
And let it be confiscate all so soon,
As I have receiv'd it.

Cym. Nursing of my sons! [knee:
Bel. I am too blunt and saucy: here's my
Ere I arise I will prefer my sons;

Then spare not the old father. Mighty sir,
These two young gentlemen, that call me
father,

And think they are my sons, are none of mine;
They are the issue of your loins, my liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How! my issue!
Bel. So sure as you your father's. I, old
Morgan,

Am that Belarius whom you sometime banish'd:
Your pleasure was my mere offence, my punishment

Itself, and all my treason; that I suffer'd
Was all the harm I did. These gentle princes,
For such and so they are,—these twenty years
Have I train'd up: those arts they have as I Could put into them; my breeding, was, sir, as Your highness knows. Their nurse, Euriphile, Whom for the theft I wedded stole these children

Upon my banishment: I mov'd her to't;
Having receiv'd the punishment before
For that which I did then: beaten for loyalty
Excited me to treason: their dear loss,
The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shap'd
Unto my end of stealing them. But, gracious sir,
Here are your sons again; and I must lose
Two of the sweet'st companions in the world:—
The benediction of these covering heavens Fall on their heads like dew! for they are worthy

To inlay heaven with stars.

Cym. Thou weep'st, and speak'st.
The service that you three have done is more
Unlike than this thou tell'st. I lost my children:
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A pair of worthier sons.

Bel. Be pleas'd awhile.—
This gentleman, whom I call Polydore,
Most worthy prince, as yours, is true Guiderius:
This gentleman, my Cadwal, Arviragus,
Your younger princely son; he, sir, was lapp'd
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother, which, for more probation,
I can with ease produce.

Cym. Guiderius had
Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star;
It was a mark of wonder.

Bel. This is he;
Who hath upon him still that natural stamp:
It was wise nature's end in the donation,
To be his evidence now.

Cym. O, what, am I
A mother to the birth of three? Ne'er mother Rejoic'd deliverance more.—Bless'd may you
be,

That, after this strange starting from your orbs,
You may reign in them now!—O Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a kingdom.

Imo. No, my lord;
I have got two worlds by't.—O my gentle
brothers,

Have we thus met? O, never say hereafter
But I am truest speaker: you call'd me brother
When I was but your sister; I you brothers
When you were so indeed.

Cym. Did you e'er meet?
Arv. Ay, my good lord.

Cui. And at first meeting lov'd;
Continued so until we thought he died.

Cor. By the queen's dram she swallow'd.
Cym. O rare instinct!

When shall I hear all through? This fierce abridgment

Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in.—Where? how lov'd you?

And when came you to serve our Roman captive?

How parted with your brothers? how first met
them?

Why fled you from the court? and whither?
And your three motives to the battle, with
I know not how much more, should be demanded;

And all the other by-dependencies, [place
From chance to chance: but nor the time nor Will serve our long inter'gatories. See,
Posthumus anchors upon Imogen; [eye
And she, like harmless lightning, throws her
On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting
Each object with a joy: the counterchange
Is severally in all.—Let's quit this ground,
And smoke the temple with our sacrifices.—
Thou art my brother; so we'll hold thee ever.

[To BELARIUS.
Imo. You are my father too; and did relieve me,
To see this gracious season.

Cym. All o'erjoy'd,
Save these in bonds: let them be joyful too,
For they shall taste our comfort.

Imo. My good master,
I will yet do you service.

Luc. Happy be you!

Cym. The forlorn soldier, that so nobly fought,
He would have well becom'd this place, and grac'd

The thankings of a king.

Post. I am, sir,
The soldier that did company these three
In poor beseeching; 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then follow'd.—That I was he,
Speak, Iachimo: I had you down, and might
Have made you finish.

Iach. I am down again; [Kneeling.
But now my heavy conscience sinks my knee,
As then your force did. Take that life, beseech
you,

Which I so often owe: but your ring first;
And here the bracelet of the truest princess
That ever swore her feith.

Post. Kneel not to me:
The power that I have on you is to spare you;
The malice towards you to forgive you: live,
And deal with others better.

Cym. Nobly doom'd!
We'll learn our freeness of a son-in-law;
Pardon's the word to all.

Arv. You help us, sir,
As you did mean indeed to be our brother;
Joy'd are we that you are.

Post. Your servant, princes.—Good my lord
of Rome,
Call forth your soothsayer: as I slept, me-
thought

Great Jupiter, upon his eagle back
Appear'd to me, with other spritely shows
Of mine own kindred: when I wak'd I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness that I can Make no collection of it: let him show
His skill in the construction.

Luc. Philarmonus.—

Sooth. Here, my good lord.

Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Sooth. [Reads.] *Whenas a lion's whelp shall,
to himself unknown, without seeking find, and be embraced by a piece of tender air; and when
from a stately cedar shall be lopped branches,
which, being dead many years, shall after revive, be jointed to the old stock, and freshly
grow; then shall Posthumus end his miseries, Britain be fortunate, and flourish in peace and plenty.*

Thou, Leonatus, art the lion's whelp;
The fit and apt construction of thy name,
Being Leo-natus, doth import so much:
The piece of tender air, thy virtuous daughter,

[To CYMBELINE.]

Which we call mollis aer; and mollis aer
We term it mulier: which mulier I divine
Is this most constant wife; who even now,
Answering the letter of the oracle,
Unknown to you, unsought, were clipp'd about
With this most tender air.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Sooth. The lofty cedar, royal Cymbeline,
Personates thee: and thy lopp'd branches point
Thy two sons forth, who, by Belarius stol'n,
For many years thought dead, are now . . .

Well,
By peace we will begin:—and, Caius Lucius,
Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar,
And to the Roman empire; promising
To pay our wonted tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked queen;
Whom heavens, in justice both on her and hers,
Have laid most heavy hand.

Sooth. The fingers of the powers above do tune

The harmony of this peace. The vision,
Which I made known to Lucius ere the stroke
Of this yet scarce-cold battle, at this instant,
Is full accomplish'd; for the Roman eagle,
From south to west on wing soaring aloft,
Lessen'd herself, and in the beams o' the sun
So vanish'd: which foreshow'd our princely
eagle,

The imperial Cæsar, should again unite
His favour with the radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines here in the west.

Cym. Laud we the gods;
And let our crooked smokes climb to their nostrils

From our bless'd altars. Publish we this peace

To all our subjects. Set we forward: let
A Roman and a British ensign wave Friendly together; so through Lud's town
march:

And in the temple of great Jupiter
Our peace we'll ratify; seal it with feasts.—
Set on there!—Never was a war did cease, Ere bloody hands were wash'd, with such a peace. [Exeunt.]

TITUS ANDRONICUS

MARCUS ANDRONICUS, Tribune of the People, and Brother to TITUS.	CHIRON, }
LUCIUS, } Sons to TITUS ANDRONICUS.	AARON, a Moor, beloved by TAMORA.
QUINTUS, }	A Captain, Tribune, Messenger, and Clown,—Romans.
MARTIUS, }	Goths and Romans.
MUTIUS, }	TAMORA, Queen of the Goths.
YOUNG LUCIUS, a Boy, Son to LUCIUS.	LAVINIA, Daughter to TITUS ANDRONICUS.
PUBLIUS, Son to MARCUS the Tribune.	A Nurse, and a black Child.
	Kinsmen of TITUS, Senators, Tribunes, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE,—ROME, and the Country near it.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—ROME. Before the Capitol.

The Tomb of the ANDRONICI appearing; the Tribunes and Senators aloft. Enter, below, SATURNINUS and his Followers on one side, and BASSIANUS and his Followers on the other, with drums and colours.

Sat. Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms;
And, countrymen, my loving followers,
Plead my successive title with your swords:
I am his first-born son that was the last
That wore the imperial diadem of Rome:
Then let my father's honours live in me,
Nor wrong mine age with this indignity.

Bas. Romans,—friends, followers, favourers of my right,—

If ever Bassianus, Cæsar's son,
Were gracious in the eyes of royal Rome,
Keep then, this passage to the Capitol;
And suffer not dishonour to approach
The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate,
To justice, continence, and nobility:
But let desert in pure election shine;
And, Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, aloft, with the crown.

Marc. Princes,—that strive by factions and by friends
Ambitiously for rule and empery,— [stand
Know that the people of Rome, for whom we
A special party, have by common voice,
In election for the Roman empery,
Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius
For many good and great deserts to Rome:

A nobler man, a braver warrior,
Lives not this day within the city walls:
He by the senate is accited home
From weary wars against the barbarous Goths;
That, with his sons, a terror to our foes,
Hath yok'd a nation strong, train'd up in arms.
Ten years are spent since first he undertook
This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms
Our enemies' pride: five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
In coffins from the field;
And now at last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms.
Let us entreat,—by honour of his name
Whom worthily you would have now succeed,
And in the Capitol and senate's right,
Whom you pretend to honour and adore,—
That you withdraw you, and abate your
strength;

Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should
Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!

Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
In thy uprightness and integrity,
And so I love and honour thee and thine,
Thy noble brother Titus and his sons,
And her to whom my thoughts are humbled all,
Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends;
And to my fortunes and the people's favour
Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exeunt the Followers of BAS.]

Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my right,

I thank you all, and here dismiss you all;
And to the love and favour of my country
Commit myself, my person, and the cause.

[Exeunt the Followers of SAT.]

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me
As I am confident and kind to thee.—
Open the gates, tribunes, and let me in.

Bas. Tribunes, and me, a poor competitor.

[Flourish. Exeunt; SAT. and BAS. go up into the Capitol.]

Enter a Captain.

Cap. Romans, make way. The good An-dronicus,

Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honour and with fortune is return'd
From where he circumscribed with his sword,
And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

*Flourish of trumpets, &c. Enter MARTIUS and MUTIUS; after them two Men bearing a coffin covered with black; then LUCIUS and QUINTUS. After them TITUS ANDRONICUS; and then TAMORA, with ALARBUS, DEME-TRIUS, CHIRON, AARON, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and People following.
The bearers set down the coffin, and TITUS speaks.*

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!

Lo, as the bark that hath discharg'd her freight
Returns with precious lading to the bay

From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,

Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-salute his country with his tears,—
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.—
Thou great defender of this Capitol,
Stand gracious to the rites that we intend!—
Romans, of five-and-twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that King Priam had,
Behold the poor remains, alive and dead!
These that survive let Rome reward with love;
These that I bring unto their latest home;
With burial amongst their ancestors:
Here Goths have given me leave to sheathe my sword.

Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburned yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?
Make way to lay them by their brethren.—

[The tomb is opened.]

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more!

Luc. Give us the proudest prisoner of the Goths,

That we may hew his limbs, and on a pile
Ad manes fratrum sacrifice his flesh
Before this earthly prison of their bones;
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.

Tit. I give him you,—the noblest that survives,

The eldest son of this distressed queen.

Tam. Stay, Roman brethren!—Gracious conqueror,

Victorious Titus, rue the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion for her son:
And if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O, think my son to be as dear to me!
Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captivè to thee and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets
For valiant doings in their country's cause?
O, if to fight for king and common weal
Were piety in thine, it is in these.
Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood:
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods?
Draw near them, then, in being merciful:
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge:
Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born son.

Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon
me.

These are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld

Alive and dead; and for their brethren slain
~~Religiously they ask a sacrifice:~~
To this your son is mark'd; and die he must,
To appease their groaning shadows that are gone.

Luc. Away with him! and make a fire
straight;

And with our swords, upon a pile of wood
Let's hew his limbs till they be clean consum'd.

[Exeunt LUC., QUIN., MARC., and MUT., with ALARBUS.]

Tam. O cruel, irreligious piety!

Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?

Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious Rome.
Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening looks.
Then, madam, stand resolv'd; but hope withal
The self-same gods that arm'd the Queen of Troy

With opportunity of sharp revenge
Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,
May favour Tamora, the queen of Goths,— When Goths were Goths and Tamora was
queen,—

To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Re-enter LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS with their swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd
Our Roman rites: Alarbus' limbs are lopp'd,
And entrails feed the sacrificing fire,
Whose smoke like incense doth perfume the sky—

Remaineth naught but to inter our brethren,
And with loud 'larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
Make this his latest farewell to their souls.
(Trumpets sounded and the coffin laid in the tomb.)

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons;
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in
rest,

Secure from worldly chances and mishaps!
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells,
Here grow no damned grudges; here are no
storms,

No noise, but silence and eternal sleep:

Enter LAVINIA.

In peace and honour rest you here, my sons!

Lav. In peace and honour live Lord Titus
long;

My noble lord and father, live in fame!
Lo, at this tomb my tributary tears
I render for my brethren's obsequies;
And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy
Shed on the earth for thy return to Rome:
O, bless me here with thy victorious hand,
Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud!

Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly reserv'd

The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!—
Lavinia, live; outlive thy father's days,
And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!

*Enter, below, MARCUS ANDRONICUS and Tribunes; re-enter SATURNINUS, BASSIANUS,
and Attendants.*

Marc. Long live Lord Titus, my beloved
brother,
Gracious triumpher in the eyes of Rome!

Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother
Marcus. [ful wars,

Marc. And welcome, nephews, from success-
You that survive and you that sleep in fame!
Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all,
That in your country's service drew your
swords:

But safer triumph is this funeral pomp

That hath aspir'd to Solon's happiness,
And triumphs over chance in honour's bed.—
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whose friend in justice thou hast ever been,
Send thee by me, their tribune and their trust,
This pallament of white and spotless hue;
And name thee in election for the empire
With these our late-deceased emperor's sons:
Be candidatus, then, and put it on,
And help to set a head on headless Rome.

Tit. A better head her glorious body fits
Than his that shakes for age and feebleness:
What, should I don this robe and trouble you?
Be chosen with proclamations to-day,
To-morrow yield up rule, resign my life,
And set abroad new business for you all?
Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years,
And led my country's strength successfully,
And burned one-and-twenty valiant sons,
Knighted in field, slain manfully in arms,
In right and service of their noble country:
Give me a staff of honour for mine age,
But not a sceptre to control the world:
Upright he held it, lords, that held it last.

Marc. Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the empire.

Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?

Tit. Patience, Prince Saturninus.

Sat. Romans, do me right;—
Patricians, draw your swords, and sheathe them
not

Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor.—

Andronicus, would thou wert shipp'd to hell
Rather than rob me of the people's hearts!

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That noble-minded Titus means to thee!

Tit. Content thee, prince; I will restore to thee [selves.

The people's hearts, and wean them from them—
Bas. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,

But honour thee, and will do till I die.

My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends,
I will most thankful be; and thanks to men
Of noble minds is honourable meed. [here,

Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes
I ask your voices and your suffrages:

Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?
Trib. To gratify the good Andronicus,

And gratulate his safe return to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes, I thank you: and this suit I make,

That you create your emperor's eldest son,
Lord Saturnine; whose virtues will, I hope,

Reflect on Rome as Titan's rays on earth,
And open justice in this commonweal:

Then, if you will elect by my advice,
Crown him, and say, Long live our emperor!

Marc. With voices and applause of every sort,

Patricians and plebeians, we create
Lord Saturninus Rome's great emperor;

And say, Long live our emperor Saturnine!
[A long flourish.

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done
To us in our election this day

I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
And will with deeds requite thy gentleness;

And for an onset, Titus, to advance

Thy name and honourable family,
Lavinia will I make my empress,
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse:
Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and in this match

I hold me highly honour'd of your grace:
And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,—
King and commander of our commonweal,
The wide world's emperor,—do I consecrate
My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners;
Presents well worthy Rome's imperial lord:
Receive them, then, the tribute that I owe,
Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
How proud I am of thee and of thy gifts
Rome shall record; and when I do forget
The least of these unspeakable deserts,
Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. [To TAMORA.] Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor;
To him that for your honour and your state
Will use you nobly and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue
That I would choose were I to choose anew.—
Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance:
Though chance of war hath wrought this change
of cheer,

Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome:
Princely shall be thy usage every way.

Rest on my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes: madam, he comforts you

Can make you greater than the Queen of Goths.—

Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?

Lav. Not I, my lord; with true nobility
Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia.—Romans, let us go:

Ransomless here we set our prisoners free:
Proclaim our honours, lords, with trumpet and drum.

[Flourish. SAT. courts TAMORA in dumb show.

Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine. [Seizing LAVINIA.]

Tit. How, sir! are you in earnest, then, my
lord?

Bas. Ay, noble Titus; and resolv'd withal
To do myself this reason and this right.

Marc. Suum cuique is our Roman justice:
This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will and shall, if Lucius live. [peror's guard?—

Tit. Traitors, avaunt!—Where is the em-treason, my lord,—Lavinia is surpris'd!

Sat. Surpris'd! by whom?

Bas. By him that justly may
Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.
[Exeunt BAS. and MAR. with LAV.

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence
away,
And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exeunt LUC., QUIN., and MAR.

Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.

Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What, villain boy!
Barr'st me my way in Rome?

Mut. [Stabbing MUTIUS.
Help, Lucius, help!
[Dies.]

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust; and more than so,

In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou nor he are any sons of mine;
My sons would never so dishonour me:
Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will; but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawful promiss'd love. [Exit.]

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her
not,

Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:
I'll trust by leisure him that mocks me once;
Thee never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,
Confederates all thus to dishonour me.

Was there none else in Rome to make a stale
But Saturnine? Full well, Andronicus,
Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,
That said'st I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these? [ing piece

Sat. But go thy ways; go, give the change
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,

To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart. [Goths,—

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, Queen of That, like the stately Phoebe 'mongst her nymphs,

Dost overshadow the gallant dames of Rome,—
If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,

Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, Queen of Goths, dost thou applaud my choice?

And here I swear by all the Roman gods,— Sith priest and holy water are so near,

And tapers burn so bright, and everything
In readiness for Hymenæus stand,—

I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place

I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome
I swear,

If Saturnine advance the Queen of Goths,
She will a handmaid be to his desires,

A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon.—Lords, accompany

Your noble emperor and his lovely bride,
Sent by the heavens for Prince Saturnine,

Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered;
There shall we consecrate our spousal rites.

[Exeunt SAT. and his Followers; TAM. and her sons; AARON and Goths.

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride.—
Titus, when wert thou wont to walk alone,

Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Marc. O Titus, see, O see what thou hast
done!

In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,—

Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed
That hath dishonour'd all our family;
Unworthy brother and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial, as becomes;
Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb:—

This monument five hundred years hath stood,
Which I have sumptuously re-edified:
Here none but soldiers and Rome's servitors
Repose in fame; none basely slain in brawls:—
Bury him where you can, he comes not here.

Marc. My lord, this is impiety in you:
My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him;
He must be buried with his brethren.

Quin. and Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany. [that word?

Tit. And shall! What villain was it spake Quin. He that would vouch it in any place but here. [spite?

Tit. What, would you bury him in my de-
Marc. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest, [wounded:

And with these boys mine honour thou hast
My foes I do repute you every one;
So trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Marc. He is not with himself; let us withdraw.

Quin. Not I, till Mutius' bones be buried.
[MARCUS and the Sons of TITUS kneel.

Marc. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead,— [speak,—

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature
Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

Marc. Renowned Titus, more than half my soul,—

Luc. Dear father, soul and substance of us
all,—

Marc. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter
His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,
That died in honour and Lavinia's cause:
Thou art a Roman,—be not barbarous.
The Greeks upon advice did bury Ajax,
That slew himself; and wise Laertes' son
Did graciously plead for his funerals:
Let not young Mutius, then, that was thy joy,
Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise:
The dismal'st day is this that e'er I saw,
To be dishonour'd by my sons in Rome!—
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

[MUTIUS is put into the tomb.
Luc. There he thy bones, sweet Mutius, with thy friends,

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb.

All. [Kneeling.] No man shed tears for noble
Mutius;

He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.

Marc. My lord,—to step out of these dreary dumps,—

How comes it that the subtle Queen of Goths
Is of a sudden thus advanc'd in Rome?

Tit. I know not, Marcus; but I know it is,— Whether by device or no, the heavens can tell:

Is she not, then, beholden to the man
That brought her for this high good turn so far?
Marc. Yes, and will nobly him remunerate.

Flourish. Re-enter, at one side, SATURNINUS attended; TAMORA, DEMETRIUS, CHIRON, and AARON: at the other, BASSIANUS LAV-INIA, and others.

Sat. So, Bassianus, you have play'd your prize:

God give you joy, sir, of your gallant bride!

Bas. And you of yours, my lord! I say no
more,

Nor wish no less; and so I take my leave.

Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law or we have
power,

Thou and thy faction shall repent this rape.

Bas. Rape, call you it, my lord, to seize my own,

My true-betrothed love, and now my wife?

But let the laws of Rome determine all;
Meanwhile I am possess'd of that is mine. [us;

Sat. 'Tis good, sir: you are very short with
But if we live we'll be as sharp with you.

Bas. My lord, what I have done, as best I
may,

Answer I must, and shall do with my life.

Only this much I give your grace to know,—

By all the duties that I owe to Rome,

This noble gentleman, Lord Titus here,

Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd,

That, in the rescue of Lavinia,

With his own hand did slay his youngest son,

In zeal to you, and highly mov'd to wrath

To be controll'd in that he frankly gave:

Receive him, then, to favour, Saturnine,

That hath express'd himself, in all his deeds,

A father and a friend to thee and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds:

'Tis thou and those that have dishonour'd me.

Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge
How I have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine!

Tam. My worthy lord, if ever Tamora

Were gracious in those princely eyes of thine,

Then hear me speak indifferently for all;

And at my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.

Sat. What, madam! be dishonour'd openly,

And basely put it up without revenge?

Tam. Not so, my lord; the gods of Rome forfend

I should be author to dishonour you!

But on mine honour dare I undertake

For good Lord Titus, innocence in all,

Whose fury not dissembled speaks his griefs:

Then at my suit look graciously on him;

Lose not so noble a friend on vain suppose,

Nor with sour looks afflict his gentle heart.—

My lord, be rul'd by me, be won at last;

Dissemble all your griefs and discontents: [Aside.

You are but newly planted in your throne;

Lest, then, the people and patricians too,

Upon a just survey, take Titus' part,

And so supplant you for ingratitude,—

Which Rome reputes to be a heinous sin,—

Yield at entreats; and then let me alone:

I'll find a day to massacre them all,

And raze their faction and their family,

The cruel father and his traitorous sons,
To whom I sued for my dear son's life;
And make them know what 'tis to let a queen
Kneel in the streets and beg for grace in vain.
Come, come, sweet emperor,—come, Andronicus,

Take up this good old man, and cheer the heart
That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus, rise; my empress hath prevail'd.

Tit. I thank your majesty and her, my lord:
These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.

Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus;
And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
That I have reconcil'd your friends and you.—
For you, Prince Bassianus, I have pass'd
My word and promise to the emperor
That you will be more mild and tractable.—
And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia,—
By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.

Luc. We do; and vow to heaven and to his highness

That what we did was mildly as we might,
Tendering our sister's honour and our own.

Marc. That on mine honour here I do protest.

Sat. Away, and talk not; trouble us no more.

Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends:

The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace;
I will not be denied: sweet heart, look back.

Sat. Marcus, for thy sake and thy brother's
here,

And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,
I do remit these young men's heinous faults:
Stand up.—

Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
I found a friend; and sure as death I swore
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,

You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends.
This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.

Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and hound we'll give your grace bonjour.

Sat. Be it so, Titus, and gramercy too.
[Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—ROME. Before the Palace.

Enter AARON.

Aaron. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,
Safe out of fortune's shot; and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder's crack or lightning's flash;
Advanc'd above pale envy's threatening reach.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glistening coach.
And overlooks the highest-peering hill;
So Tamora:
Upon her will doth earthly honour wait,

And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Then, Aaron, arm thy heart and fit thy thoughts
To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph
long

Hast prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains,
And faster bound to Aaron's charming eyes
Than is Prometheus tied to Caucasus.

Away with slavish weeds and servile thought!
I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made empress.
To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis, this nymph,
This syren, that will charm Rome's Saturnine,
And see his shipwreck and his common-weal's.—

Holla! what storm is this?

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON braving

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge

And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd;
And may, for aught thou know'st, affected be.

Chi. Demetrius, thou dost over-ween in all;
And so in this, to bear me down with braves.

'Tis not the difference of a year or two
Makes me less gracious or thee more fortunate:

I am as able and as fit as thou
To serve and to deserve my mistress' grace;

And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
And plead my passion for Lavinia's love.

Aar. [Aside.] Clubs, clubs! these lovers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvic'd,

Gave you a dancing-rapier by your side,
Are you so desperate grown to threat your
friends?

Go to; have your lath glu'd within your sheath
Till you know better how to handle it. [Have,

Chi. Meanwhile, sir, with the little skill I
Full well shalt thou perceive how much I dare,

Dem. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave?

[They draw.

Aar. [Coming forward.] Why, how now,
lords!

So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
And maintain such a quarrel openly?

Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge:
I would not for a million of gold

The cause were known to them it most concerns;

Nor would you your noble mother for much more
Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.

For shame, put up.

Dem. Not I, till I have sheath'd
My rapier in his bosom, and withal

Thrust these reproachful speeches down his throat

That he hath breath'd in my dishonour here.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd and full resolv'd,— [tongue,

Foul-spoken coward, that thunder'st with thy
And with thy weapon nothing dar'st perform.

Aar. Away, I say!

Now, by the gods that warlike Goths adore,
This petty brabble will undo us all.—

Why, lords, and think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right?

What is, Lavinia, then, become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd
Without controulment, justice, or revenge?
Young lords, beware! and should the empress know [please.]

This discord's ground, the music would not Chi. I care not, I, knew she and all the world:

I love Lavinia more than all the world. ←

Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:

Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are you mad! or know ye not
in Rome

How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love?
I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths
Would I propose to achieve her whom I love.
Aar. To achieve her!—How?

Dem. Why mak'st thou it so strange?
She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore may be won;
She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd.
What, man! more water glideth by the mill
Than wots the miller of; and easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know:
Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother,
Better than he have worn Vulcan's badge.

Aar. [Aside.] Ay, and as good as Saturninus
may.

Dem. Then why should he despair that court it

With words, fair looks, and liberality?

What, hast not thou full often struck a doe,
And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Aar. Why, then, it seems some certain snatch or so

Would serve you turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd.

Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aar. Would you had hit it too!

Then should not we be tir'd with this ado.
Why, hark ye, hark ye,—and are you such fools
To square for this? Would it offend you, then,
That both should speed?

Chi. Faith, not me.

Dem. Nor me, so I were one.

Aar. For shame, be friends, and join for that you jar:

'Tis policy and stratagem must do
That you affect; and so must you resolve
That which you cannot as you would achieve,
You must performe accomplish as you may.
Take this of me,—Lucrece was not more chaste
Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.

[A speedier course than lingering languishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.

My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:
The forest-walks are wide and spacious;
And many unfrequented plots there are Fitted by kind for rape and villany:
Single you thither, then, this dainty doe,
And strike her home by force if not by words:
This way, or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our empress, with her sacred wit
To villany and vengeance consecrate,

Will we acquaint with all that we intend;
And she shall file our engines with advice
That will not suffer you to square yourselves,
But to your wishes' height advance you both.
The emperor's court is like the house of fame,
The palace full of tongues, of eyes, and ears:
The woods are ruthless, dreadful, deaf, and dull;

There speak and strike, brave boys, and take your turns; [eye]

There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's
And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice.

Dem. Sit fas aut nefas, till I find the stream
To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits,
Per Styga, per manes vehor. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A Forest near Rome: a Lodge seen at a distance. Horns and cry of hounds heard.

Enter TITUS ANDRONICUS, with Hunters, &c.,
MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gay,

The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green.

Uncouple here, and let us make a bay,
And wake the emperor and his lovely bride,
And rouse the prince, and ring a hunter's peal,
That all the court may echo with the noise.

Sons, let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To attend the emperor's person carefully:
I have been troubled in my sleep this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Horns wind a peal. Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, BASSIANUS, LAVINIA, DEMETRIUS,
CHIRON, and Attendants.

Many good-morrows to your majesty;—

Madam, to you as many and as good:—

I promised your grace a hunter's peal.

Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lord;

Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.

Bas. Lavinia, how say you?

Lav. I say no;

I have been broad awake two hour or more.

Sat. Come on, then, horse and chariots let us have.

And to our sport.—[To TAMORA.] Madam, now shall ye see

Our Roman hunting.

Marc. I have dogs, my lord,

Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory top

Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game

Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.

Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse
nor hound,

But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—A lonely part of the Forest.

Enter AARON with a bag of gold.

Aaron. He that had wit would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,

And never after to inherit it.

Let him that thinks of me so abjectly
Know that this gold must coin a stratagem,
Which, cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent piece of villany;
And so repose, sweet gold, for thy unrest

[Hides the gold.

That have their alms out of the empress' chest.

Enter TAMORA.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad

When everything doth make a gleeful boast?
The birds chant melody on every bush;
The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun;
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground:
Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,
And, whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds,

Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,
Let us sit down and mark their yelping noise;
And,—after conflict such as was suppos'd
The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,—
We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
Whilst hounds and horns and sweet melodious birds

Be unto us as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby to bring her babe asleep.

Aar. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,

Saturn is dominator over mine:
What signifies my deadly-standing eye,
My silence and my cloudy melancholy,
My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls
Even as an adder when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venereal signs,
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.
Hark, Tamora,—the empress of my soul,
Which never hopes more heaven than rests in
thee,—

This is the day of doom for Bassianus:
His Philomel must lose her tongue to-day;
Thy sons make pillage of her cha-
And wash their hands in Bassianus' blood.
Seest thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal-plotted scroll.—
Now question me no more,—we are espied;
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.

Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!

[comes:

Aar. No more, great empress, Bassianus
Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons
To back thy quarrels, whatso'er they be.

[Exit.

Enter BASSIANUS and LAVINIA.

Bas. Who have we here? Rome's royal
empress,

Unfurnish'd of her well-beseeming troop?
Or is it Dian, habited like her,
Who hath abandoned her holy groves
To see the general hunting in this forest?

Tam. Saucy controller of our private steps!
Had I the power that some day Dian had,
Thy temples should be planted presently
With horns, as was Actæon's; and the hounds
Should drive upon thy new-transformed limbs,
Unmannerly intruder as thou art!

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,
'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in hornung;
And to be doubted that your Moor and you
Are singled forth to try experiments: [day!
Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-
'Tis pity they should take him for a stag.

Bas. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cim-merian

Doth make your honour of his body's hue,
Spotted, detested, and abominable.
Why are you sequester'd from all your train,
Dismounted from your snow-white goodlysteed,
And wander'd hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied but with a barbarous Moor,
If foul desire had not conducted you?

Lav. And, being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness.—I pray you, let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour's love;
This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Bas. The king my brother shall have note of this.

[noted long:

Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him
Good king, to be so mightily abus'd?

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother!

Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?

These two have 'tic'd me hither to this place:—
A barren detested vale you see it is;
The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean
O'ercome with moss and baleful mistletoe:
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl or fatal raven:—
And when they show'd me this abhorred pit
They told me, here at dead time of the night
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries
As any mortal body hearing it
Should straight fall mad or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hellish tale
But straight they told me they would bind me
here

Unto the body of a dismal yew,
And leave me to this miserable death:
And then they call'd me foul adulteress,
Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms
That ever ear did hear to such effect:
And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed.
Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son.

[Stabs BASSIANUS.

Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength.

[Also stabs BAS., who dies.

Lav. Ay, come, Semiramis,—nay, barbarous Tamora,

For no name fits thy nature but thy own!

Tam. Give me thy poniard;—you shall know, my boys, [wrong.]

Your mother's hand shall right your mother's Dem. Stay, madam; here is more belongs to her; [straw:]

First thrash the corn, then after burn the This minion stood upon her chastity, Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty, [ness:] And with that painted hope braves your mighti- And shall she carry this unto her grave?

Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch. Drag hence her husband to some secret hole, And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when ye have the honey ye desire, Let not this wasp outlive, us both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam, we will make that sure.—

Come, mistress, now perforce we will enjoy That nice-preserved honesty of yours. [face,—

Lav. O Tamora! thou bear'st a woman's

Tam. I will not hear her speak; away with her! [a word.]

Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but Dem. Listen, fair madam: let it be your glory

To see her tears; but be your heart to them As unrelenting flint to drops of rain. [the dam?]

Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach O, do not learn her wrath,—she taught it thee; The milk thou suck'dst from her did turn to marble;

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny.— Yet every mother breeds not sons alike:

Do thou entreat her show a woman pity. [To CHIRON.

Chi. What, wouldst thou have me prove myself a bastard? [lark:]

Lav. 'Tis true, the raven doth not hatch a Yet I have heard —O, could I find it now!—

The hon, mov'd with pity, did endure To have his princely paws par'd all away:

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children, The whilst their own birds famish in their nests

O, be to me, though thy heart say no, Nothing so kind, but something pitiful!

Tam. I know not what it means:—away with her!

Lav. O, let me teach thee! for my father's sake,

That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee,

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.

Tam. F—, thou in person ne'er offended me,

Even for his sake am I pitiless.—

Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain To save your brother from the sacrifice;

But fierce Andronicus would not relent: Therefore away with her, and use her as you will;

The worse to her the better lov'd of me.

Lav. O Tamara, be call'd a gentle queen, And with thine own hands kill me in this place!

For 'tis not life that I have begg'd so long; Poor I was slain when Bassianus died.

Tam. What begg'st thou, then? fond woman, let me go.

Lav. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,

That womanhood denies my tongue to tell: O, keep me from their worse than killing lust,

And tumble me into some loathsome pit, Where never man's eye may behold my body:

Do this, and be a charitable murderer. [fee:]

Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their No, let them satisfy their lust on thee. [long.]

Dem. Away! for thou hast stay'd us here too Lav. No grace? no womanhood? Ah, beastly creature!

The blot and enemy to our general name! Confusion fall,—

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth:—bring thou her husband:

This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him. [DEM. throws BAS.'S body into the pit; then exit with CHI., dragging off LAV.]

Tam. Farewell, my sons: see that you make her sure:—

Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed Till all the Andronici be made away.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor, And let my spleenful sons this trull deflower. [Exit.]

Re-enter AARON, with QUINTUS and MARTIUS.

Aar. Come on, my lords, the better foot before.

Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit Where I espied the panther fast asleep.

Quin. My sight is very dull, whate'er it bodes.

Mart. And mine, I promise you; were't not for shame,

Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile. [Falls into the pit.]

Quin. What, art thou fallen?—What subtle hole is this, [briers,

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood

As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers? A very fatal place it seems to me.— [fall]

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the Mart. O brother, with the dismallest object hurt

That ever eye with sight made heart lament!

Aar. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find them here,

That he thereby may give a likely guess How these were they that made away his brother. [Exit.]

Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out

From this unhallow'd and blood-stained hole?

Quin. I am surprised with an uncouth fear; A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints;

My heart suspects more than mine eye can see. Mart. To prove thou hast a true divining heart,

Aaron and thou look down into this den, And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quin. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart

Will not permit mine eyes once to behold The thing whereat it trembles by surmise:

O, tell me how it is; for ne'er till now

Was I a child to fear I know not what.

Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed here,
All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,
In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.

Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know his he?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring that lightens all the hole,
Which, like a taper in some monument,
Doth shine upon the dead man's earthy cheeks,
And shows the ragged entrails of the pit:
So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus
When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.
O brother, help me with thy fainting hand,—
If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—
Out of this fell devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Cocythus' misty mouth.

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee out;

Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,
I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.
I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.

Quin. Thy hand once more; I will not lose
Till thou art here aloft, or I below:

Thou canst not come to me,—I come to thee.
[Falls in.

Enter SATURNINUS with AARON.

Sat. Along with me: I'll see what hole is
here,

And what he is that now is leap'd into it.—
Say, who art thou that lately didst descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth!

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus,
Brought hither in a most unlucky hour,
To find thy brother Bassianus dead. [jest:

Sat. My brother dead? I know thou dost but
He and his lady both are at the lodge
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;
'Tis not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive;

But, out, alas! here have we found him dead.

Re-enter TAMORA, with Attendants; TITUS ANDRONICUS and LUCIUS.

Tam. Where is my lord the king?

Sat. Here, Tamora; though griev'd with killing grief.

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?

Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound:

Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal writ, [Giving a letter.

The complot of this timeless tragedy;
And wonder greatly that man's face can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. [Reads.] An if we miss to meet him handsomely,—

Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 'tis we mean,—

Do thou so much as dig the grave for him:
Thou know'st our meaning. Look for thy reward

Among the nettles at the elder tree
Which overspreads the mouth of that same pit

Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.

Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friends.

O Tamora! was ever heard the like?—

This is the pit and this the elder tree:—

Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out

That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aar. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.

[Showing it.

Sat. [To TITUS.] Two of thy whelps, fell curs
of bloody kind,

Have here bereft my brother of his life.—

Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison:

There let them bide until we have devis'd

Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What, are they in this pit! O wondrous thing?

How easily murder is discovered!

Tit. High emperor, upon my feeble knee

I beg this boon, with tears not lightly shed.

That this fell fault of my accursed sons,—

Accursed if the fault be prov'd in them,—

Sat. If it be prov'd! you see it is apparent.—

Who found this letter! Tamora, was it you!

Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.

Tit. I did, my lord: yet let me be their bail;

For, by my father's reverend tomb, I vow

They shall be ready at thy highness' will

To answer their suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not bail them: see thou follow me.— [murderers:

Some bring the murder'd body, some the

Let them not speak a word,—the guilt is plain;

For, by my soul, were there worse end than
death,

That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king:

Fear not thy sons; they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them.

[Exeunt severally. Attendants bearing the body.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the Forest.

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, with LAVINIA ravished; her hands cut off, and her tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell, and if thy tongue can
speak,

Who 'twas that cut thy tongue and ravish'd thee

Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so,

And if thy stumps will let thee play the scribe.

Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can scrawl. [hands.

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy

Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash;

And so let's leave her to her silent walks.

Chi. An 'twere my case I should go hang myself. [the cord.

Dem. If thou hadst hands to help thee knit [Exeunt DEM. and CHI.

Enter MARCUS.

Marc. Who is this,—my niece,—that flies
away so fast?—

Cousin, a word; where is your husband!—

If I do dream, would all my wealth would wake me!

If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!—
Speak, gentle niece,—what stern ungentle hands [bare
Have lopp'd, and hew'd, and made thy body
Of her two branches,—those sweet ornaments Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in,

And might not gain so great a happiness
As have thy love! Why dost not speak to me?—
Alas, a crimson river of warm blood,
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy rosed lips,
Coming and going with thy honeyed breath.
But sure some Tereus hath deflowered thee,
And lest thou shouldst detect him, cut thy
tongue.

Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame:

And notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—

Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan's face
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.
Shall I speak for thee! shall I say 'tis so?

O, that I knew thy heart, and knew the beast,
That I might rail at him, to ease my mind!
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.

Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind:

But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
A craftier Tereus, cousin, hast thou met,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off
That could have better sew'd than Philomel.

O, had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss them, [life!

He would not then have touch'd them for his
Or had he heard the heavenly harmony
Which that sweet tongue hath made,

He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep
As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.

Come, let us go, and make thy father blind;
For such a sight will blind a father's eye.

One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;

What will whole months of tears thy father's eyes!

Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee;
O, could our mourning ease thy misery!

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—ROME. A Street.

Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of Justice, with MARTIUS and QUINTUS bound, passing on to the place of execution; TITUS going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes,
stay!

For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd;
And for these bitter tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;
Be pitiful to my condemned sons,
Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought.

For two-and-twenty sons I never we
Because they died in honour's lofty!

For these, good tribunes, in the dust I write [Throwing himself on the ground.
My heart's deep languor and my soul's sad
tears;

Let my tears stanch the earth's dry appetite;
My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.

[Exeunt Sen., Trib., &c., with the prisoners.
O earth I will befriend thee more with rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient ruins,
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still;
In winter, with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter LUCIUS with his sword drawn.

O reverend tribunes! O gentle aged men!
Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;
And let me say, that never wept before,
My tears are now prevailing orators.—

Luc. O noble father, you lament in vain:
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by;
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead.—

Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak. [hear

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did
They would not mark me; or if they did mark
They would not pity me; yet plead I must,
And bootless unto them.

Therefore I tell my sorrows to the stones;
Why, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they are better than the
tribunes,

For that they will not intercept my tale:
When I do weep they humble at my feet
Receive my tears and seem to weep with me;
And were they but attired in grave weeds
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.

A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than stones;

A stone is silent, and offendeth not,—
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death. [Rises.

But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn! [death:

Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their
For which attempt the judges have pronounc'd
My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O happy man! they have befriended
thee.

Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banished!—
But who comes with our brother Marcus here!

Enter MARCUS and LAVINIA.

Marc. Titus, prepare thy aged eyes to weep;
Or if not so, thy noble heart to break:
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me! let me see it then.

Marc. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ay me! this object kills me! [her.—
Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon Speak, my Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight!
What fool hath added water to the sea,
Or brought a fagot to bright-burning Troy!
My grief was at the height before thou cam'st;
And now, like Nilus, it disdaineth bounds.
Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too;
For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain;
And they have nurs'd this woe in feeding life;
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use:
Now all the service I require of them
Is that the one will help to cut the other.—
'Tis well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands;
For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?

Marc. O, that delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage,
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear!

Luc. O, say thou for her, who hath done this deed!

Marc. O, thus I found her, straying in the park,

Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer
That hath receiv'd some unrecurrent wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her

Hath hurt me more than had he kill'd me dead:
For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea;
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sons are gone;
Here stands my other son, a banish'd man;
And here my brother, weeping at my woes:
But that which gives my soul the greatest spurn
Is dear Lavinia, dearer than my soul.—
Had I but seen thy picture in this plight
It would have maddened me: what shall I do
Now I behold thy lively body so!
Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy tears,
Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:
Thy husband he is dead; and for his death
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.
Look, Marcus!—ah, son Lucius, look on her!
When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears
Stood on her cheeks, as doth the honey dew]
Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.

Marc. Perchance she weeps because they kill'd her husband:

Perchance because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,

Because the law hath ta'en revenge on them.—
No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.—
Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips;
Or make some sign how I may do thee ease:
Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain,
Looking all downwards, to behold our cheeks

How they are stain'd, as meadows, yet not dry.
With miry slime left on them by a flood!
And in the fountain shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness,
And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears!
Or shall we cut away our hands like thine!
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows

Pass the remainder of our hateful days!
What shall we do! let us, that have our tongues,
Plot some device of further misery,
To make us wonder'd at in time to come.

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears, for at your grief

See how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Marc. Patience, dear niece.—Good Titus, dry thine eyes.

Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I wot
Thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine,
For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.

Luc. Ah, my Lavinia, I will wipe thy cheeks.

Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs:

Had she a tongue to speak, now would she say

That to her brother which I said to thee:
His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
O, what a sympathy of woe is this,—
As far from help as limbo is from bliss!

Enter AARON.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor
Sends thee this word,—that if thou love thy sons,

Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand
And send it to the king: he for the same
Will send thee hither both thy sons alive
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O gracious emperor! O gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a lark
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise!
With all my heart I'll send the emperor
My hand:

Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Luc. Stay, father! for that noble hand of thine,

That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serve the turn.
My youth can better spare my blood than you;
And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.

Marc. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,

And rear'd aloft the bloody battle-axe,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle!
O, none of both but are of high desert:
My hand hath been but idle; let it serve
To ransom my two nephews from their death;
Then have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come, agree whose hand shall go along,

For fear they die before their pardon come.

Marc. My hand shall go.

Luc. By heaven, it shall not go!

Tit. Sirs, strive no more: such wither'd herbs as these

Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son,

Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Marc. And for our father's sake and mother's care,

Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you: I will spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Marc. But I will use the axe.

[Exeunt LUCIUS and MARCUS.]

Tit. Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both:

Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. [Aside] If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,

And never whilst I live deceive men so:—

But I'll deceive you in another sort,

And that you'll say ere half an hour pass.

[He cuts off TITUS'S hand.]

Re-enter LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Tit. Now stay your strife: what shall be its despatch'd.—

Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand:

Tell him it was a hand that warded him

From thousand dangers; bid him bury it;

More hath it mented,—that let it have.

As for my sons, say I account of them

As jewels purchas'd at an easy price;

And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Aar. I go, Andronicus: and for thy hand

Look by and by to have thy sons with thee:—

Their heads I mean. O, how this villany

[Aside.]

Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it?

Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,

Aaron will have his soul black like his face.

[Exit.]

Tit. O, here I lift this one hand up to heaven,

And bow this feeble ruin to the earth:

If any power pities wretched tears,

To that I call!—[To LAVINIA.] What, wilt thou kneel with me?

Do, then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear

our prayers;

Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,

And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds

When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Marc. O brother, speak with possibilities,

And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom?

Then be my passions bottomless with them.

Marc. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,

Then into hums could I bind my woes:

When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth o'erflow?

If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad,

Threatening the welkin with his big-swollen face?

And wilt thou have a reason for this coil?

I am the sea; hark, how her sighs do flow?

She is the weeping welkin, I the earth:

Then must my sea be moved with her sighs;

Then must my earth with her continual tears

Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd:

For why my bowels cannot hide her woes,

But like a drunkard must I vomit them.

Then give me leave; for losers will have leave

To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger, with two heads and a hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid

For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor.

Here are the heads of thy two noble sons;

And here's thy hand, in scorn, to thee sent back,—

Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd:

That woe is me to think upon thy woes,

More than remembrance of my father's death.

[Exit.]

Marc. Now let hot Ætna cool in Sicily,

And be my heart an ever-burning hell!

These miseries are more than may be borne.

To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal;

But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound,

And yet detested life not shrink thereat?

That ever death should let life bear his name,

Where life hath no more interest but to breathe!

[LAVINIA kisses him.]

Marc. Alas, poor heart, that kiss is comfortless

As frozen water to a starved snake. [end?]

Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an

Marc. Now, farewell, flattery: die, Andronicus;

[heads,]

Thou dost not slumber: see thy two sons'

Thy warlike hand, thy mangled daughter here;

Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight

Struck pale and bloodless; and thy brother, I,

Even like a stony image, cold and numb.

Ah! now no more will I control thy griefs;

Rent off thy silver hair, thy other hand

Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal

sight

The closing up of our most wretched eyes:

Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha! [this hour.]

Marc. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed:

Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,

And would usurp upon my watery eyes,

And make them blind with tributary tears:

Then which way shall I find revenge's cave?

For these two heads do seem to speak to me,

And threaten me I shall never come to bliss

Till all these mischiefs be return'd again

Even in their throats that have committed them

Come, let me see what task I have to do.—

You heavy people circle me about,

That I may turn me to each one of you,

And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.—

The vow is made.—Come, brother, take a

head;

And in this hand the other will I bear.

Lavinia, thou shalt be employ'd in these things;

Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth.

As for thee, boy, go, get thee from my sight;

Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay:

Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there:

And if you love me, as I think you do,

Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exeunt TITUS, MARCUS, and LAVINIA.

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father,—

The weofull'st man that ever liv'd in Rome:
Farewell, proud Rome; till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life:
Farewell, Lavinia, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, would thou wert as thou 'tfore hast been!
But now nor Lucius nor Lavinia lives
But in oblivion and hateful griefs.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs,
And make proud Saturnine and his empress
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine. [Exit.

SCENE II.—ROME. A Room in TITUS'S House.
A Banquet set out.

Enter TITUS, MARCUS, LAVINIA, and YOUNG LUCIUS, a boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit: and look you eat no more Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revenge these bitter woes of ours.
MARCUS, unknot that sorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I thump it down.—
Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs!

[To LAVINIA.
When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl; kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole,
That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall
May run into that sink, and, soaking in,
Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Marc. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already?

Why, MARCUS, no man should be mad but I,
What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands;—

To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er
How Troy was burnt and he made miserable?
O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands,
Lest we remember still that we have none.—
Fie, fie, how frantically I square my talk,—
As if we should forget we had no hands,
If MARCUS did not name the word of hands!—
Come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this.—
Here is no drink! Hark, MARCUS, what she says;—

I can interpret all her martyr'd signs;—
She says she drinks no other drink but tears,
Brew'd with her sorrow, mesh'd upon her cheeks:—

Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought;
In thy dumb action will I be as perfect
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thou shalt not sign, nor hold thy stumps to heaven,

Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of these will wrest an alphabet, [ing.
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.

Y. Luc. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:

Make my aunt merry with some pleasing tale.
Marc. Alas, the tender boy, in passion mov'd,
Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tit. Peace, tender sapling; thou art made of tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

[MARCUS strikes the dish with a knife.
What dost thou strike at, MARCUS, with thy knife?

Marc. At that that I have kill'd, my lord,— a fly.

Tit. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'st my heart;

Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:
A deed of death done on the innocent
Becomes not Titus' brother: get thee gone;
I see thou art not for my company.

Marc. Alas, my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Tit. But how if that fly had a father and mother?

How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamenting doings in the air!
Poor harmless fly,

That with his pretty buzzing melody
Came here to make us merry! and thou hast kill'd him. [favour'd fly.

Marc. Pardon me, sir; 'twas a black ill-
Like to the empress' Moor; therefore I kill'd him.

Tit. O, O, O.
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him
Flattering myself as if it were the Moor
Come hither purposely to poison me.—
There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.—
Ah, surrah!

Yet I do think we are not brought so low
But that between us we can kill a fly
That comes in likeness of a coal-black Moor.

Marc. Alas, poor man! grief has so wrought on him,

He takes false shadows for true substances. [Exit.
Tit. Come, take away.—Lavinia, go with me:
I'll to thy closet; and go read with thee
Sad stories chanced in the times of old.—
Come, boy, and go with me: thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read when mine begins to dazzle.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—ROME. Before TITUS'S House.

Enter TITUS and MARCUS. Then enter YOUNG LUCIUS running, with books under his arm, and LAVINIA running after him.

Y. Luc. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia
Follows me everywhere, I know not why.—

Good Uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes!
Alas, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Marc. Stand by me, Lucius: do not fear thine aunt. [harm.]

Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee
Y. Luc. Ay, when my father was in Rome
she did. [signs?]

Marc. What means my niece Lavinia by these

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius: somewhat doth she mean;—

See, Lucius, see how much she makes of thee:
Somewhether would she have thee go with her.
Ah, boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her sons than she hath read to thee
Sweet poetry and Tully's Orator

Marc. Canst thou not guess wherefore she phes thee thus? [guess,

Y. Luc. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I
Unless some fit or frenzy do possess her:
For I have heard my grandsire say full oft
Extremty of griefs would make men mad;
And I have read that Hecuba of Troy Ran mad through sorrow: that made me to fear;

Although, my lord, I know my noble aunt
Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did,
And would not, but in fury, fright my youth:
Which made me down to throw my books, and
fly,—

Causeless, perhaps: but pardon me, sweet aunt:
And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go,
I will most willingly attend your ladyship.

Marc. Lucius, I will. +

[LAVINIA turns over with her stumps the books which LUCIUS has let fall.

Tit. How now, Lavinia!—Marcus, what means this?

Some book there is that she desires to see.
Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy.—
But thou art deeper read and better skill'd:
Come, and take choice of all my library,
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
Reveal the damn'd contriver of this deed.—
Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus?

Marc. I think she means that there was more than one

Confederate in the fact;—ay, more there was,
Or else to heaven she heaves them for revenge.

Tit. Lucius, what book is that she tosseth so?

Y. Luc. Grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphosis;

My mother gave it me.

Marc. For love of her that's gone,
Perhaps she cull'd it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see how busily she turns the leaves!
Help her:

What would she find?—Lavinia, shall I read?
This is the tragic tale of Phlomele,
And treats of Tereus' treason and his rape;
And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy.

Marc. See, brother, see; note how she quotes the leaves.

Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet girl,

Ravish'd, and wrong'd, as Phlomele was,
Forc'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?—

See, see!—

Ay, such a place there is where we did hunt.—
O, had we never, never hunted there!—

Pattern'd by that the poet here describes,
By nature made for murders and for rapes.

Marc. O, why should nature build so foul a den,

Unless the gods delight in tragedies?

Tit. Give signs, sweet girl,—for here are none but friends,—

What Roman lord it was durst do the deed:

Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,
That left the camp to sin in Lucrece' bed?

Marc. Sit down, sweet niece:—brother, sit down by me.—

Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,

Inspire me, that I may thus treason find!—

My lord, look here:—look here, Lavinia:

This sandy plot is plain; guide, if thou canst,

This after me, when I have wnt my name

Without the help of any hand at all.

[He writes his name with his staff, guiding it with his feet and mouth.

Curs'd be the heart that forc'd us to this shift!— [last

Write thou, good mece; and here display at
What God will have discover'd for revenge:

Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows
plain,

That we may know the traitors and the truth!

[*She takes the staff in her mouth, guides
it with her stumps, and writes.*

Tit. O, do ye read, my lord, what she hath writ?

Stuprum—Chiron—Demetrius. [Tamora

Marc. What, what!—the lustful sons of Performers of this heinous, bloody deed?

Tit. Magni Dominator poli,

Tam lentus audis scelera? tam lentus vides?

Marc. O, calm thee, gentle lord; although
I know

There is enough written upon this earth
To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts,
And arm the minds of infants to exclams,
My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia, kneel;
And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's
hope;

And swear with me,—as, with the woeful fere
And father of that chaste dishonour'd dame,

Lord Junius Brutus sware for Lucrece' rape,—
That we will prosecute, by good advice,

Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.

Tit. 'Tis sure enough, an you knew how.

But if you hunt these bear-whelps, then beware:
The dam will wake; and if she wind you once,

She's with the lion deeply still in league,
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back,

And when he sleeps will she do what she list.
You are a young huntsman, Marcus; let it
alone;

And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words,

And lay it by: the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Sybil's leaves, abroad, [you?

And where's your lesson then?—Boy, what say
Y. Luc. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,

Their mother's bedchamber should not be safe
For these bad-bondmen to the yoke of Rome.

Marc. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath full oft

For his ungrateful country done the like.

Y. Luc. And, uncle, so will I, an if I live.

Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury; Lucius, I'll fit thee; and withal, my boy, shalt carry from me to the empress' sons Presents that I intend to send them both: Come, come; thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou not?

Y. Luc. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms,

Tit. No, boy, not so; I'll teach thee another course.—

Lavinia, come.—Marcus, look to my house: Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court; Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we'll be waited on.

[Exeunt TIT., LAV., and Y. LUC.

Marc. O heavens, can you hear a good man groan,

And not relent, or not compassion him? Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy, That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart Than foemen's marks upon his batter'd shield; But yet so just that he will not revenge:— Revenge, ye heavens, for old Andronicus!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—ROME. A Room in the Palace.

Enter AARON, DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, at one door; at another door, YOUNG LUCIUS and an Attendant, with a bundle of weapons, and verses writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius, here's the son of Lucius; He hath some message to deliver us.

Aar. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandfather.

Y. Luc. My lords, with all the humbleness I greet your honours from Andronicus,— And pray the Roman gods confound you both!

[Aside.

Dem. Gramercy, lovely Lucius; what's the news?

Boy [Aside.] That you are both decipher'd, that's the news, [you, For villains mark'd with rape.—May it please My grandsire, well-advis'd, hath sent by me The goodliest weapons of his armoury To gratify your honourable youth, The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say; And so I do, and with his gifts present Your lordships, that whenever you have need You may be armed and appointed well: And so I leave you both,—[aside] like bloody villains.

[Exeunt Y. LUC. and Attendant.

Dem. What's here? A scroll; and written round about?

Let's see:—

[Reads.] Integer vitæ, scelerisque furus, Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arcu.

Chi. O, 'tis a verse in Horace; I know it well:

I read it in grammar long ago.

Aar. Ay, just,—a verse in Horace,—right, you have it.—

Now, what a thing it is to be an ass! [Aside. Here's no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt; [lines, And sends them weapons wrapp'd about with That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick.

But were our witty empress well a-foot, She would applaud Andronicus' conceit. But let her rest in her unrest awhile.— And now, young lords, was't not a happy star Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so, Captives, to be advanced to this height? It did me good before the palace gate To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Dem. But me more good to see so great a lord

Basely insinuate and send us gifts.

Aar. Had he not reason, Lord Demetrius?

Did you not use his daughter very friendly?

Dem. I would we had a thousand Roman dames

At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.
